It's sweeping the Country

To win the record number of bookings on a serial, "THE LION'S CLAWS" has to possess one essential virtue. It has to be there "with the goods." That "THE LION'S CLAWS" is sweeping the country is most strikingly indicated by the records on the booking ledgers. That's where the figures show whether a serial is there or not. Hundreds of careful Exhibitors have chosen "THE LION'S CLAWS" because of the star, MARIE WALCAMP—the story—direction and thrilling action. Why haven't you booked it as yet? Your Exchange will project it for you. Also see the big Ad. Campaign Book with all the helps—THEN BOOK.

Seven Vital Questions Answered For Exhibitors By Exhibitors

Q. 1—IS HODKINSON-PARALTA SERVICE PROFITABLE?

Answered by Charles C. Perry, Strand Theatre, Milwaukee

"We did capacity business at every performance during the entire three days of 'A Man's Man.' They came so strong on the third night that it was necessary to run an extra show, and even then we turned people away from the box office."

Q. 2—IS THE QUALITY CONSISTENT?

Answered by Oliver Whaley, Grand Theatre, Bemidji, Minn.

"All the subjects are good. In our experience we cannot recall receiving, so generally, favorable comment from so large a percentage of patrons as we had from those seeing 'A Man's Man,' 'Madam Who' and 'A Turn of the Card.'"

Q. 3—IS IT WORTHY OF LONGER THAN USUAL RUNS?

Answered by O. Ginns, Queen Theatre, Wilmington, Del.

"These are pictures that measure up to the finest masterpieces, and it is a pleasure to commend their productions worthy of a long run."

Q. 4—WILL IT SATISFY PEOPLE WHO ARE LOOKING FOR THE BEST IN PICTURES?

Answered by W. H. Clune, Auditorium, Los Angeles

"Criticism in the six daily newspapers of Los Angeles actually graded 'A Man's Man 100%. Unanimously they complimented everything connected with the picture; especially the fine, clean work of Mr. Kerrigan, Miss Loise Wilson and Miss Ida Lewis; the devotion to details in the settings, the practically faultless direction, superb photography, and the excellence of Mr. Kyne's story as adapted for the picture. At Clune's Auditorium this seven-reel production pleased all who attended. Praise was unstinted. I consider 'A Man's Man' exceptionally acceptable to the public."

Q. 5—HOW DOES HODKINSON-PARALTA SERVICE COMPARE WITH OTHER HIGH CLASS PRODUCT?

Answered by John F. Cooney, Union Square, Pittsfield, Mass.

"As I am running only high class features, namely, Select, Greater Vitagraph, Artcraft, and Paramount, you can readily see that Paralta, to score in this company must be in Class 1-A, which it certainly is."

Q. 6—ARE THE STORIES CLEAN? IS NOT THE ACTION PADDED TO MAKE SEVEN REELS?

Answered by H. Bluechel, Lyric Theatre, Norfolk, Neb.

"One thing in particular that appealed to me in 'A Man's Man' was the elimination of all padding, making the story move along so that there was something doing all the time. And it is clean all the way through, which is a big factor in causing favorable comment from a certain class of patrons."

Q. 7—CAN I GET HODKINSON-PARALTA SERVICE AT A REASONABLE PRICE?

Answered by Alton Crosby, Opera House, Willmar, Minn.

"If you keep future issues up to the grade established and continue to give exhibitors the fair deal inaugurated (as indicated by my contract with you) every exhibitor ought to be for you."

YOU MAY NOW BOOK PATHÉ FEATURES ON EITHER THE SELECTIVE SERVICE (OPEN BOOKING) OR THE PROGRAM PLAN: TAKE YOUR CHOICE!

Why the Selective Service Plan Appeals To The First Run Exhibitor

¶ He may pick the pictures his patrons want;
He may, by selecting his features, reduce his "poor days" to a minimum;

¶ He doesn't have to buy a "pig in a poke," for program booking is booking blindly. A first run house cannot afford to book blindly. A picture which may jam a competitor's house may be a frost in his;

¶ By the selective service plan an exhibitor is the judge of what his patrons should have. He may book only those pictures on which he knows he can make money;

¶ A family trade house must be very careful as to the kind of pictures it runs. Under the selective service plan an exhibitor can keep out the pictures which only hurt his trade but which he must take under the program plan.

Pathé

Why the Program Plan Is The Best For The Smaller Houses

¶ The Program plan is cheaper; it is obvious that a better price can be made on twenty-six features on one contract than on the same twenty-six sold individually;

¶ The small town exhibitor is often too far away from the exchange centre of his district to select his features personally. He has well justified confidence in the Pathé branch manager and salesmen and knows they know his requirements. Thus he is saved the time and expense of frequent visits to the exchange; ¶ Three out of four of the Pathé features have been winners for him. He has made money on three and broken even on the four. He may well be satisfied with such a consistent showing and he is!

¶ His patrons are perfectly satisfied with the Pathé features and have told him so. And those features were selected for him by the Pathé branch manager and the salesman serving him. Why should he change the system which is making money for him?

THE SELECTIVE SERVICE PLAN IS THE BEST FOR ONE HOUSE, THE PROGRAM PLAN FOR ANOTHER. AGAIN WE SAY—TAKE YOUR PICK!

Ambassador James W. Gerards

MY FOUR YEARS IN GERMANY

The Truth—
Dramatically told!

Shows what Gerard saw in Berlin

Speaking at the Knickerbocker the night the film opened its long New York run, Ambassador Gerard said:

"This film will do more toward showing the people of this country why we are fighting Germany than anything that has yet been said or written."

Our Government, the Press, Patriotic bodies are boosting the Picture and the Exhibitors who run it.

Positively the biggest thing ever offered American exhibitors.

Pictures Make Deep Impression

Officials of the Liberty Loan Committee said last night that the meeting held at the Central High School Saturday evening under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce had been a source of renewed interest in the loan. Moving pictures founded upon the book of James W. Gerard were shown upon the screen, giving actual happenings in Germany and Belgium while Mr. Gerard was in those countries. An audience of 2,500 packed the auditorium of the school, included being members of both houses of Congress.

"Show these pictures to the American people," said a senator, "and you will wipe Germanism from the earth."

Newspapers the Country over have the word from Washington to boost it for its patriotic value.

This is the First time the Circle ever raised its prices.

Gentlemen:-

We are, as you know, using Power's Model 6B machine equipped with a 5" No. 1 Gundlach Manhattan Lens. We have in use on this machine the latest type 30 Amp. - 25 Volt - 750 Watt Edison Mazda Type C Lamp. In connection with this lamp we are using a 110 volt - 60 cycle thru type "1" Fort Wayne Compensarc.

We show a 9 x 12 picture at a distance of 74 ft. on a curtain of our own design, which is an imitation of Minusa Fibre Screen.

Our show has been in operation for 60 days today and we burned out our first lamp yesterday. We find we get a fine light at 29 Amps. This one lamp has run us 265 actual burning hours.

Our light bill for last month was only $24.10 including the operation of 9 ceiling fans and 1200 watts of lighting. Being as we have to pay 10¢ per K.W. for current we feel this is an exceptional low bill and we give all the credit to the Machine lamp.

In fact we are so thoroughly pleased with this new lamp we feel we would be doing you a grave injustice if we did not write and tell you about it. No Exhibitor that wants to make money can afford to be without this long hoped for achievement in light projection.

We are absolutely with you on this light and want you to use this letter in any way that you may see fit, we are,

Yours very truly,
OVER THE TOP THEATRE,

By G. R. Wimbish. Mgr.

Wherein King Solomon Setteth an Exhibitor Right

NAY, my Zuleika, I have high hopes for the Movies Yea, the Movies be here to stay and bring happy days.

Knockers there be who exclaim, "What careth Solomon for the Little Guy? He hath a thousand wives who fill his picture show every day."

Yea, my wives do attend the Solomon Theatre with great regularity. But woe is me for the bill at the end of the moon; 'tis a sorrow to the King.

But yesternoon did come to my palace the Son of Beelzebub, who is the Son of Hardluck, the Son of Folly, who is the Son of Highprices.

And lo, he did prostrate himself and cry aloud, "Woe is me, O King, I am afflicted with a great sorrow and do seek thy counsel. The people no longer come to my Movie Show. I show good pictures and have a goodly theatre. Yet is mine business sorely depressed, and the cashier doth put sackcloth and ashes on his head and his groans do keep the wife awake nights cussing a blue streak."

"Now, O thou Son of Folly, hast thou looked into thy business? Dost thou pay the reel tax?"

"Yea," moaned the afflicted one.

"And, O Son of Balaam's Ass, dost thou pay high prices for pictures because they have stars?"

"Yea," moaned the asinine one.

"And dost thou bid against thy neighbor for the open booking picture which the wise promoter doth boost in price?"

"Yea," moaned the witless one.

"And dost thou deal with those who know not the fair and square, open and above-board policy?"

"Yea," moaned the fallacious one.

"Now, wherefore, O Son of Folly, dost thou not mend thy ways and look to thy vine and fig-tree? Why dost thou not turn to TRIANGLE and thus enable thy harem to blossom out in styles that will knock the dames of thy competitor's harem dead?"

Whereupon the enlightened one did make a glad cry of exaltation and did sing the praises of the King and did seek him out a TRIANGLE Exchange.

Yea, Wisdom is the source of all happiness, and TRIANGLE the source of many an exhibitor's success.

"Do you mean Modern Theatre Construction by Kinsila, or Motion Picture Handbook for Managers and Operators by Richardson? We have them both on hand and can send them at once."

"Better send me a copy of each, I will need them, and will send the check to-day."

"Say, getting back to that information you sent me, how do you get all that?"

"Why, we keep records here in the office, together with catalogues of goods made by our advertisers, and when some one in the trade needs certain information we give it to them."

"That's service, isn't it?"

"You bet."

"Well, when I get my new house built will you run a picture of it?"

Facts and Comments

FRED B. WARREN of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has just returned from an extended trip through the west and brings with him a roseate view of business conditions, especially as regards the motion picture business. Mr. Warren is no casual, untrained observer with optimistic tendencies, but a hard-headed business man who knows the meaning of surface indications and is sufficiently keen to penetrate to the kernel. He says that business is good in all picture theaters and gives reasons that are unmistakable. Consequently his statements will hardly be questioned. The article in question will be found elsewhere in this issue.

DURING the past week the members of the First National Exhibitors Circuit have been in New York attending the first annual meeting of that organization. According to reports the business to be transacted has been disposed of without friction and to the satisfaction of all concerned. One important event was the selection of Robert Lieber of Indianapolis for the office of president, made vacant by the resignation of S. L. Rothapfel. Mr. Lieber is especially fitted for the position to which he was elected. Since films were first made for "movie" shows he has been in the picture business and is highly qualified by experience for his executive duties. He is also a business man of the highest integrity and in whom the greatest confidence may be reposed. We congratulate the members of the First National upon their choice of executives.

THE attention of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has been called to a recent move on the part of the Government, through the Committee of Public Information, to engage in the moving picture business in a way that is disturbing to the established concerns now engaged in making and distributing pictures. The circumstances, as explained to us, are these: The Government, which has heretofore given such news pictures as have been taken by cameramen under its employ or direction to the several firms issuing news weeklies, has decided, through the newly instituted Division of Films of the Committee of Public Information, to secure some revenue from its moving picture product sufficient to cover the overhead, but mainly to get before the public the sort of information the Government wants disseminated.

Fear has been expressed by some of the distributors that the Government is planning to establish its own system of distribution and thus supersede the regular commercial channels. This, the distributors say, is unfair competition, especially in view of the gratuitous services the motion picture people generally have given the Government.

When the Government first considered the project, C. S. Hart, who is in charge of the Division of Films, discussed it with the editor of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, seeking advice as to the best method to adopt. He was advised at that time to make use of the regular machinery of distribution established by the trade as the best and simplest means of accomplishing the purpose he desired. Since then we have heard nothing that would lead us to believe he intended to do anything else. In fact, we have it in an unofficial way that such is the plan upon which he intends to work. This being the case we cannot see that the distributors have any cause for alarm. From our present knowledge of the matter we believe that Mr. Hart will show every disposition to work in harmony with the established distributing companies and that it is the duty of the distributors to co-operate with him in this matter to the fullest extent.

THERE is a large measure of credit due Marcus Loew for the energetic and very efficient manner in which he has stirred the motion picture industry in New York to action on the Third Liberty Loan. Acting upon the request of the Liberty Loan Committee Mr. Loew called a meeting of the trade at the New York roof on Wednesday, April 17, with the result that $700,000 was subscribed for Liberty Bonds and an organization effected to carry on the work during the continuance of the drive. The plan now is to hold daily meetings at the same place. This is splendid work and a credit to the patriotism of Mr. Loew.

Truth Pleasantly Told

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

REASON with entertainment instead of storming from the pulpit. According to Bernard Shaw, our religions take themselves too seriously to convince, much less convert, apparently unaware of the comedy in their widely-differing conventions. "This Christian Church," he says, "founded gaily with a pun, has been so largely corrupted with rank satanism that it has become the church where you must not laugh, and so it is giving away to that older and greater church where the oftener you laugh the better, because by laughter only can you destroy evil without malice and replace it with good-fellowship."

What he says of the stage play may well apply to moving pictures.

They reach a larger audience, one entirely receptive to the progressive spirit, and are a medium eminently suited to telling the truth agreeably. They can be made a powerful instrument for enlightenment as soon as we stop groping for the unknown quantity, what people are supposed to want, and strike out straight for their sane convictions. We really heighten their enjoyment of a presentation by presenting something definite, such as Maeterlinck has in "The Blue Bird." We are grouping for the unknown quantity by serving our stuff, au gratin, principally seasoned with cheese.

Why should we look to non-thinkers for ideas?

Why lock out the live wires of our generation? Even men like Mark Twain, who have attained a world audience while still in the land of the living, who have enriched our thoughts in a good-humored way, would find studios closed to them unless they consented to subordinate all definite purpose in their stories to the exactions of the story interpreters. Even Mark Twain would be asked to build a wobbly old vehicle for stellar conveyance at bargain prices, or, declining to go into the carriage business, be politely informed that his stories did not meet "requirements."

What is entertaining about inanity?

Unless it be farce, it is far from interesting, still more remote from good taste, and no amount of technical skill can enable it to escape merciless criticism from audiences of intelligence. What is a vehicle, as a rule, but a crass inanity, conveying nothing but the star it exploits? It repeats his gestures, copies his tricks, merely, putting him on display, to dwell in an unreal stageland of unreal people midst an atmosphere which contains no light on what is going on every day in common experience.

"It is a clockwork mouse which will kill the cat who swallows it in good faith."

The most amazing thing about the supposedly-sophisticated, in newspaperdom, quite as well as in the studios, is an inability to grasp the value of truth pleasantly told in a drama. While the common people, from pit to dome, quickly recognized the charm of Shaw's plays, reviewers worked long and hard to place the secret of his success. He paid the usual penalty of being brilliantly witty. He was supposed to be merely frivolous. It was finally admitted that he let in a vigorous current of new ideas on the English drama, together with some well-authenticated old ones injected with refreshing vitality. He discovered our sorest need, ideas, and furnished them while secretly laughing at us.

"His the ironic laughter at a demented world."

And why not? We laugh at ourselves as we are portrayed in comedy, only we do not publish that fact. Why should not the dramatist laugh at us and with us? We mortals are but fools, though not particularly inclined to admit it as individuals. We are amused at our own foolishness so long as it is ascribed to some other fellow. When the truth is pleasantly told about him, we recognize it easily because it unmasks what we have glimpsed in ourselves.

The idol of self is made of ordinary mud.

You have your own little secret idol of yourself, and you can worship it as long as you don't get noisy, but when you expect others to kneel at that shrine, you are furnishing material for a tragi-comedy, with the "tragi" part on your side of the hyphen. The gentleman who looks down on you Sunday from a pulpit may have told you the same thing in more elegant terms, and correspondingly ambiguous ones, but he fails just as the doctor does, who advises you not to smoke and right after asks you for a cigarette. You may have your faults, but you are as good as he is, and example counts more than precept.

The pictured story is not disagreeably edifying.

It is not so directly personal. Your own particular sins are not pointed out solemnly, until you feel that to enjoy yourself is to be a horrible example. So exquisitely adaptable is your nature that you may be pursuing a maiden just as the villain does and yet you can swell with righteous indignation over the way he is treating the poor girl. In other words, the play lets you down easy. It does not jar your descent from lofty self-admiration. It very gently suggests that you quit paying rent for that conscience you put in cold storage last season.

We are guilty partners in a defective society.

We are full of faults as moral beings and the structure we have built up to regulate ourselves is almost as far from perfect as we are ourselves, but the truth about it need not be unpleasantly set forth. It can actually please while showing us up for what we are. We can not only picture to those unobservant crowds for whom experience means little or nothing the life that is, but we go a step beyond the actual into fields of new beauty and higher interest, into imaginary realms, leading morals and manners instead of following them, as some of the book-struck producers of today are in the habit of doing.

There is general revolt against the tyranny of outworn custom.

Nietzsche says there is not a single thought exalted and divinely transfigured in days gone by which modern science has not proved utterly false. However as this may be, there is no doubt that we lose reverence for frazzled old ideals as we advance in intelligence. Nearly all the ancient social petrifications have been shattered so badly by healthy cynicism that they can never be restored. Their decay is as beyond remedy as natal idiocy. Only nature and the emotions survive the buried past.

Any truth today, in order to be one, must make good.

We are sanely practical about that. Bare assertion does not go on the screen any more than it does in argument, if one may judge from the cold and unresponsive way audiences receive illogical plays. On crowd psychology we must depend for a rational comprehension of the secrets of story appeal. Those audiences are also developing a healthy cynicism about the exceptional, the arbitrary and the coincidental, all drawn from ancient sanctuaries of unreality. Such picture plays are too childishly superficial for grown-up minds. Going down into the well where truth is said to be hid, perhaps we may discover that the secret of holding audience interest lies in not showing what has been observed so much as what has been lived through. We can only see events from the outside. Hence when we relate what we have observed or heard about, the audience is unaffected. The thing to do is to make people live through what seems to be an actual experience. Avoid shocking common sense with stale absurdities; be sincere, and make truth felt.

Call The Game

By Edward Weitzel.

IT is time the stage and the screen stopped throwing spitballs at each other. All the adherents of the two factions are not engaged in the undignified sport. In fact, but a small portion of both parties are taking part in the pastime and they are doing so because of willful prejudice or from having neglected to study the other fellow's game. If Mr. Metcalfe of Life, Haywood Broun of the New York Tribune and Lawrence Reamer of the New York Sun choose to write articles exposing their failure to grasp the merits of the moving picture drama, that is not a good and sufficient reason why anyone connected with the screen should rush into print with articles of a like nature directed against the stage. There is not a virtue or a vice belonging to one medium of expression that is not offset by a corresponding virtue or a corresponding vice in the other. The normal human being will find quite as much beneficial mental stimulation in Augustus Thomas' stage play, "The Copperhead," as in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World." Both teach devotion to lofty ideals, and the spoken word is able to bring the soul of Abraham Lincoln to life just as impressively as the pictured story re-enacts the heroism and the splendid courage of the men in the great war. We all need the lessons taught by both arts. Mutual respect, not petty squabbling, should be the attitude of the spitball throwers on either side of the fence.

Variety and Its Relation to Spice.

Within the past year attention has been called to the fact that the stage is now averaging one play of serious purpose to ten of its lighter forms of entertainment. The screen, on the contrary, has produced more dramas than comedies. notwithstanding that the three biggest drawing cards in the film business are Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks. Melodrama, once an important adjunct to the stage, is now to be found practically only on the screen. When of good quality, it is well patronized. That is as it should be. Melodrama has its place in the amusement world. Highbrow plays with their strong moral uplift are necessary to our well-being, but no sensible person wants to be preached at all the time, no matter how eloquent the preacher. Melodrama, with its spotless hero and its equally spotless villain: one all white virtue and the other all black villainy, can furnish many worthy men and women with harmless amusement. It also has the ability to teach a surprising number of people the difference between right and wrong more quickly by using its kindergarten method than by showing them humanity in its true and more complex phases.

The spice that variety lends to life is doubly essential at the present time. It is equally as senseless to throw things at the stage for putting on clean but light entertainments that fill its theaters as it is to berate the screen for producing self-respect melodramas that give pleasure to its patrons. Quality, not kind, is the first point to be considered.

If there is one solid and immovable tradition in the amusement world it is the knowledge that no one knows what it is that makes the public, without warning, refuse a previously well relished form of entertainment, and show a decided preference for something that ninety-nine out of a hundred experienced managers would have been positive had no chance of success. One thing is certain people do not go to the theater from a sense of duty and consequently have not the slightest compunction in staying away when the mood strikes them. That is why it is well to give them as much variety as they will stand. If exhibitors insist on serving patrons, even their favorite relaxation, too often they will suddenly take a dislike to it.

A leaf from theatrical history is worth reading. It has been stated that the screen killed stage melodrama. It was dead before the photoplay was strong enough to be a rival to anything. The screen merely buried it. The disease that killed stage melodrama was satiety. A circuit of theaters that covered the country gave its patrons nothing but melodrama, season after season. One man wrote the major part of the plays. Audiences got so they knew what was going to happen before it took place on the stage. The thrill they had paid for was no longer to be obtained, so they stopped spending their money on that class of entertainment.

History has been known to repeat itself.

Something About Standards

By Robert C. McElravy.

A CRITIC of ability not long since, speaking generally of moving pictures, said: "The cost of production is great, and the product must please vast numbers of people. The only standards many of these have were created by the movies themselves, and new films must conform to those standards."

This, with its context, is one of the sweeping generalities of the derogatory sort with which moving pictures have been confronted for years. To say the least, it reveals a decided unfamiliarity with what the films have been and are successfully doing. It justifies repetition of a remark once made of another critic: "Few things are more painful than the nonsense which an exceedingly clever man may write about an art with which he has no real sympathy, to which he has ceased to give any serious thought."

To do full justice to moving pictures, it is first necessary to regard them with the seriousness they deserve. One must go to see the films with the expectation of being entertained, not with a determination to be bored. The attitude of mind is of first importance, and we cannot feel that the people who crowd moving picture houses, knowing from past experience that they are about to enjoy themselves, have any lower standards than one who goes in another frame of mind.

As a matter of fact, the greatest art of any kind is bound to please the masses, for it is created with the best interests of the common people at heart. The masses love Shakespeare and Dickens and Scott; they love Michael-Angelo, Millais and Corot; they loved Edmund Kean and Booth and Joe Jefferson. There is nothing "precious" in the attitude of the people as a whole. They seek and find the best, usually without having it pointed out to them. When the masses flock repeatedly to see great film entertainments, you may be sure the standard is right, both as to the people and the product.

When it comes to the matter of standards moving pictures constitute a separate form of art with their own resources and possibilities. They are not circumscribed by the limitations of time and space, as is the legitimate stage. They draw freely upon the world at large for atmosphere and settings. They compete successfully with the stage in every department except in the matter of the human voice. There is a lesson in this for the legitimate drama—where are the compelling voices of the stage today? Where are the successors to Modjeska, Kean, Salvini, Rachel and Booth? We still have Bernhardt and Forbes Robertson, but they are passing. It is hard to believe there are no successors for these great artists among the younger actors; but are the new aspirants being encouraged in the direction of true greatness?

The word "standard" as applied to any art is a doubtful one at best. It conveys the impression of a fixed pattern, or model, with which every new product must be measured up and compared. But there really are no such models in the art world, as past experience has proved. Anyone who succeeds in doing something new in any of the arts blazes his own trail in the wilderness. To follow established methods is simply to become an imitator, or adapter. Shakespeare violated repeatedly the three unities that had come down from the time of Aristotle—the unities of time, place and action. Rodin admired and assimilated the classic styles in sculpture, but disregarded them later for his own characteristic and thoroughly individual forms. Monet and Manet, who led the impressionistic school of painters, succeeded eventually in establishing new and revolutionary principles.

Why look for standards, when the whole experience of the world is that art is a constantly dissolving, kaleidoscopic thing? Only the dilettante, steeped in traditions and admiring accepted things which in themselves were once considered daring, hesitates in the presence of change. It is not so much standards we need in American art of all forms, as it is originality and what Theodore Roosevelt has called "practical, working ideals." We need to reflect, fearlessly and without apology, true hopes and aims of our nation. At the risk of getting our politics a little mixed, we would say that the war messages of President Wilson come nearer to expressing these aspirations than the artistic genius of the country has yet been permitted to do. But, as the late and unlamented Dr. Munyon used to say, "There is hope!"

Why should our critics hesitate to admit the value and accomplishments of moving pictures as an art form? The French, with their high artistic precedents, have long since recognized the films as pre-eminent in their field. They are patronized not only by the masses, but by the more educated people as well. You find the same attendants at the cinéma that you find at the Louvre or the Comedie Francaise. There is no aloofness or disposition to look down upon the screen as a medium of entertainment. The Paris Temps and other journals of distinction recognize the achievements of the cinéma and its powerful democratic appeal.

The French are a free people in an artistic sense; they respond with the simple delight of children to any form of real genius. In this respect their democracy is superior to our own. We have not yet learned, but are rapidly beginning to understand, that true art is the very soul of democracy, for it may be trusted to reflect the best interests of the people as a whole. A commercialized or perverted art weakens the moral fibre of a country beyond measure.

Moving pictures today exercise a broad, democratic sweep. With all their crudities, which are now disappearing, they have behind them a valuable and energizing impulse. Our American film output is measuring up with the best made in other countries and our producers should undoubtedly have greater encouragement from the critical press.

Sunday Option Is Not Dead

By Sam Spedon.

IT is bad enough to have a few zealots take a stand against Sunday motion pictures, because they might corrupt the morals of the masses, but when it comes to the opposition of political representatives who cater to prejudices and takes a stand against the wishes of the people, a majority of whom have put them in office, it is time for the people to take a stand in the future against all such office seekers.

It's a Sad, Sad Tale.

The Motion Picture Option bill which was introduced in the New York Legislature is the only fair solution of the Sunday question, leaving each municipality and township to exercise its will in the matter and determine by majority vote whether it should or should not permit the showing of the pictures on the first day of the week. The same kind of bill was introduced in Alabama and Texas. You probably have heard that the bill in New York State was sidetracked, notwithstanding it had been reported favorably by the Senate Codes Committee and it was kept on the general orders calendar and was still there when the Legislature adjourned.

The principal objectors to the bill were Senators Alfred J. Gilchrist of Brooklyn and George H. Whitney of Saratoga, who were, with the assistance of Senator Elon R. Brown, instrumental in keeping it shut up in general orders.

A Power for Good.

The screens of the motion picture theaters are ablaze with propaganda for the people (not for politicians) in the great struggle for the establishment of universal democracy. Let the good work go on! But do not lose sight of the power of the screen for the overthrow of those political demagogues, who would deprive the people of the proper exercise of their rights and liberty. At this very moment motion pictures are helping tear from the face of the Kaiser the "mask divine" that covers the face of a demon. When the stranglers of just legislation present themselves for election and approval, let the screens of the theaters by double exposure strip them of their saintly masquerades and demolish their self-adjusted halos.

Keep It Alive.

Sunday local option is only in abeyance. It is not a dead issue. It will be brought up again at the next session of the Legislature as a demand from the people, by the people and for the people. Invite an expression of your community and see that it gets what is good and right in the judgment of the majority. The question of Sunday motion pictures must be decided, sooner or later, on its merits.

"Movies" at the Authors' League

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN succession Channing Pollock, Rex Beach, Augustus Thomas and Daniel Frohman addressed the Authors' League at a dinner April 9 at a Broadway restaurant, with a view to reaching a better understanding between story writer and motion picture maker. It was a remarkable occasion in more than one respect. The four speakers bear names to conjure with; they are representative of older arts of expression, and all four of them have studied the new art from an inside point of view. Yet, in spite of their united effort to bring about a timely rapprochement of author and producer, it became obvious that the first three named were too strongly attached to the older sisters to care very much about that Cinderella of the family, the much-knocked "movie."

Mr. Pollock provided some sharp spurs for discussion with his brilliant wit and keen satire. Not always just and logical in his conclusions, and to that extent less entitled to credence, he is the man needed to put speed into the movement. He can offer more incentive to action in five minutes than a more careful man might in an hour, this without proving anything in particular, unless he proves too much. He can select from a published list of release captions of the lurid kind and raise a laugh, but he could do the same thing with titles from current story magazines without impairing confidence in literature. He may really feel indignant that the intellectuality of Conrad and Long has not been visualized, though it was ably set forth in a speech following his own that mentality is not to be expected of moving pictures at this stage of the game.

Channing Pollock appears to be so biased by personal experience in dealing with producers that he finds it difficult to speak without prejudice on any subject concerning moving pictures, but there percolates through much that he says a deep sincerity of purpose and a lot of wholesome truth. He has the common fault of regarding moving pictures as reflective. The art of printing is purely so, but the author's script is far from being a sacred thing with the producer of stage plays. The dramatist has to revise his work and himself several times before attaining successful appeal to his audience, and the scenario for visualization may even have less structural resemblance to the novel than has the drama. For the printed word of one and the uttered word of the other is substituted the psychology of a silent performer. In this chance there is quite naturally involved a specific story form and method of treatment.

The idea that moving pictures are, or should be, purely reflective seems most strongly planted in the minds of novelists in love with their own medium and revering notable performances in literature which have disclosed creative and constructive genius throughout the ages. This false impression is not so general among dramatists because of the readjustments in their work. Both are aware of a difference in artistic execution so far as their respective professions are concerned, but neither Mr. Pollock nor Mr. Beach seemed to think there was any such thing as technic in the screen story. They are gifted men in the way of imaginative conception, and their methods are so strongly individual that they are probably unconscious of the mechanical part of what they write. Then there is something very irritating about the word "technic"—it is "techy"—it arouses antagonism when applied to an art in its babyhood, but one has only to consider the difference in methods of presentation to realize that of manipulating scenes and characters, to say nothing of the audience effect.

In order to avoid a source of dispute, let us dispose of the word "technic" and substitute "craftsmanship," which, so far as technical skill of manipulation is concerned, means the same thing. There is a vast amount of hidden craftsmanship involved in holding the attention of an audience, while clearly visualizing the story strongly impressing its purposes and suiting characterization to the silent performers. To put it briefly, the novel may wander where it likes, even into delightful by-paths of philosophy, for it can be laid aside and taken up at will. The stage play accords two or three brief periods of mental relief from strain between the acts. But the screen presentation must hold unbroken interest from start to finish or fail of its purpose. The "unities" of Aristotle apply to it more decidedly than to other forms of expression, especially in one line of action, with as close adherence as possible to unities of time and place. There is a deeper raison-d'être for the scenario writer and the "continuity man" than is apparent at a glance.

In the absence of anything like enough original stories to meet requirements, producers have been compelled to resort to adaptations from novels and stage plays, but these do not contain enough story material, as brought to light by Rex Beach, to fill five reels. He might have put it less conservatively. They do not, as a rule, contain enough to fill three reels, the average not enough for two. Who is to supply material for the other reels? Who is to contrive new incidents and situations, to say nothing of attending to character development if not the scenario writer? To this is added a tremendous labor of reconstruction from old materials which he must sort out after they have been knocked apart. It is true that he has the framework of a story to build on, but it is "old stuff" in most cases and has to be revitalized and suited to constantly changing audience ideas of what the story should be. Very few contain the germs of immortality. They are good for a brief season and then fit only for the second-hand store or the junk pile.

Aside from a natural doubt on the part of a master of technic as to that of the screen story, the remarks of Rex Beach were so sane and sound that they would be a valuable contribution to general criticism of motion picture evolution. He spoke from the fullness of experience. He has proved that he can write a successful screen story, and he advocates that other authors should study visualization requirements more carefully so that they may write their own scenarios. This is good hard sense. The same constructive ability shown in writing novels and plays can be utilized intelligently by grasping a few essential principles. The average author offers too many interiors, forgetting that to set them up with studios renting for a hundred dollars a day adds destructively to the cost of production without contributing material to interest in the product.

Mr. Frohman offered some timely and very practical suggestions and delegated Whitman Bennett to amplify what he had said. Mr. Bennett took a clear and comprehensive view of the entire subject in his address, but neither he nor Mr. Frohman pointed out how the author is to obtain copyright on a story first shown on the screen. Mr. Thomas held the authors entranced by an address so beautiful in both sentiment and language that it seemed as though he was passing through a restricted flower garden of thought, culling at will what is forbidden to most of us, stirring within our hearts a secret envy of his power to extemporize in terms what we can only find by strenuous searching. The high honors he paid to language constituted an apotheosis, which to his auditors seemed to find its impersonation in himself. As to his doubts about any expression of mentality through the pictures under present circumstances, I shall reply in an editorial on that subject, together with comment on some possible results of this important meeting.

ADOLPH ZUKOR MOVING PICTURE DAY.

In spite of inclement weather Saturday, April 20, proved to be an unusually successful day at the Liberty theater on Fifth avenue, in front of the Public Library. This was Adolph Zukor Moving Picture Day, and was voted the best day of the Stage Women's War Relief drive for the Liberty Loan, the total subscriptions amounting to over $300,000. One hundred thousand dollars worth of bonds were purchased for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by Jesse L. Lasky, Arthur S. Friend and Emil Shauer; and in addition to this another $25,000 worth were bought by the office and studio employees of the company.

Unfortunately Adolph Zukor was called out of town at the last moment and was therefore unable to be present. Governor Whitman addressed the crowd shortly after noon and introduced Elsie Ferguson, who was followed later by other prominent picture stars, including Rita Jolivet, Billie Burke, Alice Brady, Mildred Manning, Marshall Neilan, Anita Loos, Edward Jose, Courtenay Foote, Thomas Meighan, Gertrude McCoy and Jack Pickford. William A. Brady made the closing address of the day.

JOHN BOWERS TAKES TO HIMSELF A BRIDE.

The first intimation the offices of the World Film had that John Bowers had taken to himself a bridge was when just prior to the leaving of June Elvidge and her supporting company, under the direction of Travers Vale, for North Carolina, to take the exterior for "The Echo Girl," he made application for a stateroom. Heretofore on out-of-town trips he had been content with a lower berth. Upon inquiry as to why he needed a stateroom he replied that in renewing his contract for two years with the World Film Corporation he had celebrated the event by marrying Rita Heller, a non-professional, who resided at 135th street and Riverside Drive.

FILM CLUB TO EAT ON MAY 1.

The F. I. L. M. Club of New York has postponed its monthly dinner to Wednesday, May 1. On this occasion it will give a genuine old-fashioned beefsteak dinner. Many of the prominent exhibitors have expressed their desire to attend, and May 1 is looked forward to as a red letter day for the F. I. L. M. Club.

BUY A THIRD LIBERTY LOAN BOND

Motion Picture Industry Boosting Bond Sale

Exhibitors and Players, Manufacturers and Distributors Combine to Aid the Government in Maintaining a Full Treasury

THE men and women of the motion picture industry are keeping up their work for the Third Liberty Loan, so effectively started on April 6. Exhibitors and players, manufacturers and distributors, are working together. In New York on April 17, at a meeting at Loew's Roof Garden, $700,000 was raised in a session lasting an hour. This was a preliminary meeting, to be followed by others at noon on every day of the week following that stirring get-together.

Throughout the eastern part of the country, Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks have attracted immense throngs, which have been exhorted to "Buy, buy, buy." In the west, William S. Hart has been performing similar public service. Other players who have been taking part in the campaign are Alice Brady, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Madge Kennedy, Emmy Wehlen, Marie Dressler and Marguerite Clark.

From all indications, when the record is completed, the industry will be among the leaders of the country's grouped workers for the Third Liberty Loan.

NEW YORK FILM MEN WAKE UP.

Marcus Loew Calls on Exhibitors to Put Shoulder to Liberty Loan Wheel—Noontide Meetings at Loew's Roof Garden Begin Monday, April 22.

MARCUS LOEW as a leading exhibitor of New York City and on behalf of the National Liberty Loan Committee called a meeting of exhibitors and producers at Loew's Roof Garden on Wednesday, April 17, at noon, more effectively to organize the whole motion picture business to aid the Third Liberty Loan. Over a hundred were present, although the morning newspapers had announced the meeting as for the evening after the shows.

The Liberty Loan Committee desires to have all the theaters in the country set aside the last week of the present loan drive as Patriotism Week and to make all that week a special effort to sell bonds and still more bonds. The meeting was primarily to get this movement under way. Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was chosen chairman of a Committee on Organization with power to choose any to serve with him he pleased. Rita Jolivet, who was present, and who made an eloquent and stirring address, was chosen as chairwoman of a committee to issue an appeal to the screen players all over the country to subscribe to the Loan. David Wark Griffith was chosen as chairman of a committee to waken the directors to the same duty. Arrangements were made to hold daily meetings at Loew's Roof Garden at noon beginning with Monday, April 22. Mr. Loew promised everything would be done to make the meetings attractive. The trade papers were asked to lend the aid of their encouragement and give publicity to the movement. A promise of full co-operation was given by three papers, including the Moving Picture World, who had representatives present.

Marcus Loew explained the object of the meeting and introduced as the first speaker a Four-Minute man, Dr. Hone. In the opening part of his appeal this man told of a terrible yet deeply beautiful experience of a friend of his who, walking along behind the trenches occupied by the American troops, came on the dead body of a young man whom he had known in New York. He had gone out in the vigor of his gallant manhood and his friend came upon him lying on the ground. There was a bullet hole in his forehead and the blood was trickling through it. As he stood looking down at him this thought came to him like words whispered in his heart: "This is my body that was broken for you." From this he went on to tell of the greatness of the need and finally asked how at this time we could keep our money and our self-respect, too.

He was followed by National Chairman William A. Brady, who called on the moving picture business for its own good to bend every effort to making a worthy showing. He said that the moving picture business has given a greater service to the cause than any other industry in the country and that the President had recognized it. The dignity of this service has added to our prestige in the community during the past year marvelously and he warned us that we cannot afford to lie down on our laurels. He said that it was not only important to make a splendid showing, but it was as necessary to keep a clear record of all that we do. He called on the exhibitors, the players, the producers and everybody in the business both to give and to get others to give.

Among those prominent in the business recognized among those present were William A. Brady, national chairman of the Motion Picture Section of the Bureau of Information; Sydney S. Cohen, New York State president of the Exhibitors' League; Sam Berman, secretary of the State League; Jesse L. Lasky and Arthur Friend, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company; L. J. Selznick, Select Pictures; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Company; Marcus Loew, Harry Rapf, P. A. Parsons, representing Paul Brunet of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and many others, including a number of the Loew theater managers and executive officers. Among the leading exhibitors was William Brandt of the New Albany and Carlton theaters in Brooklyn. The meeting lasted an hour and $700,000 was subscribed by those present in large amount and in small.

William A. Brady led off with a subscription for $50,000 and one for his daughter, Alice Brady, for $30,000. This was followed by a subscription from the Universal of $100,000 and by Carl Laemmle, its president, of $15,000; L. J. Selznick, $50,000; Jesse L. Lasky, $50,000; Marcus Loew, $50,000; Fatty Arbuckle, $50,000; the managers of Loew's theaters, $72,000; Nicholas M. Scheneck, $5,000; Sydney S. Cohen, $10,000; Arthur S. Boston Misses Little Mary.

Mary Pickford, the most beloved of them all in New England, was secured by the New England Liberty Loan Committee to address three big Liberty Loan rallies in Boston on April 17. A score or more of newspaper men and women, photographers and a crowd of over 500 people were at South Station at 6:30 in the morning to welcome her. She did not come. For some hours the Liberty Loan committee literally burned up the wires, locating Miss Pickford in New York, where she had been unavoidably detained through two civil suits in the New York courts from which she could not get excused.

She was to speak at a big rally on Boston Common at noon, a rally at Fenway Park in the afternoon and at Mechanics Building and Tremont Temple in the evening. At all these places, through the failure of the public to get notice that she was not to appear, there were thousands who came only to see the most popular of all moving picture stars.

Alice Brady, well known star, and daughter of William A. Brady, appeared. Three thousand girls employed in Boston department stores listened to Miss Brady make an impassioned appeal to them to buy Liberty bonds at the Mechanics building rally. She was given a tremendous reception at the big Liberty Loan rally in Tremont Temple.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, who are in Boston for an indefinite stay, have been selling Liberty Bonds. At an afternoon in a big department store Mr. and Mrs. Drew met over two thousand men and women and sold $15,000 worth of Liberty Bonds. They were guests of the Film Club at a special club night at the Brunswick Hotel, where Miss Marion Brazier Howard of the Film Club was hostess.

Mary Pickford Stirs Broadway Audiences.

Mary Pickford wound up her tour in New York City in connection with the Third Liberty Loan at the "big three" motion picture theaters on Broadway, viz., the Strand, Rivoli and Rialto. Thousands jammed the vicinity of the theaters clamoring for admission. Her speeches were extemporaneous and stirred her audiences deeply. Her appearance at all three theaters was greeted with a storm of applause, and upon concluding her remarks men, women and children leaped to their feet in demonstrations of enthusiasm.

Brooklyn Very Active for Loan.

Due to the tireless activity of William Brandt, chairman of the Brooklyn Motion Picture Division of the Third Liberty Loan drive, and Samuel Berman, vice-chairman, starting Wednesday, April 17, and every night until the close of the drive, thirty Four-Minute Men assigned to the motion picture theaters of Brooklyn spoke on the new Liberty bonds. These speakers were assisted by 120 solicitors from the Brooklyn Boys' High School, authorized to take up subscriptions at the conclusion of the plea to audiences. In addition to the boys, each speaker had several sailors in full uniform assigned to him.

Newark, N. J., Puts Up a Stiff Campaign.

Not only by subscribing heavily to the Third Liberty Bond issue have the exhibitors of Newark aided the present campaign, but in various other ways. Practically all the downtown houses used their big illuminating sign all week for the purpose of calling attention to the Loan. All the playhouses ran slides advertising the Loan, in addition to having special Four-Minute Men speak. Several of the houses also had booths, with attendants of the theaters in charge. Proctor's theater had a booth, and placed one of the performers in charge. Many of the performers appearing at local theaters volunteered their services in selling bonds at the booths in the department stores.

Baltimore Doesn't Forget the W. S. S.

A big W. S. S. drive was held at the Garden theater, Baltimore, Sunday night, April 14. At 8.15 the crowd which was around and in and on the roof garden of the Garden theater on Lexington street at Park avenue was about 12,000.

L. A. DeHoff, the manager of the New theater, who also books the pictures for the Garden, arranged the affair. Credit must also be given him for the idea of selling thrift stamps as admission tickets, the stamps, of course, being the property of the purchasers. Two 25-cent stamps admitted to the first floor, while one admitted to the balcony. Seventeen thousand dollars' worth of Thrift Stamps were bought.

On Thursday night, April 11, Emmy Wehlen came to Baltimore and went to the Fifth Regiment Armory to make a personal appeal to the people to aid the Liberty Loan buying. During the day she was presented at Loew's Hippodrome theater by Manager George A. McDermitt and made an appeal to aid the cause there also.

Philadelphia Busy as a Hive.

Somewhere on Vine street, Philadelphia, many men of the film industry are devoting a considerable amount of time and expense to the Third Liberty Loan drive. Also 1,500 theaters throughout Pennsylvania, Delaware and New Jersey are reporting excellent results on the sale of Liberty Bonds, through the aid of the Liberty pictures.

Lawrence W. Beggs, chairman, and Frank W. Buhler, subchairman of the Motion Picture Liberty Loan Committee of the Third Federal Reserve District, state that owing to the excellent service rendered by the film men and exhibitors in this district the results have been gratifying. Those who have done more than their share and are continuing with full steam ahead are: Jules E. Mastbaum, president, and A. L. Einstein, B. F. Tickner, George Meeker and J. Hennessy, of the Stanley company enterprises; A. R. Boyd, Arcadia and Great Northern theaters; Lawrence W. Beggs, Frank W. Buhler and W. K. Goldenburg of the Central Market Street Company; F. G. Nixon-Nirdlinger and T. Dougherty, Nixon-Nirdlinger Enterprises; Sablosky and McGuirk Enterprises; Judge J. O'Donnell, Premier theater and president of the Exhibitors' League; George Ames, Select; George Dembow, Fox; Robert Lynch, Metro; R. V. Pathe; John Clark, Famous Players-Lasky; Max Milder, Garrick, Universal; John Gill, Mutual; C. H. Goodwin, Superior; William J. Heenan and O. Bower, Goldwyn; Joseph Hebrew, Vitagraph; F. E. Samuels, General Film; M. R. Watnee and W. J. Hagerty, Triangle; Bert Moran, Kleine Edison; J. Schwalbe, Electric; A. G. Buck and J. Flynn, Peerless; W. R. Priest, World; C. Stamper, Freihofer Enterprises; George Bennethum, M. Comerford, Carr and Shad of Reading, George Kline, Herbert Elfinger, Strand and Leader theaters; J. M. Graver, H. M. S. Kendrick, Zimmerman's Enterprises; Earle Fort, Sherwood and Baltimore theaters; Albert Brown, Overbrook and Grand theaters, and Elliot M. Goldman, Bluebird.

Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn Pictures star, addressed 3,000 students of the South Philadelphia Girls' High School, Philadelphia, Pa., Friday night, April 19, on behalf of the Third Liberty Loan.

Miss Kennedy was escorted from her hotel to the school by a committee of pupils and was met at the entrance by the Philadelphia Police Band. Escorted by Jules Mastbaum, Miss Kennedy then motored to the Stanley theater, where a capacity audience greeted her. A special Liberty Loan film, showing Miss Kennedy speaking in pantomime before a background of the Third Liberty Loan posters, flashed out to reveal the little star on the stage. Her patriotic address was followed by a deluge of loan subscriptions.

Chaplin Appears in Petersburg, Va.

On Thursday, April 11, Charlie Chaplin appeared in person at the Academy of Music in Petersburg, Va., to aid in promoting the Third Liberty Loan campaign. Although there was a heavy snow storm on this day, the playhouse was packed to the doors. An interesting program was arranged for by the management and Mr. Chaplin was the principal speaker. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars were subscribed to the loan at the novel meeting. This, however, included large subscriptions of $100,000 from an insurance and a banking company of Petersburg.

Douglas Fairbanks Helps in Buffalo.

On April 11 Douglas Fairbanks made a whirlwind tour of Buffalo theaters, using a voice that had become husky by constant speech-making and supplemented it with a tremendously enthusiastic personality to boost the Third Liberty Loan, as part of a drive that will put Buffalo "over the top" of her $31,000,000 quota by the end of the campaign.

Arriving in Buffalo at 8.40 P. M. he rushed about the city like mad for a couple of hours, urging audiences to buy bonds until it hurts. He first spoke before the Liberty Loan committee's workers at the Iroquois hotel, jumping on a table to make himself heard, as his voice was then vanishing. Before the end of the evening it was little more than a whisper and although urged by his manager to make only two or three talks the star refused to consider the suggestion, carrying out the program arranged for him.

When he couldn't make himself heard he waved his arms, pranced about the stage and made unmistakable signs urging everybody to buy a bond. At Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, thousands could not get into the theater. At this playhouse Doug offered to climb to the roof of the building if someone would buy a $50,000 bond. At the Teck theater he started a $7,000 bond sale by buying one of $500 denomination himself. At each of the other theaters visited, including the Elmwood, Regent, Colonial, Victoria and Maxine, large crowds testified to his popularity.

Emmy Wehlen, Metro star, arrived in Buffalo Tuesday, April 16. Miss Wehlen was escorted to the Iroquois hotel, where she sang at a luncheon of Liberty Loan workers selections from her light opera successes and patriotic numbers. In the evening she appeared at the Strand theater and at Shea's Hippodrome, where she secured subscriptions for over $30,000, herself buying $6,000 more bonds on that occasion. She sang at both houses and spoke for the loan. She was vigorously applauded by large audiences, and on account of her good work received praise and warm tributes from the Liberty Loan campaigners in this city. From Buffalo she went to Boston, where she addressed and sang to thousands. From newspaper reports it is estimated that she has sold, at this writing, $2,000,000 worth of bonds. Her personal subscriptions amount to $40,000 worth.

After being dark a week the Majestic theater, Buffalo, reopened Sunday, April 21, with the screen presentation of Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany." The film helped stimulate the sale of Liberty Loan bonds.

Emmy Wehlen and Fairbanks Boost Loan in Cleveland.

On Monday, April 15, Emmy Wehlen came to Cleveland on behalf of the Liberty Loan and at noon spoke from the tank in the Public Square. At 3.30 she gave a talk and sang

"Over There" at the Mall Theater and at 8.30 that evening she repeated this at the Alhambra.

On Friday, Douglas Fairbanks arrived. At noon he addressed a monster meeting in the Hippodrome, speaking to more than 5,000 people. Afterward he appeared in the sales booth and signed receipts for bonds. The sales were unusually big. At 1 p. m. he gave a short talk at the City Club and later visited the Mall and Alhambra theaters. In the evening he talked to a big audience in Grays Armory, and left later for St. Louis.

Marie Dressler and Fairbanks Aid in Michigan.

Four cities in Michigan had the extreme pleasure on April 11 and 13 of being visited by Douglas Fairbanks, Artcraft star, and Marie Dressler, now making comedies for the World. Both were in the Wolverine State while on tour to stimulate the sale of Liberty Bonds. Both got tremendous receptions everywhere and succeeded in getting many hundreds of people to buy bonds. "Doug" visited Detroit, Flint and Saginaw on April 11, and Adrian and Toledo on the 12th. Miss Dressler visited Detroit.

Thousands of Indianapolis film fans turned out Saturday, April 13, to watch Douglas Fairbanks inject some of his screen "pep" into the selling of Liberty Bonds. It was the screen star's first visit to Indianapolis.

When he arrived Saturday morning his voice had deserted him and the only thing left for him to do in putting over his bond message was to convey his thoughts in actions rather than words. And this he did by occasionally punctuating a few sentences with a leap over a chair or some other Wild West maneuver.

Mr. Fairbanks was met at the train by a reception committee composed of S. Barrett McCormick, of the Circle, chairman; Charles Olson, of the Central Amusement Company; A. C. Zaring, of the North Star theater; Edward Sourbier, of the Keystone and Palms; Edward Bingham, of the Colonial; Robert Lieber, of the Circle; Roltaire Eggleston, of Keith's.

After an informal breakfast at the Claypool hotel, Doug was escorted to the theater by a street parade headed by a military band, a platoon of mounted police and a squad of Boy Scouts. He was presented at the Circle to an audience which fairly overflowed the big theater and then proceeded to drive home the gospel of Liberty Bonds.

While in the city Mr. Fairbanks was the object of a good-natured joke at the hands of Mr. McCormick and other members of the receiving body. The strenuous life of the past week, it seemed, had shown its greatest effect on a near-tattered hat which the screen star wore. During the breakfast it disappeared mysteriously. After an extended search Fairbanks was escorted to the L. Strauss & Co. store, where he was presented with a fine piece of headgear by Jerome Lyon of the company.

After attending a luncheon at the Hotel Severin, Mr. Fairbanks left shortly after the noon hour for Louisville, Ky.

"Doug" Covers All Downtown Louisville.

On Saturday evening, April 13, when every moving picture and other theater in Louisville, Ky., was jammed with interested spectators, anxious to hear Douglas Fairbanks deliver a talk on "Liberty Loan." A schedule was worked out whereby Mr. Fairbanks delivered short talks at intervals of fifteen minutes at all of the downtown houses, and long before his appearance at any of the houses the lobbies were jammed, and people blocked up the sidewalks in an effort to see, if not to hear, the popular actor.

He showed the result of his long trip and continuous campaigning for the Liberty Loan. However, the vim which characterizes his picture productions was also shown in his patriotic talks, which produced much applause wherever heard.

Mr. Fairbanks also talked at Macauley's theater, and some that were not down on the published schedule, which included the Alamo, Strand, Majestic, Walnut, National and Mary Anderson. In fact Mr. Fairbanks was a glutton for work and covered as much territory as it was possible to do.

Marie Dressler Does Good Work.

In and around Cincinnati no less than one hundred theaters are carrying slides advertising the Third Liberty Loan. Arrangements have also been completed only recently by Isidor Rauh, assistant field representative of the Civilian Personnel Division, Ordnance Department, with the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, for the use of slides urging qualified persons to volunteer their services—at good salaries—in Government work such as chemistry, drafting, machinery, stenography, etc. The Government has recognized the efficacy of this form of publicity to the extent of having special men to handle it, and more than once has acknowledged its indebtedness to the moving picture industry.

During the first week of the Liberty Loan drive Marie Dressler appeared in full uniform in Cincinnati and made a tremendous hit by her songs and speeches on behalf of the loan. Emmy Wehlen, the Metro star, who is touring the country under that company's auspices to help along sentiment for the bond issue, likewise appeared in Cincinnati at the same time, making addresses at a number of theaters, notably at the Strand.

Marguerite Clark Sells in Kansas City.

When it comes to doing things along patriotic lines, Kansas City always is equal to the occasion. On April 10, 11, and 12 the Jewel feature, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," was shown free to the Kansas City people at Convention Hall. The picture was contributed by Jewel Productions. The local operators' union contributed two operators to the cause. The big hall was likewise a gift for the occasion. There were four shows daily and a total attendance of 78,000. The music was furnished by thirty-five musicians of the musician's union. The two men in the active handling of the show were Frank Newman, owner of the Royal and Regent theaters, and Milton Feld, manager of the Universal office.

Marguerite Clark was a visitor at two of the shows. There is perhaps no city in the country where the love and admiration for this little actress is so intense as in Kansas City. She arrived at 7.45 A. M. Thursday, April 11, and left the next day at 5 P. M. While here she spoke, sang, visited, and enlisted. But her principal purpose in visiting Kansas City was to sell Liberty Bonds, and sell them she did in bunches. She had only been in Kansas City a few minutes when she sold $80,000 worth of bonds to two people alone, one sale amounting to $50,000 to Ford Harvey, the remainder being taken by a little girl whose name is known only to Miss Clark. She made a flying visit to many of the Kansas City theaters at which she spoke in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan.

D. O. Reese, sales manager for Song Hits in Photoplays, New York, more than did his part, when he sang "Over There" before each showing.

Oklahoma City Theaters Contribute.

The nine theaters of Oklahoma City, Okla., of which four are exclusively moving picture houses, subscribed a total of $30,000 for the Third Liberty Loan, the intensive campaign for which ended locally Friday, April 12. Each of six theaters—Lyric, Liberty, Empress, Folly, Palace and Majestic—took $1,000 of bond as theaters. John Sinopoulo, manager of the Lyric, subscribed for $5,000 personally, and B. H. Powell and E. Croak, $2,000 worth each. One feature of the theatrical boost to the third loan was the fact that the entire amount subscribed was paid in full.

Included in the subscriptions to the Third Liberty Loan were four from local film exchanges—Mutual, Metro, Universal and Pathe—and from three independent booking offices—R. D. Lewis, the First National Exhibitors of Oklahoma and the Favorite Film company.

NORMA TALMADGE SUBSCRIBES $200,000.

Norma Talmadge, the popular Select star, has done her bit in the large way typical of this actress by subscribing $200,000 to the third Liberty Loan. Her subscription, which is one of the largest individual purchases in the New York district, was made through the Harriman National Bank on Fifth avenue, where Miss Talmadge keeps her account. The officials of the bank have confirmed the reports of this sale.

The bank's representative secured Miss Talmadge's signature to her subscription blank by calling in person at her studio in East Forty-eighth street, where she is at work on "De Luxe Annie," which she is making to follow "By Right of Purchase" in her Select Star Series. The banker volunteered to wait until the scene was finished since he realized the cost of keeping the entire company waiting while the star affixed her "John Hancock" to help lick the Kaiser, but she would have none of it. So the Kliegelights were turned off, and the star wrote her signature.

Lieber Heads First National Exhibitors

First Annual Session of Circuit Members Marked by Enthusiasm---Tally, Schwalbe and Williams Re-elected—Delegates Entertained

THE first annual session of the stockholders of the First National Exhibitors Circuit was held at the Hotel Astor from April 15 to 17, and judging by the full daily attendance and the enthusiasm with which members of the circuit speak of the work accomplished it was a success from every point of view.

The first important business transacted was the election of a president. It would seem the ideal man for the position was secured in the person of Robert Lieber of Indianapolis, whose wide popularity was attested by the approval with which his nomination was greeted. T. L. Tally of Los Angeles was re-elected vice-president, Harry O. Schwalbe of Philadelphia was re-elected secretary and treasurer, and approval was expressed of the work accomplished by J. D. Williams as manager of the circuit, in which capacity he will continue.

Robert Lieber.

Two changes were made in the board of directors, Walter Hays of Buffalo being elected the New York representative; while J. Von Herberg was the new man chosen from the Pacific Coast, succeeding Fred Dahnken of San Franciso. The five directors re-elected for the coming year include Aaron Jones of Chicago, E. H. Hulsey of Dallas, Robert Lieber of Indianapolis, T. L. Tally of Los Angeles and Harry O. Schwalbe of Philadelphia.

A general feeling of gratification was expressed by the entire membership in the solid achievements of the organization since its inception a year ago. It has been proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that the leading exhibitors of the United States and Canada can get together on a co-operative basis and handle their own productions with the maximum of profit and the minimum of friction and expense. From every section of the continent exhibitors brought news of the remarkable returns that are being realized on productions already released by the circuit, and it was the unanimous opinion of the membership that with three attractions of the calibre of "Tarzan of the Apes," "My Four Years in Germany" and Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" to begin the second year with the future of the organization should be one of assured prosperity.

Thomas L. Tally.

One of the pleasing features of the meeting was the vote of thanks extended to T. L. Tally for the fine diplomacy he had displayed in carrying on the personal negotiations with Charlie Chaplin incidental to his signing the contract that gives the First National exclusive right to his $1,000,000 comedy series.

Harry O. Schwalbe.

The mutual exchange of ideas by exhibitors was also a noteworthy feature of the meeting, and many were heard to declare that they considered it alone worth all the time and money involved in coming from all points of the map just to get this extremely valuable, first-hand information regarding the vital problems.

As the financial executive of the organization Harry O. Schwalbe came in for sincerely expressed praise, it being freely stated that without his well-balanced judgment and many-sided knowledge of all factors in film distribution many of the big things already accomplished would not be actualities. In this same connection J. D. Williams was also complimented for his unflagging zeal in promoting the things that have made the circuit a factor to be reckoned with in the future of motion picture exploitation.

James D. Williams.

Robert Lieber, the new president of the First National, is one of the veteran film distributors of America. Twelve years ago he was a controlling factor in this branch of the business in Indianapolis, but did not enter the exhibiting field until eighteen months ago, when he organized the company that built the Circle theater in his home city, which is generally acknowledged to be one of the three premier motion pictures houses of this country. Mr. Lieber was a schoolmate of Booth Tarkington, and numbers the celebrated novelist among the regular patrons of his theater. In addition to his motion picture interests he operates one of the big manufacturing plants of Indianapolis. It is safe to say that under his administration the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will increase its prestige for progress on the highest level of business efficiency.

A complete list of the stockholders who attended the session is as follows: Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; T. L. Tally, Los Angeles; Aaron Jones and Nathan Ascher, Chicago; H. O. Schwalbe, Philadelphia; E. H. Hulsey and S. T. McDonald, Dallas; Frank Ferrandini, Richmond; Lieutenant J. P. Anderson, Atlanta; J. H. Kunsky and G. W. Trendle, Detroit; C. S. Jensen and F. V. Fisher, Seattle; H. T. Nolan and W. H. Swanson, Denver; W. P. Dewees, Vancouver; E. V. Richards, Jr., New Orleans; Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee; Jacob Fabian, New Jersey; E. Mandelbaum, Cleveland; N. H. Gordon, Boston; E. R. Pearson, Minneapolis; A. H. Blank, Des Moines; Colonel Fred Levy and L. L. Goldberg, Louisville; E. I. Church, New Jersey; William Sievers, St. Louis; Winthrop Allen and N. J. Flynn, Kansas City; H. Brouse and B. F. Stapleton, Ottawa; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh; J. D. Williams, New York.

Belgian Consul and Vice Consul Attend Presentation at Eighty-first Street Theater.

THE New York premiere of "The Belgian," Sydney Olcott's dramatic spectacle, released by U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, and featuring Valentine Grant and Walker Whiteside, took place at the Eighty-first Street Theater April 18. Among the prominent guests were the Belgian consul and vice consul with their entire staffs, in full uniform. The house was decorated with the flags of the United States and Belgium, together with flags of the other allies. The Belgian national anthem was played by the orchestra, while the audience sang.

Valentine Grant made a stirring speech calling for contributions for the restoration of the down-trodden kingdom. A number of Belgian girls who came to this country for refuge took up a collection which amounted to $358.20; this sum being raised in eight minutes.

After the showing of the picture the Belgian consul congratulated Miss Grant upon her splendid portrayal of the Belgian peasant girl and thanked her for her efforts in behalf of the stricken kingdom.

"The moving picture folk of America have done much for Belgium and Belgian people are thankful," he declared. "Benefits in many cities of the United States under the auspices of the motion picture men and women have brought us large sums of money, all of which you may be sure was greatly needed for our people. Belgium some day will repay its debts to America and surely will not forget those who make the movies."

THE meeting of Texas film men at San Antonio, April 8 and 9, was a success. There were more than a hundred of 'em, but the attendance of exhibitors was a bit light. They know now what they missed.

One bit of business transacted was the decision to establish a claim department, which will look after adjustments of claims members may have in case of failure to secure amusements or films contracted for. President E. H. Hulsey was unable to attend, being in New York, and the sessions were presided over by Vice President Wm. Lytle of San Antonio. Work of Secretary R. H. Reviving Exhibitors' Association in Ontario

President Baillie Has Secured Many New Members and Active Efforts to Better Conditions Are Begun.

A REAL effort is being made to revive the activities of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario by President Baillie, who is a Toronto exhibitor. Mr. Baillie has spent considerable time in personally interviewing many theater managers and during the past few weeks has been able to secure a large number of memberships in Toronto and throughout the Province.

On Friday, April 12, the association started active steps toward securing an amendment of the regulations which prohibit the admission of all children under fifteen years of age into a theater unless accompanied by a parent or guardian. On that date a delegation representing the organization waited upon the Ontario Government with a request that children be permitted to attend special matinees on Saturdays and holidays without restriction, in turn for which the exhibitors would provide an "official guardian" in each theater to take care of the audience. The exhibitors also asked to be allowed to sell tickets to children just over the age limit for those under the official limit, when they apply at the box office together.

President Baillie declares that many exhibitors have shown anxiety to join the organization when they have been approached because they have learned the value of co-operation. Some whom he had classed as possible objectors have been the most eager to join after a little talk.

SURPRISE PARTY FOR AL LICHTMAN.

THE thirtieth birthday of Al Lichtman was celebrated on Tuesday evening of last week by the office associates of the general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Distributing Department at Keen's Chop House. The affair was a surprise to Mr. Lichtman.

A host of telegrams were received by Mr. Lichtman, many of which came from John C. Flinn, who at the time was making a Liberty Loan tour with Marguerite Clark.

Many words of praise were bestowed upon the guest by those present, and every one felt in accord with the sentiment expressed by the toastmaster when he said that "the party was not held because Al Lichtman was their immediate boss, nor because he was the person who O. K.'d their raises in salary, but because he was a regular fellow."

Binney to Make Two-Reel Comedies

Long-Tiime Director Organizes Florida Film Corporation, of Which He Will Be President.

CLOSELY identified with the production of high-class comedy features, H. J. Binney, better known as "Josh" Binney, and the announcement that he has organized a producing company under the title of the Florida Film Corporation, the purpose of which will be a monthly release of a two-reel "Josh" Binney comedy, will prove of interesting news to buyers and exhibitors.

Initial co-operation with Mack Sennett started "Josh" Binney off right with Filmdom's foremost laugh producer. Then followed a season of Vogue comedies for the Mutual Program, which established Mr. Binney as a capable director.

H. J. Binney.

Sunshine comedies were next manufactured under Binney's direction and were exploited with success. The Master pictures and Lion Comedies next occupied Mr. Binney's attention, his duties including those of president in addition to director general, and the popularity of this product was but a further evidence that a master hand was at the helm.

Mr. Binney's reputation as a producer of successful comedies naturally brought him many offers of affiliation and including a most flattering proposition submitted by capitalists of Jacksonville, Fla. After a careful investigation Mr. Binney was convinced that in these overtures were conditions and opportunities which would permit of his putting into operation certain ideas regarding photoplay production which had long been in his mind, inasmuch as he would have the hearty co-operation of H. J. Klutho, one of Jacksonviille's most influential business men and owner of the renowned Klutho studios. The Florida Film Corporation was organized, the policy of production being the monthly release of a two-reel comedy. Mr. Binney claims he now is equipped to produce the best releases of his career as a director and that it will be his sole ambition to supply the market with a product that will compare most favorably with the best obtainable.

Funny Fatty Filbert, also known to hosts of audiences as Nathan Dewing, occupies the stellar position in Mr. Binney's acting company and is a guarantee that the mirth-provoking situations are in most capable hands. His reputation as a laugh-getter has placed him in the foremost ranks of the funny fat men of the screen.

Fatty Filbert has the support of well-known and well-liked artists, including Fred Bezerril, that "different" comedian from South America; the beautiful Vivian Dart as leading woman; Glen Lambert, Rox Renfro, Florence McLaughlin, Gertie Fishback and Ira Wentley. A. A. Porchet is photographer.

In presenting the "Josh" Binney comedies it is Binney's intent to carry out different thought in each release and incorporating in addition to its comedy possibilities stories of human and gripping interest and plot.

Three of the new series are now completed, and a most vigorous advertising campaign is now being outlined covering these as well as the releases to follow.

Arrangements have been consummated whereby Ernest Shipman and his organization will exploit the "Josh" Binney comedies and act as sales representative for the Florida Film Corporation, with headquarters at 17 West Forty-fourth street, New York City.

These ideas of construction are based upon Mr. Binney's wealth of experience and are calculated to work out to the advantage of his company, the buyer, exhibitor and the picture viewing public.

Real Japanese Backgrounds in Hayakawa Subject.

Sessue Hayakawa makes an interesting announcement in connection with his first picture, which is to be released through Haworth Pictures Corporation. In effect it is that part of his recently organized independent company has been spending a month or more in Japan filming scenes which are to be incorporated in the prologue of his initial production.

"As the picture has considerable atmosphere it was quite essential to obtain real scenes in my native land," said Hayakawa, "and nearly two months ago I decided to send part of my company across the ocean, thoroughly equipped to obtain these scenes. My instructions to them were to film the most picturesque sections of the country so as to make the forthcoming picture additionally attractive, and I am confidently expecting results which will be satisfactory in every particular.

"Japan, as every one knows, is famous for its natural scenic beauties, which are entirely dissimilar from those found in other lands, and in view of the fact that Japan figures to such an extent in the picture I decided that to enhance the value of the production it would be advisable to have as many scenes as possible made there for incorporation in it."

Hayakawa says that on account of the interest taken in his native land in the first motion picture company to be headed by one of her own sons the Japanese authorities, according to cable advices he has recevied, have offered his players every facility in their work, and thus they have been enabled to obtain views which will contribute largely to make the first of the Hayakawa productions unusually attractive.

At the L-Ko.

Under the management of Louis Jacobs the numerous L-Ko slapstick companies are actively engaged in producing their well-known brand of humor. J. G. Blystone has just finished an Alice Howell feature.

Mr. Jacobs is now assisted at the studio by his brother, Oscar, who has recently come from New York to this position.

Hal Roach Buys Whiting's Interest in Rolin.

A deal was consummated on Wednesday, April 3, by which Dwight Whiting, secretary and treasurer of the Rolin Film Company, relinquished his interests in this organization to Hal E. Roach, president of the company. The deal was negotiated through Pathe Exchange, Inc., which has been releasing the Rolin comedies for several years past.

C. H. Roach, father of Hal E. Roach, the president, takes Mr. Whiting's place as secretary and treasurer. The organization otherwise remains the same. The Rolin Film Company will from now on release two one-reel comedies a week, one with Toto and the other with Harold Lloyd. Hal Roach will remain director-general and personally supervise all productions. There are four other directors connected with the Company, Alfred Goulding, Gilbert Pratt, Albert Glassmire and Charles Avery. Mr. Avery is the latest acquisition to the Rolin Company. He was for several years connected with the Mack Sennett studios and until recently a comedy director at Triangle Keystone.

Walter Macnamara has been appointed production manager, Harry Burns is the studio manager, Tom Kreiser is head of the laboratory department, and Harry G. Oliver, technical director. Rex Taylor has been added to the scenario department.

Jack Cunningham prepared the scenario.

Mastercraft to Start Production.

Mastercraft is shortly to commence production of four of Thomas Dixon's novels, and F. Eugene Farnsworth, president, is busy engaging the cast and arranging for production. It is likely the pictures will be made at the Paralta studios, and every detail is being carefully arranged for.

The first of the Mastercraft productions will be "The One Woman," an anti-Socialist story, and the cast will be headed by Lawson Butt and Clara Williams, while the supporting cast will be a strong one, including Hershall Mayall, Thurston Hall and Joe Dowling.

The three other Dixon pictures to be made by Mastercraft are "The Root of Evil," "The Victim" and "Comrades."

Two New Triangle Players.

Two new faces have been added to the large force of Triangle players. They are a new leading woman, Jane Miller, who was engaged especially for "High Stakes," in which she supports J. Barney Sherry, and Lella Rooks Hart, who will be with the playing forces indefinitely. Miss Hart was formerly with the Keystone comedies and is a character woman of high reputation. She will be used in Triangle feature productions.

A new film publication, Camera, edited by E. M. Robbins at 804 South Olive street, has made its appearance on the new-stands. It will be issued each Saturday. The first number is an eight-page, four-column news sheet, devoted to reviews of first-run pictures, news of the theater and studios, and several columns of short, newsy personals.

Brunton Busy on War Work.

Few men in the motion picture business are more patriotic than Robert A. Brunton, manager of production for Paralta Plays, Inc., and what is more, Brunton is sincere in his patriotism.

Here are a few of the things he has done to help Uncle Sam win the war: Charged admission to pre-views at studio and turned proceeds over to Red Cross; collected drab clothing worn by employes and donated to war department; saved tinfoil and other waste material for war societies; urged every employe to buy Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps, and purchased several thousand dollars' worth himself. This patriotic work by Mr. Brunton should serve as an inspiration for others to do likewise.

Miss Eicks to Assist Purchasing Agent.

Miss Mary Eicks, for years connected with the motion picture industry, has been appointed assistant to Purchasing Agent L. H. Buell, at the Triangle Culver City studios. Miss Eicks is filling the post left vacant by the enlistment of S. C. Comer in the Aviation Signal Corps at San Diego.

Enid Markey Coming Back to Screen.

Enid Market is to return to the screen again very shortly. Miss Markey has been playing in stock at San Diego for several weeks, but will come back to filmland once more to play the leading feminine role in the sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes," which the National Film Corporation will produce.

After three years Lloyd V. Hamilton, or "Ham" as he is known wherever pictures are shown, has his leading woman back with him once more—Ethel Teare, who used to play with "Ham" in the old Kalem comedies, which were so popular on the General Film program. Harry Rattenbury has returned to the Christie Company after having played several dramatic features, and will again be seen in the one and two-reel comedies of the Christie organization.

Wells Resigns from Triangle.

Raymond Wells, the director, is no longer on the Triangle pay roll, having resigned this week.

Diando Treasurer Goes to New York.

Leon T. Osborne, vice-president and treasurer of the Diando Film Corporation, has left for New York City on business connected with the serial his company is making for Pathe. He will be absent about two weeks.

Kathleen Conners to Support Tom Mix.

Tom Mix, the William Fox star, has a new leading woman in his new feature in the person of Kathleen Conners, formerly of the Rolin Film Company.

Frank Lloyd to Make Grey Stories

WITH the statement from William Fox that his organization is to film two Zane Grey stories, "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail," comes an announcement of the decision to entrust Frank Lloyd with these productions.

Mr. Lloyd unquestionably ranks high among the screen directors of the country. Although he has been a member of the Fox forces for only a year and a half, he has produced within that period many photoplays which have attracted wide attention. Chief on the list, of course, is his masterwork, "Les Miserables."

Frank Lloyd.

"A Tale of Two Cities," one of the finest and most striking pictures of 1917; "When a Man Sees Red," the drama laid in the South Seas, and "The Blindness of Divorce," the propaganda play, released a short time since, are other examples of Mr. Lloyd's handicraft. "True Blue," in which William Farnum is starred, is his latest production. The greater part of Mr. Lloyd's work has been done with Mr. Farnum.

Frank Lloyd was born in Glasgow, but his parents moved to London while he was still a lad. He attended Westborne School in the metropolis, and then hired out as an apprentice to a turner and fitter in the Woolwich Arsenal. He commenced his career as a professional player at Hammersmith Palace, near London, with impersonations as his specialty. After an extended vaudeville tour throughout the British Isles and Canada he came to the United States and entered pictures.

In the fall of 1916 he became affiliated with William Fox. His first feature was "Sins of Her Parent," starring Gladys Brockwell. Then he was placed in charge of the destinies of William Farnum. In addition to the films named, Mr. Lloyd has been responsible for "The Price of Silence," "American Methods," "The Heart of a Lion" and "The Girl with the Champagne Eyes."

Big Days These for Western Theaters

Fred Warren of Goldwyn Brings Inspiring Story of Conditions Among Coast and Mid-West Picture Men

TEN thousand monthly increase in population for Seattle; from six to ten thousand increase for Portland, Ore.; from eight to twelve thousand increase for San Francisco and Oakland considered jointly and six thousand monthly increase in population for San Pedro, the harbor of Los Angeles.

These are the conspicuous economic things happening to the principal cities of the Pacific Coast, all of which are at once making themselves felt in bringing new patronage into motion picture theaters, as detailed by Fred B. Warren, vice president of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, who has returned to New York after five weeks in the West in touch with Goldwyn's customers and exhibitors in general.

"I found, of course, that exhibitors from Omaha westward had escaped the rigors of our eastern fuel situation during the early months of the present year," said Mr. Warren. "They had escaped our severe winter weather and the ice and snow. They did not suffer as the East did, and now that spring has opened up business is at flood tide.

"In Los Angeles J. A. Quinn, Grauman's, Kehrlein's Kinema, Tally's Broadway, the two Clune houses and Miller's two theaters are all doing record business and already there is in contemplation by outside interests another big first run house as pretentious and splendid as the Grauman. Miller is building another theater that will be ready in the summer months and J. A. Quinn has taken under long time lease the theater adjoining his successful Rialto, where he will open another house. Work on this is already under way. Los Angeles exhibitors have risen to the realization of the growing importance of music in the presentation of pictures, and much of the drawing power of their houses is attributable to their excellent orchestras.

"It is my belief that the tremendous and well-conceived motion picture advertising employed by Los Angeles exhibitors is the vital element that keeps the population of that city so well keyed up to attendance at the theaters. The newspaper exploitation is tremendous, and the major portion of it is conceived and prepared by a special local organization which shows great originality and sales power in its retailing of pictures to the public. There are at least eight large users of newspaper advertising space, and the copy published is extremely effective.

"Personally, I should rate Seattle exhibitor advertising as being the most effective sales copy in the United States. It has an atmosphere and value all its own and it fits its community like a glove. Los Angeles I should rate as second in advertising efficiency in America, with Cleveland third and Toledo fourth. Exhibitor advertising in most of the larger cities of the East lacks distinction, individuality and selling power, and I believe that an improvement in Eastern exhibitor advertising would increase patronage 20 per cent at least.

"In San Francisco, Turner & Dahnken's Tivoli is enjoying its usual tremendous patronage and Eugene Roth's California, a wonderful new house, has been tremendously successful from its opening day, without in any way lessening the popularity of his long established Portola, next door to the new million dollar house. Messrs. Sheehan and Lourie are doing splendidly with their Rialto and Mr. Sheehan's flair for excellent promotion and advertising has given him a distinctive place in San Francisco.

"Like the other coast cities I have mentioned, San Francisco's recent and future gains in population are due to the heavy shipbuilding program of the Coast yards in an effort to meet the government's demand for tonnage. Seattle is booming, Portland, Oakland and San Pedro are in active shipbuilding competition. There is a surplusage of work over human labor and wages are high. These pay rolls make themselves at once felt in the mercantile and amusements channels of cities.

"Near Spokane and Los Angeles are large military camps where there are thousands of soldiers, and these numbers will be increased by the successive drafts. These camps are contributing a heavy military patronage to the houses in the adjacent large cities and in addition exhibitors have built theaters beside these camps with thousands of patrons within sound of their voices and are playing 'first run' pictures for such a patronage.

"The sudden boom in the Wyoming oil fields has brought a great influx of population to two score of towns in Montana and Wyoming and exhibitors in both states are enjoying heavy patronage. Our eastern conception of Idaho and Wyoming is that they are snowbound states. The fact is that Cheyenne, Laramie and all that territory enjoyed virtually a snowless winter.

"In Denver, Samuel L. Baxter, of the Isis, one of the pioneer Colorado exhibitors, has had a remarkable winter for patronage and his spring business is now at flood tide. Mr. Baxter is one of the outstanding figures of his region, a splendid showman who never deserts his house from its morning opening until its midnight closing. He watches his audiences more closely than any exhibitor I have ever seen, and in this lies the secret of his success. Mr. Ellison of the Rialto and Princess theaters feels that patronage was never better assured in Denver than at the present time and Mr. Talbot, of the America, the other big new house of the town, says his patronage is at its high water mark at this moment.

"It will be good news to his many friends among both exhibitors and producers in the East that Jim Clemmer, owner of the Clemmer Theater, Seattle, has come back on the high tide of success. His musical program, which is inseparably linked with his picture showmanship, was the finest thing I heard west of Chicago. Guterson's remarkable orchestra is the best musical organization of Seattle, and Guterson, who used to be at Rector's (now the Claridge) New York, is merely Guterson in Seattle, as you would speak of Caruso or Melba. To him Mr. Clemmer attributes much of the credit for the present splendid success of the Clemmer Theater. Messrs. Jensen and Von Herberg, with houses in both Butte and Portland, have four excellent theaters in Seattle, all of them with big seating capacity, and are playing to enormous patronage.

"A remarkable example of newspaper co-operation is furnished by the Seattle Times, through its owners, Joseph and Clarence Blethen, and their able picture editor, George H. Bellman. I believe that the Seattle Times gives the exhibitor better co-operation than any other newspaper in the United States. Next to it I would rank the Los Angeles Evening Herald under the direction of Guy Price.

"Some day the rank and file of the exhibitors will learn that inefficient local newspaper exploitation is the weakest spot in the amusement mechanism, and by correcting this will enlarge their gross patronage anywhere from 15 to 30 per cent.

"Beyond question at this moment the country from Omaha west is on the boom. In the latter city A. H. Blank is about to open his big new Sixteenth street theater of great seating capacity. Much to my surprise, war conditions are not holding up the construction of new theaters."

"BILL" FARNUM GETS LOVING CUP.

What was to have been a privately managed theatrical scoop on the part of Jack Root, manager of the Strand Theater in Pasadena, Cal., recently turned out to be a spontaneous mass meeting in honor of William Farnum. Farnum had never before appeared in person at a moving picture theater, but Root had prevailed upon him to come to the Strand.

"Les Miserables" was the attraction at the house, and many recognized the William Fox star sitting in the rear. The result was a great demonstration and the presentation to Mr. Farnum of a two-foot sterling silver loving cup, inscribed with a message to the actor. Mr. Root presented the token to Mr. Farnum after the reception.

CHANGES IN TRIANGLE LIST.

The title of "The Finger Print," Triangle, April 21 release, has been changed to "The Hand at the Window." This is an adaptation of John A. Moroso's Collier's Weekly story "In the Spring," and features Joe King and Margery Wilson.

"Hundredth Night," the second feature on the Triangle, May 26 schedule, has been postponed and "The Mossback" substituted in its place.

Theaters Reopening All Over Canada

New Picture Houses Are Building and Dark Ones Are Brightening the Promise of Coming Prosperity.

A DISTINCT feature of the recent theater developments in Canada is the reopening of many houses after long periods of darkness. No less than twenty theaters can be named right off the list which have been reopened or sold, or for which negotiations are pending. Film distributing companies have taken a number of the theatres and the exchange people have received a fair number of offers to sell theaters from owners which have not yet been really considered.

Brand new theaters are being built in Toronto and Hamilton, the new house in the latter city being the Regent, erected by the MacKay Brothers. In Montreal the Canadian Universal has made a new theater of the Holman and the house has enjoyed marked success since the change. Another exchange company has an option on the Crystal Palace, Montreal, a long established theater. The Comet Theater, Cote St. Paul, Montreal, has been reopened by Mr. Picard, while the Circle Theater, Montreal, has been reopened, after being dark for two whole years, by the management of the DeLuxe Palace, Montreal. A. Lebeau has also acquired a lease of the Maisonneuve Theater, in the suburbs of Montreal.

In Toronto the Idle Hour was recently reopened by William Dineen of the Strand, Toronto, after being dark for a considerable period. The Moss Park Theater, Queen and Sherbourne streets, Toronto, is now doing nicely although it was dark for many months. The Garrick, Toronto, has been secured by A. L. Hall of Montreal. The Beaver, West Toronto, was recently purchased by the Allens of the Famous Players' Film Service, while the Garden, one of the oldest theaters in Toronto but yet a good house, was recently acquired by interests closely associated with the Regal Films, Limited. Another recent announcement in this direction was that Mr. Aber had purchased the Brighton Theater from J. A. Barclay.

The Empire Theater, London, Ontario, has changed hands and a big film company has an option on the Majestic, also of London. In Halifax the Orpheus has been bought by L. A. Acker, who owns another large theater in that city. On the other side of the continent, the Pantages Theater of Vancouver, B. C., is being rebuilt by Alexander Clemes, a local hotelkeeper. The old Pantages was closed for a year and when it is reopened it will be called the Regent.

At Hamilton, Ontario, the Savoy, the only burlesque house in the city, is being converted into a moving picture theater temporarily and the Grand Opera House, Hamilton, has also arranged to present special pictures during the summer season. It is also announced that the Allens, who control the Famous Players' Film Service and many theaters in the Dominion, are securing the Temple Theater, formerly the largest vaudeville and stock company house of Hamilton.

Not long ago the Allens secured the Regent Theater, one of the large picture theaters of Ottawa, and thousands of dollars are being spent in renovating and remodeling the structure. The Flower Theater, Ottawa, was also secured by Regal Films, Limited, about the same time.

It was only last December that Canadian film interests were agreed that the moving picture business had been shot to pieces by influences of the war, war taxes, elections, Government bond issues, storms, conscription and other details. It was generally felt that the adverse conditions were only temporary, however, and the present situation only proves that belief. There are, apparently, plenty of purchasers for moving picture enterprises and the theaters of many centres are turning them away nightly. Nearly every theater in Toronto did a wonderful business during the week of April 8. Every night at the Regent Theater, for instance, people were lined up four and five deep for a block waiting to see "Lest We Forget," starring Rita Jolivet.

These are, apparently, thrilling days for Canadian exhibitors.

POPE AGAIN UNDER ARREST.

Charles F. Pope, who on April 6 was arrested on a criminal indictment and admitted to $2,000 bail, was taken into custody again in the afternoon of the same day.

The indictment on which Pope was first arrested was handed down by the Grand Jury of New York County and charges larceny of $1,750 from the Trinity Trading Corporation, a firm engaged in exporting motion pictures to Scandinavia. After the defendant had been released on bond, Chester Beecroft, president of the Trinity Trading Corporation, accompanied by Deputy Sheriff Murphy, again sought Pope at a hotel in West Forty-ninth street. This time he caused his arrest on the execution of a civil judgment for about $1,800 and Pope was taken to Ludlow Street jail.

Porto Ricans Protest Against Film Tax

Five Per Cent. on Absolute Value of Pictures Is Being Collected, but Under Protest.

THE end of the first month's operation of the new revenue tax laws finds the question raised by the film exchanges in Porto Rico concerning the payment of the 5 per cent. tax still unsettled. It may be necessary to submit it to the Attorney General.

The new internal revenue law imposes a tax of 5 per cent. on the value of all films made in Porto Rico or brought or imported into the island. The film men protested that if the government interpreted this as referring to the absolute value of the film it would be not only unfair but ruinous to them since they ordinarily leased pictures for short periods, the value of which sometimes runs into many thousands of dollars. They proposed that the tax be collected on the leased price for Porto Rico. The treasurer, while not acceding to the proposal, was apparently willing to give it his consideration.

Meanwhile the Revenue Bureau has gone ahead collecting the tax, which is paid under protest. Since no shipping invoice accompanies the films the Bureau appraises the value and collects on a bond deposited by the importer.

The picture theaters are doing public work here as elsewhere. At present they are boosting public libraries. One hundred and fifty visitors a day to a library located in a city of 50,000 is in the opinion of the library board of the Carnegie Library so unsatisfactory that it has started a publicity campaign to stimulate the growth of the library habit among the people of the island. It has called on the theaters to help by showing slides and the exhibitors have readily agreed.

Christine Mayo

CHRISTINE MAYO, Metro's popular player of adventuress roles, is one of the first women of the stage with the right to wear the button of the Liberty Legion. Miss Mayo is a confirmed seller of Liberty Bonds, and not content to rest upon past laurels is working hard in the present drive. At present she is devoting her energies to the outlying districts, considering that the metropolitan section of New York is already well covered by other workers. Even though she is at present busy in preparation of Metro's all star production, "The House of Mirth," which is being directed by Albert Capellani, she sells bonds after her work for the day is over.

Christine Mayo.

Patriotic service is nothing new to Christine Mayo. Last year she did valuable work in the way of recruiting and selling Liberty Bonds, making a tour under Government auspices. Miss Mayo was formally detailed to the recruiting department of the navy. Arrangements were made to have a detachment of enlisted men travel with her to give all necessary aid. Christine Mayo is a New York girl. She was first trained as a singer, but went on the stage after losing her singing voice. Her first theatrical experience was in stock companies at Scranton and Wilkes-Barre. She appeared in "Excuse Me" and "Seven Keys to Baldpate."

Miss Mayo's motion picture experience has included three Metro pictures previous to the present one—"The Spell of the Yukon," "The Iron Woman" and "The Snowbird." She played in "The Supreme Sacrifice," "A Mother's Confession," ing," "Who's Your Neighbor?" "Raffles" and "The Life Mask."

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

SAMUEL ROTHAPFEL was added to the roll of honorary members of the Film Club at its meeting on Sunday evening, following a tribute paid him by the club founder, Miss Marion H. Brazier, who has retired from the presidency. She was presented with money and flowers and made honorary president and chairman of the inspection committee, whose duties are to see pictures, report on those worth while, and recommend forthcoming releases. Her successor is Mrs. J. Wentworth Brackett, a devotee of the films. At this meeting a reception was planned for Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, to be a brilliant affair at the Hotel Brunswick on Tuesday, April 23. Mrs. Caroline B. Nichols, founder of the Fadette Orchestra, was present and told of the value of music as an accompaniment to the pictures. She referred to the work of her players at the Boston theater nine months ago when it first became a picture house.

"Wild Youth" was liked here and had a distinguishing feature in connection with the titles, animated in allegorical fashion, with none other than Ruth St. Denis and "Hubby" Ted Shawn dancing with their pupils in riotous fashion. Here we had the Blackton touch. What a splendid piece of work James Cruze gives as the Chinaman, for he looked the part to the life. Theodore Roberts lived up to his reputation as an ideal brute—on the screen—making a terrific contrast to little Huff in this picture. Jack Mulhall, the cheerful; his romantic mother, Adele Farrington, one of the screen beauties in that line of work, and all certainly put over a fine bit of team work, a credit to the author, Sir Gilbert Parker, and producers.

What a fine picture "The Cross Bearer" is, and how well Montague Love plays the Cardinal. It is flawless and gave much pleasure to crowded houses at the Park. A different angle is here, on the invasion of Brussels, being less repellant than the average picture has shown. To those of us who have visited Belgium and the Louvain cathedral it seemed as if we were again on that sacred spot. Much credit is due those who reproduced the interior and all else so well. Much has been written about this picture, and I am glad to add evident approval of all of it here, more especially the scene with the Pope so reverently done.

Mrs. Ayer gave us a treat in "La Tosca," with our own "Polly" Frederick, Frank Losee and other capable players. Such atmosphere—every detail thoughtfully worked out under Edward Jose. Playgoers everywhere are familiar with the story and with "Jerry" Farrar's operatic version, but here we get something more elaborate than stage limitations furnish. Rather sombre ending for most fans! To relieve the tension we had on the same evening "Naughty, Naughty," and how we did laugh over the efforts to transfer a bit of Broadway to the small town with its prunes and prisms! Weren't those women funny! Enid Bennett was the instigator, and she really got by, too. Many of us were willing to bet that the wardrobe she displayed in this picture was a part of her recent wedding outfit, for now she is Mrs. Fred Niblo, and this is her first picture since the happy event.

Those who did not like to see Harold Lockwood's bare feet in a previous picture had the bad taste removed in "The Landloper," starting with Harold at Palm Beach sipping tea with the fair sex and tossing a ten-dollar bill to a passing tramp. This leads to a bet, whereby he masquerades as a tramp and finds himself, through the influence of a little child. He is made aware of life, its needs, and opportunities, away from the idle rich, and so he busies himself and earns a tidy bet made in the first reel. On a title we get this: "He gropped!"

Not in many years has the Hub experienced such an "embarrassment of riches" in the line of theatrical treats as at this writing. We have three of the big screen plays—"Hears of the World," "My Four Years in Germany," and "Tarzan of the Apes," to say nothing of first runs of "Woman and the Law," "The Blue Bird," and some recent Goldwyn and Paramount releases. The Sidney Drews are making a big hit with capacity houses and here for a run. A conspicuous feature is the presence of picture fans at each performance—persons who have paid not over 25 cents to see these players, and seem perfectly willing to pay $2 to hear them. I sat in front of a screen devotee who did not like the way De Witt Jennings spoke of Drew. "The idea of that horrid man calling dear Mr. Drew a shrimp!" During the curtain call speech Mr. Drew extolled his wife, and convulsed the house when he said that they had been called Mr. and Mrs. Sapolio of the screen, presumably as a tribute to the clean pictures they have given us. For the reception to the Drews given by the Film Club several screen players have been bidden, Arthur Ashley, Charlotte Greenwood, and Alexandria Carlisle, who has at least one picture play to her credit, "Creeping Tides." Miss McVey, understudy for her sister, Mrs. Drew, and other players in their company are invited.

"The Naulahka" has wonderful scenery and seems a creditable adaptation from Kipling's story. Then, too, it is well cast, with Tony Moreno, Warner Oland, Mary Alden, J. H. Gilmour and the dancer Doraldino. These are good box office names to add to that of Kipling. Poor little Helene Chadwick struggled with her part, and there was a little moral in not trying to upset Far Eastern ideas by trying to introduce American ones, especially in the hospitals. The planting of the lovers in India was consistent, the loyalty of the hero to his native town deserved all that came his way, and we liked the last picture—the railway train silhouetted in action. Pathe has a "good seller" here.

"Sunshine Nan" furnished good entertainment, starting in with the slums, and a lot of alley fighting which some folks like. I have not read the book, "Calvary Alley," by Alice Hegan Rice, so do not feel able to pass any comments on the dramatization. Ann Pennington injected a lot of pep and a bit of pathos, but the play lacks an appeal. Young Barthelmess and John Hines furnish good contrasts as to types, and, of course, the happy ending strikes a chord. Quite in contrast is "Little Miss No-Account," with Gladys Leslie as the youthful heroine. This is a fairly good story, well done by the Vitagraph players, including Eulalie Jensen, Frank O'Connor and little Stephen Carr, a prototype of Bobby Connelly. Speaking of that chap, did you see the two last of the Drew comedies, "Gas Logic" and "A Youthful Affair"? Well, Mr. and Mrs. D. must take a back seat right here, for Bobby made a big hit. These pictures get a hand at all the theaters where shown.

Mabel Normand, once called "Keystone Mabel" because of her success in slapstick comedies, has shown her public that she can do better work as illustrated in "The Floor Below," which so many liked. I did not see her first Goldwyn picture. A man said he thought the title ought to have been "All Over the Place," as the floor below was a mere stopping place, compared with the other floors, etc.

"The Shuttle" turns out to be a melodrama, with some good moments and new situations. Constance Talmadge, as the live-wire American girl whose sister has married a brute for his title, puts the play over well. Helen Dunbar, so long with Metro, adds dignity to it.

"Amarilly" in the hands of Marshall Neilan could not be other than a well-directed picture, and he had good material to work with, so far as the players went, with Mary Pickford as the star. Somehow, we did not care for this hodge-podge stuff.

What a splendid picture "The Coward" is—yes, an old Triangle but seen for the first time. It is timely, too, for here we get Charles Ray as a slacker and a coward, in time of war (at the outset), but game later on. Keenan as the Southerner is great. Splendid ending and highly patriotic at any time.

I saw two good Metro pictures recently at the Park, "Breakers Ahead" and "Social Hypocrites," featuring Viola Dana and May Allison respectively. The first has quite a bit of pathos, a story of the sea, a motherless child, the victim of village gossips, but sheltered by a real woman. Right here why did they not cast a younger man as the son of Mabel Van Buren and as the lover of little Dana? The other play had some cast, in Frank Currier, Joseph Kilgour, Henry Kolker, Stella Hammerstein and Ida Darling. Good card playing scenes, and pretentious settings, with scenario by Albert Capellani and June Mathis, a perfectly safe picture to boom, and good to see more than once, for the detail work and the stir it gives all through.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and MARGARET I. MACDONALD

Pictures for the Schools

Interest Manifested by Educationalists in Our Recent Article on the Subject.

IT IS with pleasure that the Educator finds that the recent article entitled "Educational Conventions and Moving Pictures" is drawing comments from educationalists in many parts of the country. This is gratifying and only good can result, with, no doubt, an increased interest in the use of pictures for educational purposes. It is absolutely impossible to publish either the criticisms or favorable comments together with many good points in the letters received. We have before us now, however, one from a western college which affords some points worthy of attention. The writer of this letter does not wish "to rush into print," neither is he anxious for his name to appear, he desires especially to seek to establish a basis for practical educational pictures in agreement with us.

Beginning with the opinion that the term "Educational" is too generally applied to moving pictures, and that "much of the stuff that is called Educational is so named merely as a camouflage." We must here very candidly say that our correspondent is very wide of the mark; in the world of moving pictures we differentiate between the educational powers of moving pictures in general, and the educational picture in particular; therefore when an exhibitor uses the word "Educational," it ought surely be within the power of every intelligent person to know just how the term is applied. Referring to our statement that the Moving Picture World publishes lists of educational films, our correspondent writes.

> "You mentioned that there is now a published list of thousands of pictures classed as Educationals. Now I do not doubt the fact that such a list is published, but my doubts do begin with the word Educational. Your suggestion that some means should be found whereby school people could be informed of such a list, is truly laudable. Why not suggest to the publishers of such a list that they have a number of reputable educators inspect and review the film with recommendations as to use with accompanying synopses and explanatory remarks. I believe that educational periodicals will fall in line, and give the movies a boost while they are contributing something useful to the school men in general."

We are glad that our correspondent does not doubt our word that such an educational list exists, this is equal to a confession that the writer is in ignorance of this list; unfortunately and unpardonably he is one of many thousands of educationalists who do not know of this list. The very object of the present propaganda in the educational department of the Moving Picture World is to come in touch with these thousands of school men and let them know what educational powers are awaiting them in the realm of educational pictures; further, it is a regrettable fact that through the lack of knowledge of these things, hundreds of thousands of school children are deprived of the great help to be derived from these hundreds of valuable and—in schools—little used films. It seems necessary, therefore, for us to repeat that the Moving Picture World is the publisher of this list, and, that a reputable and competent staff have already passed upon them and that no picture is listed that does not fill its appointed purpose.

We cannot fail to notice that our correspondent says, "School men are rather reluctant to get very much excited over anything until it has become quite a common practice, hence we are sowing seed each year." Of this we are fully aware, one school authority once wrote us that "he could not encourage moving pictures educationally until they synchronized with a talking machine," in turn we could not help suggesting to him that it would be equally wise to advise boys not to go into the water until they had learned to swim. But we are glad to add that our correspondent is optimistic, he is evidently a picture "fan" for he says of the "seed sowing" that while some falls upon stony ground or among thorns, other falls upon good ground; he further expresses the most welcome opinion that "within the next few years we will have moving pictures firmly established in the schools of the state."

This is the sort of information we are looking for and which we are out to encourage and help, we too are desirous of getting "the producers and schools together." We cannot help referring our readers to the experience of a school principal as given in a recent issue in which he said that the lists published by the Moving Picture World were his greatest helps and that he could not do without them; we only desire that his experience may be that of thousands of others; help us to prove that the moving picture is in deed as in word an Educator, and that it has a specific educational purpose to fill, and further, that it does not enter into its rightful place, until it is as much a part of a school equipment as the school library.

Struggling Through to Success..

Strange though it may seem, although the way is ready and the equipment at hand, the general use of the moving picture in the schools is only secured after a struggle.

Minor difficulties are allowed to seem as though greater than the production of pictures themselves, the purchase of a projection machine is made a greater problem than the making of one. The opinion of a board of trustees is made of more importance than the needs of a school full of children. Trained with text books in their hands, many teachers cannot broaden themselves to the use of pictures because they are not condensed into the compass of a cut and dried plan, or included in a prescribed and well planned curriculum. When ultimately a school is equipped in nine cases out of ten it is because some enterprising principal has shouldered the burden and struggled through with it. This is written from the actual experience of many men, and is not the imagination of the writer; it is astonishing how few school authorities are really acquainted with the good and great side of the moving picture, to many of them their sole knowledge of the value of pictures is the picture house with its flaming posters, and they think that pictures in the schools means to transfer a picture house to the school auditorium.

Several communications have been received by the Educator in which the opinion is expressed that the pictures and the schools must be "kept separate." How to combat this flagrant error is a great problem, we are going to try it with all our powers. It seems a terrible thing to have to think that it is necessary to imagine the publication of series of testimonials after the manner of a quack nostrum, yet so many are waiting for the other fellow's experience.

Some time ago we published an article, "Educating the Educators." It begins to look as if the re-publication of that article in pamphlet form might be a good thing. What is the trouble? Our educators are all splendid men, a finer body of men could not possibly get together than those assembled at Atlantic City for the recent convention; they are all anxious for the best for their schools; the answer seems to lie in the fact that they are not yet familiar with the value of moving pictures, as we who are on the inside are. We must, therefore, be charitable and do all we can to let them know that which we are privileged to know through the more favored positions we enjoy, rather than through any superiority we possess; for the present we know of no better motto than "Carry On!" "Carry On!"

Our Greatest Optimist Experience and Enthusiasm Make a Prophet.

As a result of reading in this paper of the success of the moving picture campaign conducted in Mingo, Ohio, several have written of their determination to make some definite move in the same direction. So elated is the projector of the Mingo success that he writes us that the time is coming in his opinion when the educational pictures will be one-half of the moving picture business. Next to war (he says) we spend most of our public money on education, and predicts that just as now there are great firms of school text book publishers, so in like manner there will be large producers of films for purely school purposes. Our correspondent's optimism is delightful, the best thing about it is the fact that it is catching and not only are other scholastic institutions seeking for that information which shall secure for them a similar measure of success, but other journals and magazines are asking for particulars so that they, too, may encourage that which has proved so valuable in large rural community centers. Writing strictly up to date our ambitious friend says:

"By the way, last night we showed the government picture of Camp Sherman entitled 'The Remaking of a Nation' to 600 farmers, taking in a good round sum of money and proving that we gave one hundred per cent. of value in educational results." This is up-to-dateness in every respect and is the one way to command success. With regard to cheering predictions concerning the future, there is no doubt that here as elsewhere, the war is having a most pronounced effect upon the educational value and power of the pictures in that the war scenes are sought for in a way that baffles the power to meet the calls for them. The Liberty Loan, the Red Cross, the Four Minute propaganda owe a large percentage of their success to the educational uses of the picture, and the President of the United States has been the first to acknowledge this value. Under these circumstances it seems impossible to be too optimistic or to make unseemly prophecies; these are days of conspicuous educational progress and the picture machine is in the lead.

Italian War Pictures

Scenes in the Engagement from the Adige River to the Brenta Presents Interesting Details.

THE fourth instalment of the Official Italian War Pictures shown at the Rivoli theater includes scenes in the mountains of Italy during the engagement from the Adige River to the Brenta. One of the first things that attracts attention is the splendid condition of some of the roads leading into the mountains, and over which we see the troops, supplies and big guns being transported. Again we see pictured the transportation of cannon to the Italian position by man power when the tractor fails to work, and also the constant passage of motorcycle dispatch bearers. The covering over of all signs of activity with huge branches of trees when the approach of an Austrian aeroplane is heralded, and the rapid removal of the camouflage when the danger has passed, is also of interest. The advance into action of the Italian cavalry, the setting of a concrete base for a big gun, and the bombardment with officers watching with field glasses the effect of the havoc wrought in the lines of the enemies are among the closing scenes of this instalment.

Newman's Next is "Tidbits of Travel"

Educational Films Corporation to Release Entertaining Scenes of Native Life in the Philippines, China and Japan.

THE next Newman release to be made by the Educational Films Corporation is "Tidbits of Travel," a reel of unusual and entertaining scenes of native life in the Philippines, China and Japan.

E. M. Newman, responsible for the interesting travel pictures issued by the Educational Films Corporation of America, and which are being shown regularly at the Rivoli theater, was one of the party that accompanied Theodore Roosevelt on his famous African expedition some years ago. Mr. Newman, who is a man of remarkable strength and physique, was the only member of the company who did not succumb to illness while on the trip.

Good Combination of Subjects

Universal Piles Up Stock of Interesting Material for Use in Future Issues of Screen Magazine.

THE 70th and 71st issues of the Universal Screen Magazine for release respectively on May 11 and 18 will be found unusually interesting. No. 70 contains, in addition to such subjects as "A Day with Our Future Admirals," and "Bread Making As They Did It a Thousand Years Ago," a subject which the children especially will like, "Humpty-Dumpty Circus Appears in Never-Never Town." This incorporates the dream of a child who wanted to go to a circus, but could not because he had the mumps. The performers in the Humpty-Dumpty circus are dolls and animals, which are comically realistic in action.

The 71st issue contains splendid illustrations of the strawberry industry, and the rubber shoe industry, as well as some delightful scenes photographed at a chow dog kennel, and considerable footage of a patriotic nature, in which Colonel Roosevelt is interviewed. Views also of our soldiers at one of the camps training for the trenches, and also in parade, are shown, and Willie Hopkins displays the patriotic spirit in an animated clay illustration of "The Iron Ring," which may be bent but cannot be broken.

Interesting Educationals

"Picturesque Wales" (Pathe).

A SPLENDID scenic number, showing the town of Llangollen, with its fourteenth century bridge, quaint houses and the Abbey of Via Crucia. The canals and pastoral surroundings are also very attractive. This comprises a half-reel, the scenes all being in colors. Glimpses of the simple fashions worn by the natives make a good feature.

"Picture Spots in England" (Pathe).

A half-reel of tinted scenic views, taken in various parts of England. The first scenes are in Worcester county, in and about the town of Doitwich, famous for its brine springs. Gardens, picturesque cottages and parks are shown. Some of the latter views are taken along a rugged strip of coast near the Irish Sea.

"Silent Wonderlands of the West" (Educational).

The second instalment of "The Silent Wonderlands of the West" opens with morning in the hills, after which the picture takes us to the banks of the Gunnison River, famed for its splendid trout fishing. Chipeta Falls, Billboard Rock and the Royal Gorge, which is the gateway to the Canyon of Arkansas, follow next. The cameraman focusing his camera from a lofty position gives us a view of a half-mile stretch down into the canyon. Then there is also shown Skyline Drive near canyon city and some views in Big Thompson Canyon in Rocky Mountain Park.

"Horse Training by Experts" (Paramount-Bray).

The 116th issue of the Pictograph contains some good scenes on the training of horses for the mounted police force of New York City. It shows how horses brought from the western plains are trained to perform remarkably intelligent feats. To accomplish the many hazardous duties that fall to the lot of a mounted policeman, his horse must be schooled to do his bit. He must be able to pick his way without guidance through a crowded street while his rider is snatching at the reins of a runaway horse. Or he must fearlessly charge at an angry mob of men should the occasion warrant. Then again, while his master is dismounted, he must stand still even though surrounded by all sorts of uncanny noises. The picture illustrates how these noble animals are taught to respond to the touch and voice of a master.

"Training Russian Wolf Hounds" (Universal).

In the 69th issue of the Screen Magazine will be found some entertaining scenes photographed at the farms of John L. Kuser. Some fine specimens of Russian Wolf Hounds, both young and old, are exhibited in the picture, and also the methods used in training them for the hunt. Some of the stunts performed by the dogs are tremendously interesting, especially that of a daredevil puppy who mounts a ladder set up for the purpose and leaps from the top to the ground, which is a considerable distance.

"Chameleons of the Sea" (Paramount-Bray).

Under the direction of Dr. R. A. Spaeth, Professor of Biology at Yale University, the Bray Studios, Inc., have produced some truly remarkable subjects, many of them heretofore considered impossible of accomplishment. In the 116th release one of the wonders of nature, the change of color in fish, is graphically illustrated. So-called ground fish—fish that live on the ocean's bottom, such as flounders—are able to change their color instantly to conform with the tone of the ground they are on. This transformation is provided by nature as protection against the sharp eyes of their enemies, and so perfectly do they conform with the bottom that they are almost invisible. When over white sand they are practically white; when over dark they are dark, and when over a vari-colored bottom they assume a mottled color, surprisingly like a scattered handful of black and white pebbles.

Under the microscope the ebb and flow of the pigment as the fish is transferred from a white to a dark and then a mottled surface presents a startling spectacle and one that will give a new understanding of the wonders of nature.

"Night Animals" (Educational).

An attractive and also instructive number of the Ditmars series of nature studies is "Night Animals," which deals with the opossum, the pigmy opossum, the pigmy ant eater, and the sloth. Splendid closeups of these animals are shown, and we are made acquainted with important facts concerning them. The opossum found in the Eastern United States is a stupid animal which when frightened starts clumsily to climb and is easily caught. The pigmy opossum is a native of tropical America and has a prehensile tail and feet like the hands of a monkey. It prowls at night in search of fruit, and is a peculiar looking little animal with bulging eyes. The pigmy ant eater of South America is not pleasing in appearance in spite of the fact that it has a thick coat of silky hair. It also has a prehensile tail which it uses skilfully in conjunction with its feet. Its tongue is long and narrow and well adapted to the task of gathering ants. The sloth, which is introduced to us as the strangest of mammals, appears to have little interest in life save that of lounging in its basket. It takes advantage of an opportunity for food in a lazy manner, and its appearance would lead one to suppose that it once belonged to the reptile family. This number is intensely interesting and should be welcomed by educators.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

An educational number exhibited at the Strand theater during the week of April 7 is entitled "Strange Fishermen of Russia." This picture, which can be had from the Educational Films Corporation of America, has been commented on in these columns before and is of unusual interest. The fishing port at which the scenes were photographed is a village on the Kur River. The picture shows the unloading of sturgeon, carp and bream and later the entire population of the village at work preparing the fish for the market. There is much of interest in this picture.

The Gaumont Graphic No. 3, which was released April 12, contains interesting material, including a glimpse at a maple sugar bush in Vermont with the sap dripping from freshly tapped trees, smelt fishing on the Columbia River, American troops arriving on the Aisne front, burning oil to try to save the Oregon fruit crop, and other subjects of patriotic and otherwise current interest.

BESSIE LOVE IS HONORED.

Bessie Love, the young Pathe screen star, recently was decorated for "meritorious service" by Motley H. Flint, chairman of the National War Savings Committee of Los Angeles. This high honor has been conferred on but three other citizens of that city, and Miss Love consequently is receiving many congratulatory letters and telegrams.

The decoration of Miss Love followed her vigorous campaign throughout Los Angeles in the interest of the sales of United States War Savings stamps. It is estimated that she brought more than $10,000 to the government through her eloquent appeals. She made a whirlwind campaign in her automobile.

JULIAN BACK IN LOS ANGELES.

Smith to Distribute War Pictures

WITH the greatly increased supply of negative being received from the large force of cameramen sent abroad by the United States, the organization of the Division of Films is being rapidly expanded by Charles S. Hart, its director. An announcement is made of the appointment of G. A. Smith as Manager of Distribution, to arrange for the widespread handling of the official war pictures of this country. For more than three years Mr. Smith has been connected with Pathe in executive positions. A short time ago he was appointed assistant director general of productions, from which position he resigned to accept the appointment to the Division of Films.

G. A. Smith.

Mr. Hart is building up an organization of practical motion picture men, another addition to his staff being H. C. Hoagland, formerly general manager of Selig and more recently head of Pathe's scenario department.

Mr. Smith has had thorough experience in handling war films, having managed the successful campaigns of Official Government Pictures, Inc., which controls the British War Pictures. For eight years before entering the motion picture business Mr. Smith was a newspaper man in New York. He entered the service of Pathe in 1915 as serial manager, and in that department handled the advertising campaigns on fifteen serials. He is a man of experience in the important angles of the motion picture business, production, distribution and executive work. Extensive plans for the distribution of official pictures of the great war have been mapped out by Mr. Hart, and the work of the department is progressing rapidly.

GEN. PERSHING THANKS UNIVERSAL FOR ALBUM.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has just received a letter from General John J. Pershing, commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces in France, acknowledging the Pershing Album. President Wilson and all the members of his cabinet placed their autographs beneath the sentiments contained in the gold-mounted book, which was much appreciated by General Pershing as the following excerpt from his reply bears witness.

"The receipt of the war album has touched me very deeply," writes the General. "The letter of cheer contained in the album will prove a great inspiration to the American Army in France, and it is my greatest desire that we may prove ourselves worthy of the love and confidence of our people at home as expressed therein. The album is indeed a handsome souvenir and will remain in my family as a priceless memento for all time. Many, many thanks."

HART AND DAVIDSON IN WORLD PICTURES.

Two well-known members of the acting profession are included in the cast of "The Judge," a forthcoming World Picture starring June Elvidge, in the persons of Albert Hart and Dore Davidson.

Mr. Hart, a former comic opera basso, commenced his career with Augustin Daly. Among the comic opera and musical comedy successes he appeared in were "The Wild Rose," "Queen's Mate" and a hundred other successes. Mr. Hart has been playing character parts with World Pictures for some time.

Dore Davidson is equally familiar with the acting profession and playwriting. He has written a number of plays and sketches that were numbered among Broadway successes.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

McCormick and a Lady.

S. BARRETT McCORMICK, of the Circle, Indianapolis, sends in his campaign on Cleopatra. There are too many advertisments to be reproduced here; we can give only a hint of the good stuff, but we give a few cuts that will hint at the display. The first example shows the stuff run before the opening. Note that all three have the same style of border. This style of border is used throughout the campaign for the smaller advertisements, for which reason a regular border was not used, but one fabricated from the squares used for color work in one of the A. T. F. series, we think. It is simple and distinctive, and during the course of the week became associated with the play. These are all three nines. It was not desired to lay undue emphasis upon the advanced prices charged for this production, yet it was necessary to call attention to the advance, so these advertisements read in order:

Pharon, heir to Egypt's throne, gave up his father's jewels to see Cleopatra.
You get off easier.
15c or 25c in the mornings or afternoons.
15c, 25c or 35c at night.

It cost Caesar an empire to see Cleopatra.
It will cost you, etc.
Anthony gave up Rome to see Cleopatra.
You will only have to give up, etc.

In each case the humor of the announcement lifts the curse from the raise in prices even while it gives emphasis to the idea. And note that "fifteen or twenty-five cents." It is more elegant than "and" and means just what it says. "Admission 10 and 15c" strictly means that admission is twenty-five cents.

The Sunday advertisements are good even for McCormick, and more is expected of him than would be asked of almost anyone else. The one on the left is five columns wide and the other four. Both trust more to the illustration than to type argument, for the picture is a spectacle and lends itself well to the spectacular treatment. Everyone knows of Cleopatra. It is necessary only to name the play and then give a hint of its gorgeousness. About half of the daily advertisements are also pictorial, but not all. Some of them ran very free verse along these lines:

Her Sirenic Majesty,
Cleopatra, commands her Imperial Cryptographer to herald her delight at the great number of friends and reincarnated admirers who called at the Shrine of the Silent Art yesterday to see her and express sorrow for those who unfortunately could not get within a Pyramid's length of the Temple.

To them, however, and others she proclaims open house each day this week (except Tuesday), beginning at 11 o'clock preceding the midday.

Cleopatra expressed regrets that she would be unable to appear
Tuesday for the reason that Heatless Days were unknown in Egypt during her reign and she came unprepared for this emergency.

She likewise ordered a Tablet made bearing the following inscription:

"The music is a ceremony worthy of The Siren of The Nile, possessing sensuous delights of moonlit nights idyllic charms to lure Venus from her Star Crowned Throne and the Passions and Pageants of Egypt were never before expressed in such regal manner." To Max Well she bestowed the Order of the Sacred Scarab.
She was, however, surprised to learn that while Antony gave up Rome, Caesar a Throne and Pharon the Family Jewels to see her that Indianapolis only had to give up 15c or 25c in the mornings and afternoons, or 15c, 25c or 35c at night.

There are several of these styles of advertisements, run with a striking cut, but the Puritans got after Cleo (after they had had their own good look Monday) and appealed to the Mayor, as is evidenced by a press clipping. The Mayor ordered four cuts made in the film, and the next morning Cleo came out with this comment:

"Well," remarked Cleopatra this morning as she emerged from under the anesthetic of her operation and glanced at the Pink Teddy Bear that had just been delivered in a Ford by a grinning Ethiopian,

"Human nature hasn't changed very much in the two thousand years that I've been dead. Back there in the days when Lotus Buds bloomed in my back yard, in the spot where some bespectacled Egyptologist is now digging around looking for the true history of my life,

A green-eyed Jane got sore just because of my perfect 36 and knocked me. And ever since I've had a bad reputation and been accused of playing the leading role in the great domestic drama, 'Why Men Leave Home.'

"Now," she continued, giving the string of her new R & G a jerk, "take that little incident where I camouflaged Caesar. To me that was the most brilliant coup in my entire femi-military career.

"Ouch!" she grimaced in pain as the scissors fell on the Antony episode. "Now I can fully realize what Shakespeare meant when he said 'That was the most unkindest cut of all.'"

Evidently the last paragraph gave rise to this two fours that does not say a very great deal, but leaves much to the imagination. There is not any direct argument to such an advertisement, but it is a clever capitalization of the excitement of the moment, and one line that hooks up with a local flurry is worth a column that doesn't.

Just two more lines and we are done, though the film will be running for some time yet, and this all live material for those who have not used it. One runs Absence makes the heart grow fonder.

Cleopatra has been dead for nearly two thousand years;
But she came back strong.
Ask the neighbors who got in yesterday—
Also those who could not get in.

The last two lines are set in smaller type than the first three, but still large enough to be easily read. For the Friday advertisement the message ran "Back to the Pyramids after tomorrow. Better try to get in tonight."

As we have said before, it would pay feature people to let McCormick have first crack at their stuff in order to get a press book that is practical and not merely junk. It seems funny to read his thirty-five cent "top" for Cleopatra and remember that it was not so long ago that he fairly had to threaten Denver exhibitors to make them shove the price from five to ten cents; in fact, he had to change from newspaper work to manager to show them how, but he certainly did give them an object lesson before his abilities gained him recognition in a wider field. More power to him.

Ruff Stuff.

Lately we showed some samples of Ralph Ruffner's work in Portland, but these were before he got his artist trained. This week we are going to take more space and show him in his normal form, but Ruff's normal form is like a thermometer on a hot morning—constantly ascending. One of the best things Ruff has done in a long time was for Tom Sawyer. This was put out around Christmas time, which explains the legend on the bandage. Note the "one of the 5,000 feet" just below the cut. The advertisement made a lot of talk, and talk, of course, makes business. It was a little thing, in a way, but it takes a lot of thought and a natural aptitude to think up such "little" things in a way to make them effective. It is safe to say that this is easily the best advertisement for Tom Sawyer that was put out. It is right in the atmosphere of the story. It is Tom Sawyer. In this connection we show how the lobby display for the same subject, in which it will be noted that the idea of the toe is used again to hook up with the newspaper display. They played to a run of eight days straight to tremendous business; and eight days in a town the size of Portland is a record to be proud of.

Just by way of diversion, Ruff got an idea for advertising Sadie McAllister in Pants by putting his girl ushers in trouserettes. Ruff says it made a lot of talk, including the talk some wives gave their husbands after they got home for looking longer at the ushers than they did at the show. There are only four girls in the cut because Ruff knew that if he put all ten in line it would make them too wide a cut to rise very high in the column, and that if he grouped them, the costumes would not show with proper detail. That's where the real press agent shows. He plans his cuts so they will rise high, but not too high in the column, and he plans his pose to get the best effect, and he does it almost unconsciously. These outfits cost the house $2.25 each. There were ten of them, so the total cost was $22.50. The newspaper cut alone was worth more than that to boom a four-day showing, but the newspaper work was merely incidental to the real purpose of the costumes, which brought to all the patrons of the house for seven days before the showing the fact that Pants was coming. He had all of the regular patrons talking, he had a lot of strangers coming in to see the girls in their unusual costumes, who probably came again to see the play, and he got a lot of talk from people who did not come, perhaps, but who have the house more solidly remembered than ever before, and all for a cost of $22.50. It is not what advertising costs: it is what it brings in that counts, and generally the inexpensive advertisement—the one that doesn't cost anything but a superior quality of brains—is better than pages of newspaper space. Ruff believes in telling all he has. He doesn't fall all over himself yelling about the feature and forget utterly that he has a first-class comedy. He tells about the comedy, too. For Fatty Out West he has a most impossible looking animal, looking like a cross between a cow and a dropsical mule, with the comedian mounted. At the side he uses this verse:

Via freight he landed,
On the desert stranded,
With his pants all full of vents.
An Injun chased him,
A rabbit raced him—
Get the rest for 20 cents.

It's better poetry than George Editor writes, anyhow. The thing rhymes and the business-like touch at the end is sharply pointed. We didn't know it was in Ruff to be a regular poeter. And not only does he play up Arbuckle comedies, but he plays his fillers, too. For France in Arms, a Sunday filler, he took a special two twelves—twenty-four column-inches—for a filler, one out of the ordinary, it is true, but a filler none the less. It is a fine example of the use of white space, but we have a better one to show in a moment. For that matter, the advertisement for the Finley Nature-pictures is good enough to be cited for white space. This is the lower three and a half inches of a three seventeens. It is a local production, and, of course, attracts special interest, but even at that, we imagine that there are few Oregon houses handling the film that have the good sense to boom the pictures.

Ruff has taken two of his old slogans and applied them to his new charges. The Liberty invariably carries the "Go!" and the Columbia the "Try to get in" that Ruff used to such good effect for his old house in Spokane. That they have sunk in is amply proven by the fact that Reynolds, the chief cartoonist of the Oregonian, used it lately as the caption for one of his front-page cartoons. It is something more than a slogan and has become a part of the local language. Also, as a part of the system, Ruff used some of his Iggleteewiggletees for the Columbia heading. They were always working on the unsteady U with some such line as "We're working on U," "We'll get U yet," "We'll get U in line." Now he has them in line he does not have to use them, but those Iggles are all right (except the way they spell their names) and should be made more of.

For some reason Ruff says that this copy made a lot more talk than might be supposed:

YOU KNOW
how you stick around home just waitin' for the RIGHT KIND of a picture to make its appearance in town. This is it. Put the cat out and come down.

The number of persons who then and later spoke of having put out the cat before they came down to the show proved that the line sunk in for some reason. It doesn't sound very brilliant, but it brought the bacon.

This last example was used for Triangle's The Argument, but a better title has been supplied. It is five sevens, and though it runs in a lower corner of the page, it takes the entire attention for the page. It is a good example of open-space work, but then Ruff never was so stupid as to overload his space. In all the years we have known him we do not recall a single "stuffed" advertisement. More than that it would be hard to say of a man.

Booming W. S. S.

Add this to your collection of gunless Harts. Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y., sends it in. Bill Hart kissing a girl is a far more unusual figure than Bill pulling a pair of guns, and will attract more attention, we think. In this cut Mr. Franklin uses a slightly heavier border than usual, though none too heavy for the size of the space he takes, and by breaking the tableau through the border he gets a departure from the monotonous regularity of the usual enclosed space. But there is one thing about the Hippodrome advertisements that is just as much of a trademark as that hard-working orchestra that is always shown at the bottom of the space. We have never seen a Franklin-built advertisement that was not as neat and as attractive as the handsome house itself. You never see a Hippodrome advertisement that suggests that eight dollars is being spent to hold nineteen dollars worth of type. It is all clean-cut, elegant, and of a type to appeal to the higher grade of patronage—and this appeals with equal force to the gallery patrons, as well. The ten-cent patron will stand for more black type, but that does not mean that he will not be more strongly attracted by a better-looking advertisement. Of course not all exhibitors can afford to pay for special drawings and special cuts from those drawings. Some of them have to skimp a little in order to pay for the space alone, but if they can only afford type-set advertisements they can at least keep them open and clean, and an all-type should work as well as a drawing if it is well set. Mr. Franklin also sends a photo of a patriotic drop used on Washington's Birthday to boom the W. S. S. It was shown with the legend:

Washington stopped at nothing to achieve Victory.
War Savings Stamps mean Victory and Prosperity.
The Government needs unlimited capital to supply the needs of her fighters and it is up to her stay-at-homes to lend even their quarters to help out. War Savings Stamps are miniature Government bonds. Buy! Buy! Buy!

Of course few houses have a scenic artist as a member of the staff and cannot make these elaborate productions, but they can use lantern slides on the picture sheet. The Hip's production was given 6½ inches across three columns in the evening papers, and it was pure reading. Probably Mr. Franklin did not consider this when he prepared the display, but he is too alert a manager to overlook the opportunity once it presented itself.

Encouraging.

We are glad to see the interest with which "The Son of Democracy" has been taken up by exhibitors. The Parkway, Baltimore, gave a special showing at one of the leading hotels to invited guests, and Walter H. Brooks, of the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., not only gave a special showing with Rose Tapley to talk to the educationalists, but got out a special booklet. Special showings seem to be general. This is a healthful sign, for it shows that perhaps exhibitors are coming to realize that it is not always the five-reel feature that brings the most money or does the house the greater good. Did YOU ever try to find out how many come to your own house to see the scenics or the news weekly? Would it surprise you to find that some did? Get ready to be surprised, and then rubber around and find out.

Leaders.

HAL HODES, of the Universal press department, is lost in amazement to discover that the leaders of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" make pretty fair vers libre when run with a couple of transpositions and a half dozen changes in the tenses of the words. As a matter of fact the leaders do make a running comment on the story that gives some idea of the story, but their chief interest lies in their smoothness and appeal to the ear. Not alone as a curiosity, but as a study in leader writing they are offered here for the benefit of the student of title writing, and they will well repay the attention given them. We believe that this is the first time that the entire set of leaders in a multiple reel has been placed at the disposal of the authors for intimate inspection.

Summer, 1914,
And the world was at peace.
Love and friendship ruled
The glad business of every day.
God looked down from Heaven
And was pleased.

Gentle breezes
Fanned the swaying fields of grain;
The world hummed with the pleasing sound
Of bees and birds and laughing girls.
How many Belgian maids in time gone by
Had trod those ancient stones
To happiness.

Marcas,
The Blacksmith of Louvain,
Was a mighty man.
This man, Marcas,
Lived in faith and love and friendship,
And, by the sweat of his brow,
Had won peace and prosperity.

There was Another man who lived
In a palace in Berlin.
He was twice a king,
Eighteen times a duke.
Twice a prince, nine times a count—
Besides being a bishop.

William, of Hohenzollern,
King of Prussia,
Emperor of Germany.

The blacksmith of Louvain
Was a better man
Than the Hohenzollern.
The blacksmith owned
But two suits of clothes,
One for work and one for the Sabbath.
The Kaiser owned
Three hundred and sixty-six.

August 1st, 1914,
And William of Hohenzollern
Spoke the word that set the world afire.
Came the crash, titanic, colossal—Staggering.

Joy died,
Hope fled.
Desolation
Became supreme.

Upon that day
The world passed
Into twilight,
A dark curtain
Descended upon a condition that,
Please God,
Will never be seen again.

The baneful autocracy
Of Prussia had spoken.
An autocracy of hate
Which for decades
Had been deceiving a great people,
Poisoning their minds,
Preaching the virtue
And necessity of War,
Had applied the torch of Devastation.

By a trick
Of Circumstance the weal of mankind
Was placed for a moment
In the hand of an arrant
Egoist, tyrant madman—
William of Hohenzollern.
The greatest crime in all history
Was perpetrated that ONE man Might find for HIMSELF
A place in the sun.

Blinded
By the Gods,
There flashed forth in the mind
Of this one man a madness,
A fatuity,
A mania fatal,
Malignant,
Satanic.

From beyond the dim horizon
Began the tireless thudding of guns.
The rich fields,
The peaceful farm,
The busy city
Became the barracks, the arsenal
And the hospital.

In two years
Twenty-two million men
Were killed, maimed, or made prisoners—
Twenty-two million families
Mourned.
But Hunger and Suffering
Do not lend themselves
To the process of arithmatic—
Blasted homes and stunted lives
Are not to be interrupted
By mathematics.

Then
Came the Master crime.
An unoffending people
Was ground into extinction
Beneath an iron heel.
A nation was destroyed.
The crime against Belgium
Completed to its fullest,
The Prussian stalked onwards
With his twin comrades,
Frightfulness and Horror.
A new blotch of infamy—
The Lusitania—
Was added to the Black Name
Of the Beast.

There
Was another man
Who lived in a White House.
The Chief and Spokesman
Of a Great Nation that believes
All people were born
Free and Equal,
With a right to Peace and Happiness.
The men and women of that Nation
Rose as one person
In support of their President,
And the ground trembled with the shock

Then Came the End.
The Dark curtain which,

Cleared away. And
When the echo of the last cannon
Had died upon the air,
The silver-throated bells of all the world
Rang forth the glad tidings—
"William of Hohenzollern
Has Fallen!"

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Apologies. The Man Is Right.

John S Captuo, Astoria, Long Island, corrects the editor as follows:

> The change-over seems to be kicking up a terrible muss. The projectionist must have some sort of signal. The most convenient form the do-it-the-easy-way projectionist finds is the punch, each one selecting a punch of easily recognized design. He punches a few (Huh, few? I've seen samples of film in which one operator had carefully punched a hole in every fourth or fifth picture for nearly twenty feet.—Ed.) holes and, from his viewpoint, all is well. He thinks he has done right, too. But the exchange manager makes an awful holler about the punches, especially when one or two more projectionists have added samples of their pretty little punch to the film. The exchange manager thinks he is right (and he is, too.—Ed.). In a recent issue you comment on Brother Telland's automatic signal and say you don't know whether or no the theater manager will buy the device for his operator. Wrong, Brother Richardson! He won't be buying it for his operator, but merely purchasing additional and needed equipment! I think it is about one year since you first asked film producers to incorporate some sort of change-over signal in their films. I suppose they refused because it meant some slight added bother or expense. The producer probably reasons that when he has put out a first-class production that settles it, so far as he is concerned. It is up to the other fellow then. Well, I think we've been kidding ourselves. I don't think we can get the change-over signal incorporated in the film, and that the only real relief will be found in some device such as Brother Telland's, which is practical and an excellent piece of equipment to put into theaters which can afford it. The next best thing is for the exchange to send slips with every multiple reel release, describing scene at which change-over is made. Next to this comes the punch, but if it is to be used, why not have a standard punch and let the exchange do the punching?

I stand corrected. The thing really is additional and necessary equipment. My "buy it for the projectionist" was thoughtless and ill-advised, though some exhibitors would, I think, look at it exactly that way—for the operator, I mean. As to impossibility to get producers to do their duty in this matter, why it really does seem impossible to drive a new idea having to do with film conversation into their brain with anything less than a sledge hammer. The exchange-put-in-a-slip sounds good, but is impracticable. The standard punch, used by the exchange, is better than as now, but that is saying darned little. This department has indicated the RIGHT method and does not feel inclined to suggest makeshifts. The magazine indicator, such as Telland's, and the signal-in-the-negative are the only two things we can recommend.

Improvements in Power's Machine.

This department is advised by the Nicholas Power Company that on and since April first all Power's Cameragraphs are, without addition to list price, equipped with a new style carbon known as Grip-o, glass peepholes in the upper magazine, both sides so that the operator can look right through and see how much film remains at any time, and revolving spindle in upper magazine.

All these improvements are good and will be appreciated by the projectionists. Especially will he like the glass in the upper magazine. This glass does not in the least degree reduce the fireproof qualities of the magazine.

Forest City, Pa.

Down in Forest City, Pa., is the little theater described in a recent article, which formed the basis for Samuel Rothapfel's real start in life. When I was there with Mr Rothapfel it was my good fortune to meet his, Rothapfel's, old "boss" and present father-in-law, Julius Freedman. Also the man who operated for him in the Family theater, Forest City, John Kovaleskie, who is very proud of that particular thing and who writes as follows:

Julius Freedman.

> As per your request, made while visiting our little city, I am sending my photograph. It certainly was an unexpected honor to have you with us, if for an hour or two, in this little coal camp. The visit of friend "Roxie" and yourself means to us something very much out of the ordinary. Sorry we were not able to show you a sample of our projection. We would have made you think you were in the Rialto, provided you looked at nothing but the screen. Hope soon to be in position to submit something of interest to our department. Don't forget to tell the boss about "Roxie's" wonderful first theater.

I have already done that, though not in the department. We shall be glad to hear from you when that "something of interest" materializes. I assure you it was a pleasure to meet you, friend Kovaleskie. Glad to know you are maintaining a high standard of projection. Your equipment certainly is up to date for a theater of that size and class—one Power's 6-A and one 6-B.

John Kovaleskie.

Somewhere in France.

L. S. Usher, an old department correspondent formerly of Winnipeg, Manitoba, writes interestingly and at length, and then, gosh hang him, marks it "personal." Well, of course, his wish must be respected, but I will take the liberty, for which I am sure he will forgive me, of quoting just a few lines:

> Many weary months have passed since last I addressed the old Moving Picture World. * * * Am now a Section Sergeant. * * * Want you to know I have not forgotten you. * * * Have come into contact with the Y. M. C. A. show here, and the old familiar click and arc purr has induced a spell of homesickness. * * * Am at present endeavoring to construct a spot lamp from a five-gallon oil drum, an old German machine gun, and some odds and ends. * * * French machines and theaters are fair. Have carefully observed theaters, equipment, and methods wherever I have been, and have been, except for a few isolated cases, disappointed.

> Am sending subscription to the World, so that I may keep in touch with civilization. * * * My very best to yourself and to the World.

Hope that spot works. Oil drum, machine gun, and odds and ends. Some considerable combination! Hope you'll forgive publication, as I have cut out all things you could possibly have any objection to having given publicity. Good luck, old man, and a safe and early return to God's Country.

New Electric Light Plant.

It was the privilege of the editor recently to witness the operation and to examine the mechanical construction of an electric light outfit consisting of a gasoline engine (can also use kerosine), a generator and a storage battery, all of solid, substantial and compact construction. This little plant is now being marketed by the Independent Movie Supply Company and is intended primarily to supply current for Mazda projection lamps. It is to be known as the "Imsco" generating plant. After careful examination I pronounce it a corking good set, well calculated to give good service in return for intelligent care. As will be seen by referring to figure 1, the engine is direct connected to the generator, which latter is a shunt wound I. K. W. General Electric, specially constructed for this outfit. The engine is a 4 cycle 3 h. p. at 1,200 r. p. m., has a 3" bore and a 4" stroke. It has but one cylinder. Firing current is provided by a Bosch magneto. The Schebler carburetor is used. Oiling is by splash. Coupling between engine and generator shafts is flexible, allowing armature to "float." Batteries are the "Willard," 80 ampere hour. Weight of the entire outfit, 696 pounds, including batteries; 425 without.

Figure 2 shows the switchboard. Between the ammeter (upper right hand corner) and automatic cutout (upper center) you will note a switch with projecting handle. The outfit is what Abe Kabibble would call a "Self Commencer," and this is the starting switch. Once the battery is charged, its power is used to start the engine, connection being by this switch. Just below the automatic cutout is a S. P. S. T. switch controlling the magneto ground. Opening this switch stops the motor. Engine cooling is accomplished by means of water, the coils being in the form of an automobile radiator. Circulation is by means of a small pump. The engine and generator are, of course, mounted on one frame, the rigidity of which is shown in figures 1 and 2. Figure three shows switchboard wiring. It will be noticed that both voltmeter and ammeter are provided. The various connections are shown below. At the left is the connection to the Generator negative, and immediately to the right of it the connection to the Generator positive. These are permanent connections. The "B 32" is one of the negative connections to one of the terminals of the entire battery series, B positive being the other connection. This connection supplies 32 volts for house lighting. The Mazda lamp, designed for use with this outfit, is a 25 volt, 30 ampere, 750 watt Edison T-29 lamp, and a connection is made from B 25 negative to another negative battery terminal which cuts in twelve cells, thus giving 25 volts for the Mazda projection lamp. The outfit will supply the Mazda lamp and 25 32 volt incandescent lamps for auditorium lighting.

The prime idea in the marketing of this outfit is to enable theaters to have current for incandescent projection in places where current is very poor, not available at all, or extremely expensive to secure. The manufacturers' claim is that the engine operates for one hour at full capacity on one pint of gasoline, so that the prospective customer can very easily figure out exactly what his current is going to cost him, based on the local cost of gasoline or kerosine. Where it is intended to use kerosine, a special carburetor is supplied with the outfit for the purpose of using that fuel, or at an extra charge the customer may have curburetors for both fuels.

I must compliment Mr. Rabell, president of the Independent Movie Supply Company, on the excellence of the book of instructions which goes with this outfit. It is the best of the kind I have ever seen.

White A. C. Special Carbon Excellent.

For some time this department has been carefully scanning mention found in correspondence concerning the White A. C. Special carbon being marketed by the National Carbon Company. Later we have been actively investigating the merit of the carbon in question for some weeks past. Only in a few cases has there been criticism of the White A. C. Special; on the other hand there have been many commendations by projectionists. The chief criticism has been the tendency to purple tint in the light when the arc becomes long. This is explained by the company as follows: "With regard to the purple in the light from White A. C. Special carbons, the A. C. operator has been accustomed to and obliged to pay strict attention to his arc, feeding it regularly and constantly. With the White A. C. Special, however, there is no noise until the arc becomes very long and the projectionist, overlooking the fact that an arc length of from 1/16" to ⅛" should be maintained, lets it burn to a wider gap before adjusting it, or in other words carries a longer arc than he should. It is only when the arc lengthens that the color of the light changes."

I have investigated this statement and find it to be true, hence the color objection does not hold. Purple tinge in the light is the fault of no one but the projectionist himself.

But, while a comparatively few criticisms have been received, very many more commendations of the carbon have reached us, some of them quite enthusiastic. I am therefore prepared to say that from my own investigation results from the White A. C. Special are distinctly high class; far in advance of results obtained with ordinary carbons. The light is white, excellent in tone if the arc is properly handled and very penetrating. Also the carbons last longer than ordinary carbons.

I have asked L. C. LaGrow, Ossining, New York, and John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., to test the White A. C. Special for this department. At this writing Mr. Griffiths' report is not yet at hand. LaGrow reports as follows:

> I received the White A. C. Special carbons sent by the National Carbon Company, at your request, for test. Have tried them out thoroughly and am pleased to report that these carbons are by far the best carbon I have ever used on alternating current. I, of course, expected something better than the ordinary, but they exceeded my expectations. White A. C. Special carbons are superior in many ways. A few of their main points of excellence are as follows: A perfectly white, steady (LaGrow says "non-flicker."—Ed.) illumination. Silence in burning. Uniform density—no hard spots. Crater deep, medium in size and very hot—though my thermal test was, of course, only comparative. Binder and bake excellent. Absolutely non-explosive. Installed new arc condenser at beginning of test, and to date it does not show a single "pit." Ease in holding arc. Economy in general, as they disintegrate to a very fine deposit, and very little of that. Light is truly wonderful. Bluish white and almost as steady as A. C. I cannot commend the White A. C. Special too highly.

From which you may gather that friend LaGrow likes the White A. C. Special at least tolerably well, and LaGrow's opinion is to be relied upon, but it does not follow that you, friend projectionist, can get White A. C. Special, stick them into your lamp any old way, strike an arc, lean out of the operating room window observing the scenery for five minutes at a stretch and get the results LaGrow got. Those results are gotten by projectionists who attend strictly to their business, not some of the time, but all of it.

Griffiths' report will be published later, but in view of facts already in hand I feel fully justified in giving to the White A. C. Special carbon this department's full approval and commendation, with the remark that it is up to the National Company to maintain the high standard they have set.

I feel deeply gratified in being able to make this report. When the war began there were but few projection carbons made in this country, and those few were of decidedly punk quality. Today we have two large projection carbon manufacturers in the United States, both of whom make distinctly high grade goods- goods which will compare favorably with the product the German factories were turning out before the war, and far in advance of quality of goods received from that country since the war began, and those factories gave of their skilled men to fight against us. And now we have alternating current carbons from two domestic factories, either or both of which are far in advance of anything the German factories ever turned out. And so I say we are deeply gratified at the way our factories have risen to the occasion, saw the German and went him, not one, but four or five, better. Three cheers and a tiger for The National Carbon Company and for the Speer Carbon Company. They have both put the U. S. of A. on the map for projection carbons, and by the Beard of the Prophet it's there to STAY.

Pulley Dimensions.

Kenneth C. Browne, Poughkeepsie, New York, asks:

> Will you kindly supply dimensions for taper pulleys for home-made speed control described page 279 of Handbook?

In the first place there are several excellent speed controls on the market now aside from those supplied by projection machine manufacturers. I would advise the purchase of one of them rather than the construction of one. You will find two illustrated, Figs. 115 and 116, and described in the Handbook. However, if carefully and well made the one you name will deliver the goods in good form. The pulley dimensions may vary considerably, except that both must have exactly the same slope. I am not myself quite certain as to the necessary length and slope, but most certainly five inches long, one end 2 and the other 3 inches in diameter, ought to supply sufficient speed regulation; also plenty of belt grip. But if you think not you can make them 6 inches long and 2 inches at one end by 3½ inches at the other, to use a ½ inch flat leather belt, you can purchase one from the Enterprise Optical and Mfg. Co., 564 West Randolph street, Chicago. Your pulleys may be quite close together, but that will preclude the use of a belt tightener, and you must arrange for the bearings of one of the pullies to rest in a slot, with proper arrangement for drawing it back by means of a thumbscrew to widen the distance between the pulleys and thus tighten the belt when it stretches. This is the more necessary because a leather belt will alter its length with changes in humidity of atmosphere. As I said before, if you construct the control carefully and along intelligent lines it will deliver the goods in good form. It is quite practical to make just one control and belt it to a line shaft to handle both machines, using a clutch. In this event the control may be made larger and set on the floor or a convenient shelf. Make the rollers, say, 6 inches long, same dimension (2 inches and 3¼ inches). Make your rollers of some comparatively light, fairly solid hardwood.

Speers Alterno Favorably Reported.

John Griffith, Ansonia, Connecticut, to whom the Speer Company sent sample of their new Alterno carbons for test at my request, reports as follows:

> It is with pleasure I submit my report on the "Alterno" carbons, of which the Speer Company sent me generous sample for trial at your request. I used the ¾ upper and lower with 60 amperes a. c. Found that size to be correct. Results were excellent, well justifying claims of the manufacturer. They are practically noiseless, emitting only a low humming sound, which same is not audible when projectors are running. The light seems to be of equal brilliancy, but much whiter and of a softer tone, a. c. light from ordinary carbons appearing yellow by comparison. The arc is unusually steady for an a. c. arc, and the Alterno burns to a small, concave crater having a very definite edge. The crater diameter is a trifle less than with ordinary carbons, but the crater itself is much better defined. The alterno lasts about 20 per cent. longer than ordinary carbons under the same conditions. In the test I used what is known as the "modified jack knife set, the lower carbon being parallel with the condenser plane, and the upper angled out to meet it, its incline being about 30° from vertical.

All of which is well and good. The evidence is that Speer Alterno carbons form a very satisfactory electrode for a. c., and that they are far ahead of the ordinary carbon in every respect. They have the unqualified indorsement of this department, which recommends them to users of a. c. without reservation.

Soldier Boy Called from Arizona.

March 2 Howard Threlkeld, formerly a projectionist at Flagstaff, Arizona, now of the 378th Aero Squadron, bound Franceward soon, called at our office. For the sake of the mountains and desert we still love we took him home, put him up overnight, and thoroughly enjoyed a talk over the Land of the Cactus, from whence he came. To his ex-manager and friends of Flagstaff I will say Threlkeld is looking well, also, he is quite some considerable soldier boy. Anyhow, friend daughter seemed to think so, for she kidnapped him next morning, they went downtown and we saw no more of Threlkeld until it was time to put on the evening feed-bag.

Warm Friends in the South.

Wesley Trout, projection engineer, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, writes:

> I must compliment you on your wonderful work in the department, and the way you try to help operators. Were it not for you, Friend Richardson, we would not have the projection we have today; also you should be praised for your excellent ideas on lighting systems. You have many warm friends in the South, as well as all over the country. Your lecture tour added very largely to the list. Your Handbook is something no operator should be without. The latest, Third Edition, is great. I have them all, and am very proud of them. Would not take double their price if I could not duplicate them.
> I will be with the Billboard hereafter. Leave for Cincinnati almost at once. Will send in some matter descriptive of projection along the way. Would be glad to send some of my ideas to the department if you want them.

Sure, Mike! Why not? Ideas for the advancement of the profession is what we want, and I am sure those you send in will be in that class. You did not say what line of work you were to do on the Billboard, but presumably it will be projection. If so, the Billboard is to be congratulated on having secured a progressive man and one listed among his fellow men as a darned good scout wherever you put him. To use the country editor's time-worn phrase: Oklahoma City's loss is Cincinnati's gain.

Honorary Membership for E. S. Porter.

Local Union 306, New York Motion Picture Projectionists, has elected E. S. Porter, of the Precision Machine Company, to honorary membership, in evidence of which friend Porter possesses an honorary membership card and an appropriately engraved sterling silver case in which to keep it, all of which was presented to him at the Executive Board meeting held March 12. And now, friend Porter, just remember that you are my Brother-in-I.A.-Law, and relations have the privilege of bawling each other out, borrowing money from each other, etcetera. Glad to welcome my new relative into the family; also glad you have a projectionist's card. Certainly the owner of a four-wheeled gasoline cyclone, built so low you have to crawl into it on all fours so as to lessen the wind pressure when traveling at (deleted by traffic men) miles per minute ought to hold a card of that sort. But, Brother Porter, I feel that the only time and place I could do justice to the item of welcoming you would be Sherry's, with one of those cute little du dabs beside the table, filled with cracked ice, from the summit of which projects a gold-tipped glass object—you know the kind.

Operators Win Substantial Increase.

Local Union 359, Trenton, New Jersey, has won an increase in wages amounting to 25 per cent. This increase was needed. It no more than keeps pace with increased cost in living, in fact it does not do even that. It would not, however, have been secured, had not the Trenton projectionists stuck together and the members of 359, which is a 100 per cent. organization, by the way, acted as a unit. We congratulate both the projectionists and the exhibitors of Trenton on this increase; the projectionists because the increase was due them, and the exhibitors because the increase will, in the long run, operate to their benefit and advantage to a larger value than the added outlay will amount to.

H. R. Manner is President of the Trenton union. He is a progressive man.

Pure Graphite.

There has been much trouble caused by use of graphite in intermittent movements, and many movements have been entirely ruined in this way. This is not due to the graphite itself, but to impurities contained therein. Pure graphite is one of the finest lubricants known to science. Please understand that I will not, under the circumstances, recommend the use of graphite in the intermittent, but if you presist in its use then get what is known as Deflocated Graphite from the Acheson Graphite Company, Niagara Falls, New York. This is a chemically pure graphite, and the only kind I know of which may be used for all lubrication purposes without fear of damage.

Photographers Wanted.

The Signal Corps authorizes the following statement:

One thousand men, trained in photographic work, are needed by the Signal Corps. A new school for instruction in Aerial Photography has just been opened at Rochester, N. Y., preparatory to going overseas.

This ground force for America's aerial photography requires three types of men:

1. Laboratory and dark-room experts, especially fast news photographers, familiar with developing, printing, enlarging, retouching, finishing, and panchromatic photography, who can take a plate from the airman and hand it over ten minutes later a finished enlargement to the staff officers. These men will work in motor lorries as close to the front and to the staff as possible.

2. Men able to keep the whole delicate equipment in good condition, such as camera and optical construction and repairmen, lens experts, cabinet makers, instrument makers, etc.

3. Men to fit the finished prints into their proper places in the photographic reproduction of the German front, to work out the information disclosed, and to keep the whole map a living hour-to-hour story of what the Germans are doing. This includes men familiar with map compilation, map-reading and interpretation, topographical science and drafting, and requires keen analytical powers.

The primary training at Rochester will cover four weeks, and will be standardized along the highly specialized developments brought out in the war. At its close the successful graduates will be sent on for a month of advanced training, after which they will be organized into units and sent overseas.

The best men, however, will be given still further training for commissions as Photographic Intelligence Officers first at one of the schools and then in actual flights at the flying fields.

Many men not physically fit for line service are eligible for this so-called limited military service, as defective vision corrected by glasses and other minor physical disabilities are waived. The proportion of officers and non-commissioned officers to privates will be higher here than usual, so that the opportunity for advancement is good.

Men not registered for the draft and who possess the necessary qualifications should write to the Air Division, Personnel Department, 136 K street, N. E., Washington, D. C., for information as to enlistment, accompanying their letter with evidence of their qualifications.

Men registered for the draft in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Rhode Island, and Maryland who desire to be voluntarily indicted for this service should apply to their local board and submit evidence of their qualifications. At present these are the only states to which this call applies.

Owing to the shortness of time it is requested that only men fully qualified apply for this service.

An Interesting Letter from Texas.

Motion Picture Photography Dept.:

Desire you to add my name to the correspondents' list of M. P. cameramen and will be especially pleased to hear from any one interested or engaged in any line of M. P. photography in order to exchange ideas in this kind of work. I have been a free lance worker for five years, made lots of weekly stuff and animated ads and have used nearly all makes of machines now on the market, besides several I have designed and built, and still at it.

If any of the boys own one of the old type slip claw Pathe cameras which they desire to change to a modern straight in and out pin movement, will be glad to send drawing showing how by a simple attachment they can be changed in thirty minutes to run backward and forward and never miss a frame, also to be perfectly rock steady.

I have nothing to sell in this connection and offer this little tip as a means of assisting some one to secure better results than would be possible with that old type Pathe movement. I graduated from the Bliss Electrical School in 1909 and have made a special study of static, and would like to hear from some member who is having that trouble and unable to get rid of it.

I have, however, one kick to register. Your photographic department is too small and you miss out too many weeks. Keep the good work up and, if possible, give it more space; let's have an article on printers and printing—tripod design and construction—and the thousand and one things that enter into the making of a motion picture. Seems to me that the cameraman's end of this business has been sadly neglected in favor of the projection end, when we must first secure a good picture before we can expect good projection, even though I consider the articles on projection in each issue worth many times the price of the magazine. I can appreciate them, as my operating days date back to bag take-ups and water rheostats of road-show days.

Trust that this has not taken up too much of your time.

Respectfully,
GEORGE ROY CLOUGH.

2419 Q, Galveston, Texas.

Send along a copy of your drawing illustrating how to change a slip-claw movement to an in-and-out pin movement, as it will be of interest to many and would be a valuable contribution to the department. You also hint strongly that you know of a good method preventing static; if you do let us hear from you on that subject and many readers of the department will rise up and call you blessed.

"Motion Picture Education."

By Ernest A. Dench. The Standard Publishing Co., Cincinnati, Ohio. $2.00, postpaid.

Motion pictures are playing today a constantly growing part in the education of the people. They are being used more and more in connection with the work of schools, colleges, churches, hospitals, clubs, industrial plants, technical institutions, settlement houses, playgrounds, missions, etc. The uses to which the motion picture can be put are practically inexhaustible. What are these uses? How can I employ the motion picture in my work? What will it cost? Has motion picture education any limitations?

All of the above questions—and a good many more—this book answers in a complete and practical way, besides submitting many practical suggestions for using motion pictures in new and unique ways.

The application of the scheme of motion pictures is constantly becoming greater and greater. From a beginning, which catered merely to amusement, its possibilities have become so greatly enlarged that at the present time it has become an important and almost an indispensable factor in education, science, art and commercial life. But its significance, as an aid to education, is predominant. It opens up a field the value of which the public is just beginning to appreciate.

From all departments comes the question, "How best to employ this versatile means to the best purpose." Its worth is fully established, but the best means of application to special purpose is the most pertinent consideration. What is wanted is practical information on the subject, from someone who thoroughly understands the method of exploiting it and presenting its qualifications.

The work before us by Ernest A. Dench fills this requisition adequately. Mr. Dench has worked intensively in bringing the problem to a succesful conclusion in his various publications. He is an expert in this field, and he fully appreciates the needs of those who want to make application, giving evidence of his extensive acquaintance in the pages of the present work. The book is well written and full of excellent suggestions and should be in the hands of every educator.

Look Out for Your Job, Boys!

A number of inquiries have recently come to this department from women inquiring why women could not become camera operators, and asking where they could receive the necessary instruction in order to become proficient in that line.

The war seems to have wakened the women up to a realization that if they so desire they can fill almost any position which the male sex has heretofore regarded as peculiarly its own. There is no particular reason why a woman should not become an expert camera operator; certainly, a large number of them have won considerable distinction in the field of still camera work, and we need not be surprised if in the near future we find them taking the laurels away from some of our men photographers.

The Organ a Mighty Factor in Presenting Pictures.

IN a recent issue we discussed the relative merits of the organ and orchestra for the express purpose of helping the exhibitor select a proper medium for his musical presentation, cautioning him regarding the placing of the organ, guiding him in his choice of organist and calling to his attention possible weak points in organ playing.

In an earlier issue we treated the orchestra to a close analytical inspection showing its possible flaws, also.

We desire to clearly state our position regarding both mediums of picture expression. Played together, by competent musicians, they become the highest form of picture presentation. Nothing can fill out the orchestra like an organ, neither can we find another instrument with such solo possibilities. The organ, well played, has a distinct advantage over the orchestra because of its smoothness in changing tempi and selections. No abrupt nor harsh changes of key are felt. No instrument has its varied color nor can an orchestra hope to show such swift changes of color.

We thoroughly believe in the organ, and exhibitors must not misconstrue our attitude. No disparagement of this noble instrument is meant when offering suggestions as to its use. When we use the velvet covered hammer upon some of the big orchestras, there is no rancor in the swing, but a desire for better musical results.

Be not misled. The organ is a mighty factor in the presentation of pictures. Our aim is better music for you and whatever medium you use (organ or orchestra), do it justice by procuring the best musicians available.

Light and Music.

Many exhibitors throughout the country possess beautiful theaters with the latest electrical devices. They have a perfect switchboard back stage, footlights, "spots" and "colors." They are careful to properly diffuse the light from the dome and side lamps. The exit signs receive much attention with a view to preventing a confliction of refractory rays with good projection. Orchestra lights are not allowed to affect the screen and thought is given to the screen border lest it impair the projection lighting. Still there are exhibitors who do not take advantage of these facilities in enhancing their orchestral overture.

Music's first cousin is color, and light holds inherent within it many colors. Light is seen, sound is heard, and a linking of these powerful elements brings deeper comprehension. There is no confliction of action in a simultaneous use of the eye and ear. Proper lighting is interpretative to a remarkable degree and acts instantly upon our emotions. Greater interest is created in music if accompanied by varied lighting effects, synchronized to the changes of musical moods.

Imagination is strong within us, and everyone likes to visualize a scene musically described. Each will have a different mental picture so far as the details are concerned, and it is impossible to accurately portray those details, yet a suggestion of the dominant idea is quite practical. Back drops of atmospheric designs add greatly to the general tone of the music, and if clouds, stars, etc., are projected thereon, the scene becomes very realistic. By the further use of side projectors blue and red colors can be judiciously blended for specific effects, pleasing to the eye.

The overture, "Roumanian Poem," was recently given in the Strand of New York, using as a background a drop showing a placid lake, encircled with foliage. With the stage lights up the orchestra began the number. Slowly the lights faded, twilight came and blended into night. The moon rose from behind the foliage, clouds gathered, effacing the moon, and the storm began. Back-stage traps portrayed the thunder and rain while a side projector flashed lightning upon a dark stage. As the music rose higher, the flashing became more frequent and brighter; the thunder roared louder and the rain fell more heavily. As the music died down the thunder became more faint and gradually the storm ceased. The stage lights came up and later the entire theater was flooded with brightness typical of the sunlight again.

In the presenting of the "Blue Bird" at the Rivoli, Mr. Rothapfel opened with a drop made to take the form of a huge and barren mountain of untold height. It was a sombre drab gradually turning to blue. As the orchestra worked into a lighter vein, the sun slowly crept over the mountain top, diffusing a red glow. The screen descending brought that red down with it, which meant much to the thought behind it. Happiness frequently is brought down to our plane if our hearts are ready to receive it.

Another theater used the screen as an additional aid to put over "William Tell" Overture. With house lights full and stage lights up the andante movement opened the overture. Gradually the dimmer brought the lights down as the movement progressed until the entire theater was in utter darkness when the orchestra reached the allegro. Then the storm began, intermittently at first, but increasing in force. Lightning flashed and thunder rolled. At this instant, a picture showing a dilapidated homestead being deluged with rain was projected upon the screen.

This made a pretty effect and concentrated the attention of the audience. As the storm died down the rain slowly diminished in the picture, the sun came out, and while the orchestra proceeded into the andante, we saw the sheep coming over the horizon. The scene was held until the finish of the movement, which brought the sheep and shepherd into a close-up, and faded out.

Immediately the allegro vivace was picked up by the orchestra. The lights slowly came up, and as the overture ended in a grand finale the theater was flooded with light. It provided real entertainment of a high-class order.

Nothing can be overlooked in the proper presentation of pictures, nor can one afford to merely depend upon the overture in its natural and usual form to win pleased patrons. Special lighting effects are comparatively inexpensive in operation and are within the reach of even the small exhibitor. The theater is a place of entertainment, primarily, and must keep pace in every department with the upward march of progress. Patrons look for novelties, and when you can give it to them in the form of an enhanced performance, thoughtfully prepared and brilliantly carried out, it is suicidal to overlook your opportunity.

Music at the Rialto.

Some shows are spectacular, some are grandiloquent, others are beautiful, but the performance given at the Rialto theater during the week commencing April 14 was decidedly PRETTY.

The overture, selections from Giaconda, was played as if every note meant something, and the usual excellent conducting of Hugo Reisenfeld accounted for it. The Rialto Chorus joined in the finale, and though adding little to the volume of sound, made a very pretty picture in their operatic costumes. This number was well received by the audience.

"The Clang of the Forge," rendered by Greek Evans, dressed as a blacksmith, was well staged, having the assistance of the Rialto Male Chorus and wonderful lighting effects. The first performance of this number showed need of a rehearsal in the ensemble singing and took away a degree of credit that should have gone to Mr. Evans. He possesses a wide range and pleases his listeners immensely. His stage presence is especially good.

Gloria Gale sang "It is Only a Tiny Garden," by Haydn Wood, very sweetly. She has a pleasing voice and looks pretty.

Sandwiched into the show in a careless manner, seemingly, but for that very carelessness, effective, was an old folk-song, "In the Gloaming." The Rialto Chorus sang this number inconspicuously seated about the fringe of the orchestra. It is a song loved by everybody and was sung well. The lighting effects were especially good; distinctly a la Rothapfel.

Mr. Rothapfel is gradually drawing away from the big operatic arias and getting closer to the hearts of the people by the introduction of the beautiful old songs. It is especially appropriate at this time of war and clamor that a few of those simple, yet kindly, melodies should soothe the bleeding hearts about us. They are typically American and breathe patriotism in their very simplicity. We must have entertainment; the quieter the better.

The musical setting to the feature was a bit disappointing. Vivian Martin in "Unclaimed Goods" was as dainty as ever, while the story was good. Numbers of Western scenes and beautiful landscapes created great opportunities for music; not big stuff, but melodious and dainty melodies. There were too many one-steps played to suit us. The agitatos were too long, and the Indian number used to indicate the atmosphere of a Western mining town, was out of place. We expected to see Indians, but only heard their music. By the greatest stretch of the imagination we could not think Mr. Rothapfel fitted this picture. The theme "Dearie" was most appropriate, and the scenes selected for its use could not be improved upon, but why does such a magnificent body of musicians continue to play cheap "hurrys"? Let the little fellow play them. They meet his requirements and can be easily played, but from the Rialto Symphony Orchestra we expected something better.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

BIGGEST SHOW ON EARTH, THE (Paramount—Five reels)—Theme —Moderato. Suggest "Circus Day in Dixie" or "At the Hamlet" —Godard.

This is distinctly circus atmosphere, and would suggest using "A Day with the Circus"—Lampe, and "County Fair"—Armand. Lots of work for the drummer to get lion roars, cracking of whip, etc. Many marches, two-steps and fox-trots are needed. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

CONQUERED HEARTS (Ivan Film Co.—Eight reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "A Little Song"—Erdody, "Last Dream of the Virgin"—Massenet, or "Even Song"—Martin.

Open with "Old Timers" by Lake, as it fits the situation as no other piece will. Dramatic music is needed throughout. Note the direct cue for "There's a Long, Long Trail," by Elliott. Catch the Egyptian Dance and use Ballet Egyptian No. 2, by Luigini. A couple of marches and two-steps are needed. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Ivan exchange.

HAND AT THE WINDOW, THE (Triangle—Five reels).—Theme for the Hero—Andante. Suggest "Nina"—Tanara, or "A Night in Venice"—Tanara.

The story holds Italian atmosphere, but takes place in America. Use as many folk songs as possible, such as "Marguerite," "Amuri Amuri" and "O Sole Mio." Dramatic pieces will find a place, but hurrys are not needed. Note the direct cue for "Home, Sweet Home," in the last reel. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle exchange.

HOOPS OF STEEL (Paralta—Six reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Melody D'Amour"—Hurst, "Claire de Lune"—Thome, or "Extase"—Ganne.

The atmosphere is Western throughout and the story dramatic. A couple of Spanish numbers can be used in the scenes of the Spanish half-breed woman. "Hansel Und Gretel," by Humperdinck, will suit the children's scene. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paralta exchange.

LOVE-BROKERS, THE (Triangle—Five reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Love Song"—Flegier, "Dream of the Flowers"—Cohen, or "Elysium"—Speaks.

This is a society drama and needs big stuff; no hurry required. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle exchange.

MASKS AND FACES (World—Six reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Gavotte. Suggest "Frills and Furbelows"—Crespi.

The atmosphere is old English and would suggest the use of "Songs from Shakespeare's Time"—Borch and "Sounds from England"—Langey, "The Wind that Shakes the Barley." Note the violin solo bits throughout this picture. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle Exchange.

MRS. SLACKER (Pathe—Five reels).—Theme for the Heroine—Andante. Suggest "Roma"—Edwards, "Rosemary"—Elgar, or "Serenade"—Titt'l.

The picture is dramatic, with a patriotic touch. Use "Over There" in the second reel and open the fifth reel with a pathetic. Note the storm effects, but don't overdo them. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathe Exchange.

PRIMITIVE WOMAN, THE (Triangle—Five reels).—No theme necessary.

Many pastorales are needed for this outdoor picture. Light serenades and waltz intermezzos will be most appropriate as fill-ins. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle Exchange.

SOCIETY FOR SALE (Triangle—Five reels).—Theme—Andante. Suggest "By the River"—Morse, "Bagatelle"—Heimendahl, or "Daffodils"—Carvel.

The atmosphere is English, and old English airs can be used nicely. The picture is light society comedy. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle Exchange.

THE LAW OF THE GREAT NORTHWEST (Triangle—Five reels).—Theme—Andante Sostenuto. Suggest "Romance from King Manfred"—Reinecke, "Reverie"—Rissland, or "Twilight"—Cesek.

This is a story about the Northwest, rich in Indian atmosphere. It would be well to play an Indian characteristic as a second theme for Monast. Note the fight in the third reel, requiring a short agitato, and the fight in the last for the same length. Much pastorale music is needed, and would suggest:

"Whispering Flowers"—Intermezzo—Blon.
"Canzonetta"—Moderato—Nicode.
"Forest Whispers"—Gavotte—Losey.
"Rustles of Spring"—Allegro—Sinding.

Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle Exchange.

TYRANT FEAR (Paramount—Five reels).—Theme—Andante. Suggest "On the Banks of the Saskatchewan"—Caryll, or "Meditation"—Williams.

This is a Canadian story, and by using "Carillon March"—Laurendeau—you will establish the character at screening. Furioso in first reel, dramatic tension and fox-trot in second, dramatic tension in the third, and agitato in fourth. Note church chimes in first and fourth reel. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

WHITE MAN'S LAW, THE (Paramount—Five reels).—Theme—Andante and Oriental. Suggest "Arabian Serenade"—Langey, "Serenata"—Tarenghi, or "Moresque"—Lack.

The atmosphere is East Indian and needs Oriental setting. This picture is dramatic and requires big stuff. Haendel's Largo will fit nicely just before the close of the picture. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

WHO KILLED WALTON (Triangle—Five reels).—Theme—Andagio. Suggest "Prelude"—Chopin, "Rhapsodie"—Stieger, or "Where Blooms the Rose."—Johns.

A light drama with the following twists—Restaurant scene in second reel requiring Valse Lento; cabaret scene in third reel requiring rag music. Shortly after a Spanish intermezzo is needed and a popular two-step in the last reel. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle Exchange.

UNCLAIMED GOODS (Paramount—Five reels).—Theme for the Heroine—Andante. Suggest "Dearie," "Sweet Ponderings"—Langey, or "Twilight"—Ayer.

There is a western atmosphere to this picture, but no Indian music is needed. The story is light and pretty. Choose dainty stuff except for the fight scenes in the fourth and fifth reels. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

Leaders Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q.—"I am an exhibitor and try to put my show over with good music. My leader repeats continually, and tells me as his excuse that he plays just what the cue sheet calls for. How can I get relief?"

A.—"Investigate his library and ascertain whether he has it properly classified for quick action. It looks to us as if it was not so much a matter of cue sheets as laziness."

Q.—"How can I procure a good organist capable of playing the pictures properly?"

A.—"Tell us how much you can pay and we can supply one. The Wurlitzer Organ Company of New York or J. P. Seeburg Piano Company of Chicago always have capable men ready to go to work."

Q.—"I noticed your classification of instruments in a recent issue of The Moving Picture World, such as 'strings,' 'wood-wind,' etc. To what section does piano belong?"

A.—"The piano is not originally an orchestral instrument, but in view of the fact that the harp is placed in the 'string' section and the piano usually does the same work in a smaller combination, we suppose it should be classified under the same head."

Q.—"What is the difference between snare and kettle drum?"

A.—"Snare drums are side drums, across the lower head of which are stretched several gut strings—the 'snares'—whose jarring against the head reinforces the tone; while kettle drums consist of a hollow brass or copper hemisphere (the kettle) resting on a tripod, with a head of vellum stretched by means of an iron ring and tightened by a set of screws. These are usually known as timpani."

Q.—"Are the musicians in symphony orchestras placed to conform with any set rule, or are the various sections so arranged at the conductor's pleasure? Are house acoustics taken into consideration?"

A.—"House acoustics are not taken into consideration. The usual form of the placing of players in a symphony orchestra is as follows: on the left of the conductor are the first violins, backed up by the bassi and harp; in front are the 'cello, backed by the wood-wind; while on the right are the second violins and violas, backed by the brass, and beyond are the drums and timpani. Sometimes the double basses are placed far back in the front, especially if it is a large orchestra, and once in a while you will find the harp on the extreme right if the drums are also in the front at the rear."

Q.—"Who wrote Pershing's March and where can it be purchased?"

A.—"Pershing's March was written by A. S. Watt, and is published by the Astoria Publishing Company, 505 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Q.—"Has the Paramount discontinued scores for their special productions? Is one available for 'The Blue Bird'?"

A.—"Paramount has discontinued scores for all their productions owing to the lack of support given by the exhibitor. It was announced that James R. Bradford was to write and arrange special orchestral score for 'Blue Bird,' but for some reason the promise was not fulfilled."

Q.—"In combination of piano, violin and 'cello, should the pianist keep strictly to piano part or 'cue-in' other parts when possible so as to make the orchestra sound fuller?"

A.—"By all means have the pianist play all of the cued parts which are not handled by the other instruments."

Q.—"Many times my patrons complain that they hear the same music repeated so often. I am not a musician and would not know if my leader were guilty of the offense. What can I do?"

A.—"There are two ways to handle the situation. Get a musical friend to sit in at each change of show and note the repetition, or arrange with your leader to give you a list of his selections each week. They can readily be checked up."

Q.—"We have an organ of the ——— brand in our theater. The pipes are situated on either side of the auditorium and those seated near them get the full benefit of the noise without music. In the back or in the centre it sounds all right. What is the reason for this?"

A.—"The acoustic properties of your house were evidently overlooked in the misplacing of your organ. Nothing can be done unless you change the pipes. Behind or around the proscenium arch is generally regarded as the proper place for them."

Q.—"Because of additional numbers, recently bought, my library must be re-classified to be of value. Give me an idea of the best system to adopt."

A.—"List your music under characteristic heads, number each piece, beginning with No. 1 in each set, then catalogue them alphabetically, according to (1) movement, (2) character and (3) composer.

"See our article upon 'Classification of Your Library,' in the March 9th issue of the Moving Picture World, page 1373. You can procure this number by sending us 19 cents, if you are unable to get it from the files of your employer."

Hadley Completing a Cinema-Symphony

Photodrama Will Be Accompanied by Music That Will Tell a Story Identical With That on Screen.

COMBINING equally for the first time the highly developed descriptive power of music with the newer art of story telling by pictures, Hopp Hadley is completing the first symphony for motion pictures or, as he calls it, a Cinema-Symphony.

The new idea picture is in five reels, and is, when seen upon the screen without the music, similar to any high-class photodrama with novel artistic photographic effects. When seen with the orchestra playing the symphony, however, the photographic effects take on a special significance, as they tell in pictures the part of the story which only a lover of music would be able to follow in the orchestration. Also the action of the story and the strains of music are found to bear a closer relation than in the ordinary picture with a regulation orchestra accompaniment.

Mr. Hadley, who has been closely identified with the theatrical and motion picture business for many years, having been a theatrical manager before entering the motion picture business as scenario editor of the Majestic and Reliance Companies in the old studio on West Twenty-first street when single reels were features, has always taken a keen interest in the development of a closer relation betwen pictures and music, as he has been a violinist of more than ordinary ability since childhood.

He gives Strauss' Symphonia Domestica (Domestic Symphony) the credit for keeping his thoughts on the subject until Cinema-Symphony took form in his mind and also for convincing him that, once correctly worked out, its popularity with both lovers of pictures and music would be assured. He reasons that picture audiences will be more deeply stirred by the drama without realizing why, while music lovers will get the full benefit of the double entertainment.

Strauss' domestic symphony tells a complete story in music: Three characters are introduced; the father, the mother and the child, and it is said the action may be followed as easily as if it were told in words or given in pantomime.

For the first Cinema-Symphony, Hopp Hadley saw the necessity of finding a subject especially well adapted to the idea. It came to his hand unexpectedly two months ago and he has been working on it ever since with the result that he hopes to announce its definite release in a few days. He claims that the story is on a par with that of any feature production and that it is made stronger by the fact that the original music which accompanies it and which the story in turn illustrates, is given equal prominence with the drama; each dominating in turn—the nature of the action determining when the burden of stirring the emotions shall fall most heavily upon the music and when the music shall act only as a support.

Reasoning that the importance of music in the presenting of photodramas is now generally recognized, many of the most successful theater managers having made their music a prominent feature of their programs with excellent box office results, Mr. Hadley thinks that the producers and distributors have not kept pace with the exhibitors in this respect and looks forward to the day when music will come into its own and be considered as necessary to pictures as the actors.

PICTURES FOR MAN-O'-WARSMEN AT SEA.

Through the efforts of the War Camp Motion Picture Committee the various ships of the navy on which there is motion picture equipment will be enabled to obtain supplies of recent pictures for their use while at sea. The Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department has asked the committee for several hundred complete schedules of exchanges for distribution through the Navy Department, and they have been forwarded. Price lists with special rates for entertainments while the boats are in port are also being furnished, together with detailed information as to methods of securing motion picture programs to take to sea. The War Camp Committee has requested the Army and Navy Commissions on Training Camp Activities to furnish the Navy Department with the bulletin lists of pictures selected by the National Board of Review for the Commissions. This will make it practicable for the chaplains on board more than two hundred ships to visit the exchanges nearest the ports of landing of their vessels and obtain such pictures as they desire.

Rolfe Severs Active Connection with Metro

While Retaining Financial Interest in Company Will Make Eight Productions a Year—Florence Reed Engaged.

A STATEMENT from B. A. Rolfe says that he has severed his active connections with the Metro company, although retaining his financial interest, in order that he may devote his entire time to a producing company which he has recently formed and which he has been working on for some months past.

It is the plan of Mr. Rolfe's company to make about eight super-features a year featuring stars of known box-office value in really high-class productions which will not have to depend on the player's drawing power alone to receive a welcome. Mr. Rolfe will supervise all direction and production and says he already has under contract a number of authors and scenario writers.

The first name to be announced in the list of stars for the new company is that of Florence Reed. For her photoplays special material will be secured, the features given a high-class production in every way and will be as nearly perfect as money and brains can make them.

Mr. Rolfe states that announcements as to other stars and matters of interest will be forthcoming within the next week or two.

Great College to Teach Scenario Writing

Class Started at University of California Will Study Script-Building at Tivoli Opera House.

THE University of California has given official recognition to scenario writing as a profession and a class is now being enrolled at the San Francisco office of the University Extension Division, 62 Post street. The T. & D. Tivoli Opera House has been chosen as the classroom for the course, which will be commenced at an early date. Both morning and evening classes will be given and an opportunity will be presented to those having ideas for good moving pictures to learn how to place them in the form of salable manuscripts.

A course of fifteen lectures will be given by Earl Snell, formerly with the California Motion Picture Corporation, and more recently scenario writer for Beatriz Michelena. As soon as a working foundation is laid the study will be confined largely to an analysis of photoplay successes, which will be projected for the benefit of the class. In some instances the selected pictures will be supplemented by portions of the actual scenarios from which they were produced. Many prominent scenario writers have indorsed the course, among these being C. Gardner Sullivan, and the initial enrollment is very satisfactory.

FARNUM MAKES PICTURE FOR BOND CAMPAIGN.

One hundred and twenty prints of a smashing Liberty film in which William Farnum, Fox star, plays the principal role, have just been requested by William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, for use in floating the Third Liberty Loan. For more than a month Farnum, his director, Frank Lloyd, and their company of picture players have been utilizing every spare moment at Hollywood, in the production of the film, which is said to be a striking argument for national support of the Liberty Loan in addition to being a highly interesting feature aside from its patriotic aspect.

Arrangements are being made for distribution of the copies through the twelve Federal Reserve state committees throughout the United States.

Grinding the Crank

With Thornton Fisher

This Kind of a Guy Is---Hairoil

FLORIDA, U. S. A., April 8, 1918.—It was indeed an effort to locate Mr. Hairoil, the famous film man, but after a protracted search through the Everglades and scrub palms we at last succeeded in discovering him aboard his skiff "The Mary P. Oyster." We wanted to learn from his own lips the reason why everybody in the industry loves him. What have been the factors in his make-up that cause the birds and bees and things to make a confidant of Mr. Hairoil?

So after bearding the lion in his lair, so to speak, we sought an answer to these interrogations. He was fishing at the time of our arrival and as we approached the famous film developer we breezily inquired if "anything was biting." "Yes, the mosquitoes," he quickly returned in that repartee for which he is so justly renowned. At his answer the assistant interviewer fell out of the boat and into the water roaring with laughter. Mr. Hairoil is noted for his instantaneous thinking. He is the man to whom the Moon Picture Corporation gives all the credit for the success of the organization. Mr. Lemonpeel, the president of the company, says that if it was not for the exceptional manner in which Mr. Hairoil develops the pictures the company would be wearing patches on the seat of its pants. Such a statement coming from a man of Mr. Lemonpeel's calibre is significant. You would love Horatio Hairoil. The only person we found who doesn't is his wife. However, let us resume. Mr. Hairoil has been down in Florida for the past two weeks recharging himself for the strenuous duties of the coming year. Incidentally, he has been kidding the fishes.

"Where were you born?" we asked the celebrated wizard of the films.

"Let me see," he mused, "I think it was Covington, Kentucky, or maybe—no, on second though I believe it might have been Superior, Wisconsin."

"How old were you when you learned to whistle through your teeth, Mr. Hairoil?" we interrogated.

"Ah, those happy days of boyhood," whispered the great film developer. Whereupon he extracted an old, faded photo from his hip pocket and parried our question with one of his own asking. "Does this picture resemble Horatio Hairoil at whom you are now looking?" We gazed long and intently at the turned-up pantaloons and the merry eyes of a boy of perhaps thirteen who almost eclipsed by a huge straw sombrero was wading a stream. Try as we would we could not identify the great man as the freckled-face country lad in the picture.

"Surely this photo of bygone days does not look like the celebrated Horatio Hairoil of today," we ventured.

"Well, it isn't," said he, as he replaced the photo in his jeans. We had been completely taken in by Mr. Hairoil in one of his light vacation moods.

"Mr. Hairoil," we again asked, "do you believe that the idiosyncrasies of the star should be shown in pictures?"

"No," he almost shouted (just like that), "No!" "We use to could," he continued, "but you can't get away with that stuff with the censors nowadays." Finally we got around to that inevitable question and felt that Mr. Hairoil might have an interesting opinion concerning it, so we put the question pointedly: "Mr. Hairoil, what do you think about the war?" Instantly he asked, "What war?"

By thus questioning him one discovers those subtle qualities in him that cause him to be loved and followed by the squirrels in the park where he takes his morning run.

All great men who have attained Mr. Hairoil's distinction have ever had before them some sound slogan of success such as "Never put off 'til tomorrow what you can do today" or "Honesty is the best policy." We wanted to learn for ourselves the pet inspirational phrase of Mr. Hairoil so we asked him to enlighten us. It was short but characteristic of the man. His favorite phrase is "Here's how."

His early years in business were unconsciously years of preparation for his present elvated position in the picture field. For two years he was a barber in Ft. Wayne, Indiana, but his ambition led him to seek richer pastures for the distribution of his talents and endeavors so he procured an engagement as lunch counter man in the Cumberland Railway Depot. He made himself conspicuous in that position by his unerring skill in shooting crullers and sandwiches across the counter to customers in less time than any other lunch man in the place. Such talent as this had to be reckoned with, so he went east on a freight train, for, as he explained, he could not stand the stuffiness of the ordinary coach. That was six years ago. Today—well, everyone in the business knows Hairoil. Why does everybody love him? What has made him the object of affection of all who come in contact with him? There can remain but one answer, and it is this: the color of his socks. Such a man is Hairoil.

The Trouble with the Film Columnists

By a Press Agent

Remarks Which Seem More or Less Remotely Related to Something Recently Said by Our Newark Contributor

SOME of the more recently ordained film columnists have a lot of fun panning the press agents. But we press agents have a lot of fire trouble with the papers, too. And we recognize these complaints as signs of film verdancy —otherwise evidence of the starting of the film season for the columnist. The film columnists start out with the premise that we depend upon them and that they have space to protect rather than to fill judiciously.

I believe that the film columnists depend far more on our copy than we do on their space. I may lose my job for saying this—if the boss sees it—for there has long been a notion that we depend on the good-will of the papers. But if the worst came to the worst and the film columnists cut us out altogether I feel certain that we could still wiggle along and produce pictures and sell them at good prices to the exhibitors.

I may be a press agent; but I have also done time at a newspaper desk; and in a film magazine office as well. So I know something of both sides of the story. I have faced the raging horde of press agents when they had stuff to offer and I had space to fill and many's the time they have given me a tip on a good story that I was glad to get.

The trouble with a lot of the film columnists is that they know nothing about their work and care less. These are the ones who are apt to do the most complaining. The conscientious ones work hard to fill their columns and appreciate the help of the press agent. When the G. M. of the paper decides on a film column, the city editor remembers one of the chaps who has been known to attend a motion picture show, calls him over and tells him he is the new film editor. "Make it peppy, old man," he says, and forgets all about it.

The new film editor makes a virtuous roar all over the office about having more work hung on him when he is the only one around the office who works, anyhow, and then asks everybody but the copy boy how to get stuff for his first column. And he is glad enough of the dope sheets from the press agents then. It is only after he has been on the job a week or so, gets free tickets for all the picture shows and languidly tacks up a lot of star pictures around his desk for the other fellows to exclaim over that he begins to put on dog and assume that the press agents fear him.

As a matter of fact, in nine cases out of ten, he could not write half as good stuff as the press agents put out. But it takes a twenty-five-dollar-a-week film columnist to criticise the work of a hundred-dollar-a-week press agent. All film editors demand "short, snappy, interesting stuff with a local flavor." But they really don't know what they do want. They have the old-fashioned newspaper idea of having an "exclusive." And with four or five hundred newspaper and magazine editors to supply with pictures and press stuff, you know, we can hardly give each of them "exclusive stuff with the local viewpoint."

If the film columnist were really interested in his job, he would realize that it is a part of his work to know the picture companies, the stars and the pictures, by name, just as the political editor knows every inch of the political situation in his department. No other writer on the paper would sit at his desk and complain of the press agents who supplied him with all the dope from which to get his rewrite —the other writers sort of expect to get out every day and do a little work on the street as well as at their desk.

When I was a film editor I kept a filing cabinet. When publicity was received from the motion picture concerns I filed all that might come handy, together with pictures and other press matter. When I needed data for a story I had it right at hand—and did not denounce the press agent because it was not written to my liking. I rewrote it to my own purpose. Of course, that meant work; but I did not belong to the afternoon Kelly-pool club or the bowling alley bunch nor did I have to hurry to sit in on the meeting of the strategy board at Finley's bar at four-thirty every afternoon.

I have observed a few of these film columnists at work. The usual method of procedure is to wait until the last minute, hastily run over the disorderly bunch of press stuff on the desk, clip like mad to fill a column, write in a few heads—and shoot it out to the composing room, with sarcastic remarks on the fool press agents who had done the real work. When the papers use my own stuff verbatim, as they often do, I do not take any credit for it. I realize that it is merely that when the foreman yelled down that he was short a stick on that fillum stuff and my press matter lay handy in plain view it went up "as is."

When pictures go out from my office, as from most offices, they bear on the back the name of the company, the picture and the star, and are accompanied with a printed synopsis of the story. The film columnist promptly throws away the pictures, drops the synopsis into the waste basket and when he has to write a review of this picture he curses the press agent on general principles for not having the stuff ready to hand. With four or five hundred pictures to go to a like number of editors we are not going to stop to print a general history of the star on the back of each—it is up to the film columnist to have that in his filing cabinet.

The trouble with the film columnist is that he wants a lot of distinctive pictures of beautiful stars to tack up in his gallery, while we press agents are enthused with the thought that our company is producing pictures at considerable cost to bring to the attention of the exhibitors for the clamoring populace. And we pay for every notice we get in the papers, mind you. Don't forget that. Go down and have a heart to heart talk with the business end of the paper and with the exhibitors if you don't believe it.

Some day the press agent will rise and tell the other side of the story, Mr. Just and Fair. And don't you get us started, for if we once begin to tell what we know about the other side—Oh Boy!

Brooklyn's Biggest Picture House Opens May 1

Embodies Every Essential to Comfort and Convenience—To Be Named the Brevoort, and Will Seat 2,500.

IN one of the most thickly populated residential sections of Brooklyn, one of the largest motion picture theaters in Greater New York City has been built, and will open on May 1. It is located on the corner of Bedford avenue and Brevoort place, one block south of Fulton street, Brooklyn's main business artery.

The exterior construction is of tapestry brick and limestone of artistic design and imposing appearance. The lobby is finished in polished marble, with large mirrors and ornamental tiling, which, with the liberal electric lighting, make a most attractive entrance to still greater attractions inside.

On the mezzanine floor is a promenade foyer, with alcove, waiting and lounging rooms, open fire-places and other architectural considerations. Smoking rooms for men and retiring rooms for women have received most careful attention to make them as homelike and comfortable as possible.

It will seat 2,500 persons comfortably in the most up-to-date opera chairs of full size and modern upholstery. Loge boxes in the balcony, beautifully furnished, to accommodate those who wish to indulge in their evening smoke and witness the performance. These boxes are provided with every convenience, even to the minutest detail, such as the complete outfit of the smokers' tables. Every seat affords an uninterrupted view of the screen, as the auditorium is without pillars and built on the amphitheatre plan. The ventilation is of the typhoon order, supplying a transmission of fresh air continually, sustaining an even temperature according to requirements.

The mural decorations are both artistic and chaste, after designs made by the best artists of this country. Draperies for the proscenium and boxes harmonize with the general theme of coloring, making the whole most delightful and restful. A complete symphony orchestra will furnish a musical program of the choicest selections, as well as special scores to suit the character and tempo of the pictures shown. In short, neither pains nor money has been spared by the architect and the Brevoort Holding Company, by whom the theater was built, to make the Brevoort theater a monument and a credit to Brooklyn. The projectors of the Brevoort are A. H. Schwartz and H. C. Miner, both well-known promoters of theatrical enterprises.

A Modern Picture Director's Problems

By Hanford C. Judson

R. A. Walsh, of the Fox Film Company, Talks to World Representative About His Job

IT is interesting rather than strange that so many of the really competent motion picture directors of today, and of these Raoul A. Walsh, of the Fox Film Company, is beyond caviling among the ablest, have like him learned their art under David Wark Griffith. Mr. Walsh says picture making is particularly an American art. In the first place an American is naturally an outdoor man and making pictures is an outdoor job.

Mr. Walsh got deeper into the spirit of the matter in that quick statement than he perhaps fully realized on the instant. Not only are pictures taken out of doors, but they have the outdoors spirit; they are free and unafraid like outdoor men. It is not that they have no laws to follow; but they follow real laws like democrats. Among all the arts picture-making is the real democrat.

Raoul A. Walsh.

Mr. Walsh shows that he is in tune with this spirit by his acknowledgment of the sources of his inspiration. He is never outside of the crowd. He is not like a man finding something in himself which he makes and shows to the crowd; but is a part of the crowd expressing what the crowd thinks. This is why pictures made by him and others like him have such an astonishing success.

I asked him why so many would-be directors fail. I could see that the subject was not one he had pondered over and wasn't wholly pleasing. He answered doubtfully, "I don't know; perhaps they didn't have the right training." I don't hesitate to say that in the back of his mind was a recognition of his own eye-opening experience of watching Griffith work. He was partly right. His memory shot a glance back over the work of many men. He saw apprenticeship blunders, lack of continuity, things used again that were once fine in another picture, and all the gaucheries. Yet not all who have worked with Griffith have attained mastery. The essence of failure in making pictures is more likely due to lack of understanding the spirit of the art. Some will reach understanding, some never will. Mr. Walsh broke in with the right answer: "They don't make pictures commercially. They like to make one kind of picture and they keep on making that kind of picture." That seems to get right into the heart of the trouble. They lack sympathy enough with the crowd to be like the crowd, multifarious and eager for all kinds of life and experience, rich in goods that can't be stored in a warehouse.

One of the qualities of Mr. Walsh's work is that it reflects contemporary life. His "The Pride of New York" of last winter expressed the chief concern of everybody last autumn when the young drafted men were being called to the colors to be commanded by the Plattsburgers. Would the boys be well led? we were asking, and the picture showed that behind the Plattsburgers were the competent regular army men with experience, choosing good leaders and releasing the poor ones, choosing good material from the drafted men and making the American Army such as it really is today. It was just a story, not a bit of propaganda in it; yet it was comforting and valuable as a patriotism-maker to the last degree.

Again more recently Walsh's "Woman and the Law" followed a trial that had attracted everybody's attention. It was a well-rounded melodrama; yet no one could find fault with it as a report except perhaps in the coloring of the characters, and this to no great degree. Mr. Walsh is an artist. His imagination sees meaning in things that happen and he is bound to express that meaning. The exact color of the characters is not important, beside the things that the characters reacting together are setting forth as a part of modern life.

Mr. Walsh never uses a scenario, and that may be one of the reasons why the continuity of his pictures is so often clear-cut. In the first place it is almost impossible for him to begin on a picture till he has digested it, till he knows just what he wants. In the process of reaching this while the theme is held fluid in him his mind must be looking at it all the time in the same attitude as a spectator.

A spectator hates irrelevant impositions and likewise the very burden of clarifying his conception must work to keep a director from admitting anything that hinders the result. Experience has taught Walsh how much he will need of any one thing and also how easy it is for the central theme of his story to get out of focus due, it may be, to his own immediate interest in some sidelight scene, so he never permits his mind to sit down and rest on the cushion of a written script. He carries the whole plot alive and fluid in him through every scene and then in the editing. He writes his own sub-titles and does his own cutting. No one but him touches the product and no one touches it half-heartedly.

Even the players do not know what the result will be. They are not dramatists. He doesn't want them to work consciously or unconsciously to affect the final sum. He tells them what he needs for the moment and he molds the reaction of one character on another as a sculptor thumbs the damp modelling clay, changing the expression of the cheeks and eyes to go with the smile on the lips. In a big scene with hundreds of players where he can't be in all places at once he depends on a corps of able assistants. They have worked with him for years and know his mind. He saves his voice. A signal to them is enough.

In smaller scenes he is close to his medium. Here he must be even more than an artist. They are human beings, willing enough to make the picture, and he has got to keep them willing. He has to work through their minds as they would work of their own volition. A motion picture director, he says, must have a very quick response to the intuition that comes from suggestions in the work as it progresses. Imagination shows him what he wants; he has to know how to get it immediately. The same conditions that suggested the desired thing to him are working on all, and the moment when it can be got surest is soon gone. This quickness comes largely from training and is a knowledge born of experience that tells him how to get what he wants.

Finally he impressed on me this, that few realize to what extent the films are standing behind the Allies today by clarifying the air. The Kaiser's propaganda uses a whispered word in the dark. It works in secret; is whispered again and grows like contagion. Against this is the open picture. It is seen by millions and is incontrovertible. Without films insidious propaganda today would be almost unconquerable.

Mr. Walsh in his office being interviewed is quite a different person from R. A. Walsh, the director. In the office he is reserved, almost shy. He doesn't talk freely. Surely he doesn't pose and even presents himself at a disadvantage. But walk into his studio with a big scene on and hundreds of players, you get at once an impression of order. There is a quiet man walking about or standing on the camera platform. He seems bigger physically; there's a different look on his face. Everything moves at his voice or gesture. You recognize mastership, it isn't thrust at you.

Wallach Arrives in New York

Foreign Representative of North American Motion Pictures, Inc., Discusses Present Conditions in the South American Market.

H. STAUNTON WALLACH, general South American manager for the North American Motion Pictures, Inc., arrived in New York from Buenos Aires two weeks ago and will probably be on his way back about the time this issue goes to press.

Mr. Wallach's experience in the film business and the rapid strides made by his company during the past year give considerable weight to his opinion on the Latin-American markets. Buying agencies have been established in New York for practically every important exchange doing business in the Southern republics, and this department keeps in pretty close touch with the men in charge, but there are a few points, such as the evolution toward American pictures, the inauguration of continuous performance theaters, and the outlook for 1918, that we wished to discuss with a representative American film man fresh from those territories. Needless to say, we grasped the opportunity as soon as Mr. Wallach walked into the office of the Moving Picture World.

H. Staunton Wallach.

"One of the first things I noticed upon my arrival in Buenos Aires about three and a half years ago," said Mr. Wallach, "was the chaotic condition of the film business. At that time the market was being flooded with second-hand film, mostly of European make, and such a thing as a first-run house had never been thought of. The public was antipathetic—a great proportion of it, in fact, antagonistic on account of this cheap second-hand stuff. It did not take me long to arrive at the conviction that if a North American program, made up of selected pictures, were put on the market, it would be the means of obtaining a rapid change for the better.

"With this idea as a basis, I came up to the United States about two years ago for the purpose of organizing the company known today as the North American Motion Pictures, Inc. A few months later our campaign was launched in Buenos Aires with a complete program, and, modesty apart, I believe that our company is entitled to some of the credit due to every pioneer. Our efforts blazed the trail for the American manufacturer, and we were instrumental, to a great extent, in starting the evolution of taste toward American-made photoplays.

"The first continuous show in Argentine was started by us, in the Theater La Princesa, under a veritable storm of ridicule. The venture was a success from the beginning, despite the fact that our program consisted of only six reels —an unheard of innovation in Buenos Aires, where pictures, although rainy and scratched, were given to the public on a wholesale basis. We control, besides, several first-run houses. One of them, the Cine Real, is reminiscent of the typical North American theater—to people waiting in line to see the daily program. Although the Real is not the most aristocratic theater in Buenos Aires, it certainly is one of the most popular.

"Our service follows as closely as possible the American style of presentation as to length, music, etc., and this plan has given excellent results.

"During 1917, we have shown Universal, Metro and World productions weekly, in addition to purchasing outside features and program pictures. In the present year we shall continue to distribute World and Metro productions, to which we have recently added the Selig output, and the Universal brand will be handled by the Sud Americana, one of the local exchanges working in combination with our company. We have sub-agencies in the following cities of Argentina: Rosario, Tucuman, Santa Fe and Mendoza; Montevideo, Uruguay; Valparaiso and Santiago, Chile. Our territory also includes Peru and Bolivia, which will be opened up on my return to Buenos Aires.

"During the coming year, in addition to our regular program service we have organized a separate company for the distribution of feature films exclusively, and we have already purchased 'Lest We Forget' (to be called 'The Sinking of the Lusitania'), 'Blue Jeans,' 'Ramona' and 'The Garden of Allah.'

"Before closing, I wish to congratulate you on the success of your international edition, Cine-Mundial. It is doing wonderful work. Its reviews, special articles and news items of the American film world are copied so repeatedly by the local press, that it is playing the leading role in popularizing American plays, actors and directors. The exhibitors swear by it in Buenos Aires."

Sidney Garrett on Export Conditions

European Restrictions Emphasize the Importance of the Spanish and Portuguese-Speaking Markets.

SIDNEY GARRETT, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., in a lengthy statement that lack of space prevents us from publishing in full, sounds a warning to American manufacturers.

Mr. Garrett makes these two claims:

1. It has become almost impossible, from a business point of view, to purchase film for France without the granting of duping privilege by the manufacturers, and this condition will also apply to Great Britain within a very short time.

2. Manufacturers wishing to keep up exporting must give up the idea that duping is a "terrible thing" to allow.

He brings forward the following points to back up his contentions: (a) Buyers will pay royalty, but insist on securing a black and white print and one full-titled print, tinted.

(b) Shipping is in an abnormal state and the cargo space allotted to film is being reduced to the minimum. Essential war merchandise is given the preference in all cases and film is not considered as such, despite the desire of all governments to keep the people in good spirits.

(c) In countries like Great Britain and France, which take a considerable amount of prints, the duping privilege lessens the amount of space taken on outgoing steamers, and in this way helps the government, reduces freight expenses, an item of vital importance at this time, and aids the exhibitor, who otherwise would have to pay a larger importation tax.

(d) Apart from the saving of freight and importation, there would be the saving of insurance, reservation of space, etc.

(e) Under present conditions, the manufacturer makes his profit on whatever royalty is paid for a subject and not on the number of prints sold.

(f) The export business with Europe should be facilitated to the utmost, because, even if all kinds of facilities are given, there still is the possibility of a general closing down of all the theaters in the Western allied countries.

What Mr. Garrett proposes—and we understand that he is only following specific instructions from his principals in Europe, who have practically made it clear that they will not buy on any other basis—may not seem to be a good business policy for the American manufacturers to adopt. There is no doubt the result would be ruinous in ordinary times. But the question is: Will its adoption become, or has it become already, absolutely necessary?

There is nothing academic in this question, it is a plain matter of dollars and cents, and it would be fatuous on our part to give any advice. Each manufacturer will decide it according to whatever his interests may dictate.

But there is an angle to this problem that should be called to the attention of every producer and distributer in this country. Even if Mr. Garrett's deductions were unduly pessimistic, and granting that these are trying times for all exporters, no man in touch with foreign conditions will deny that we are rapidly reaching the stage in which anything may happen at any time. The crisis in the motion picture business of Europe is becoming more and more acute, and although it is hard to believe that the authorities on the other side will decide on anything so foolish as a general closing down of the theaters, it must be admitted that all present signs indicate further restrictions, which only emphasize the growing importance of Latin-America as the motion picture field of the present and one of our biggest customers in the future.

And although the effect of these restrictive measures, which at any time may become prohibitive, cannot be entirely neutralized, they still may be parried and their force partially broken by an intensive campaign in the Southern republics, which have been rapidly forging ahead in motion picture development during the past two years and their importance to our manufacturers is bound to become greater and greater as the war goes on.

Theaters and Pictures in Porto Rico

An Account of Business Conditions—Prices Asked for Seats and Popularity of the Shows.

By Harwood Hull.

San Juan, Porto Rico, U. S. A., March 20.

IF you want to see 9 per cent of the population of San Juan sitting at its ease and thoroughly enjoying itself make a flying visit to the cines of the city any night. There are nine picture houses, including one in Puerta de Tierra, and six in Santurce, and you can gratify your curiosity. The crowd will be there laughing at Charlie Chaplin, thrilled by Pearl White and charmed by Mary Pickford.

San Juan is the banner city of Porto Rico. There are more cines here than in any other town in the island and more people attend them. But there is probably not a town in the island without at least one theater, and four nights a week they entertain about two per cent of the entire population, that is to say, there are four evenings every week when you could find 20,000 people distributed in 65 moving picture houses in Porto Rico. Taking 25 cents as the average admission charge, and only where competition exists is the price less, this means that about $20,000 a week is spent in seeing the films. Yet Porto Rico is not a movie country to the same extent that the United States is.

The $20,000 a week spent here in picture shows, though from a patron's point of view an investment in transient pleasure, is from the point of view of the film producer and theater owner a legitimate return on relatively large investments of capital. The value of the films in the island at present will run up to about $300,000. In all the moving picture business as it stands today in Porto Rico represents an investment of nearly half a million dollars.

Porto Rico cannot complain of high admission charges, for the same pictures in the United States are frequently exhibited at a much higher price. Here the admission was never over 50 cents. The star picture is the one that takes here. People will go to see a star picture without a thought about the play.

Portuguese Notes

By Alberto Rocha.

Lisbon, March 9, 1918.

To those who still think that Lisbon is in Spain and Portugal in Africa, go these half-monthly notes. The "Cine-Journal," a Paris trade paper, said in one of its last issues that Portugal had seen "Madame Tallien" (The Birth of Democracy), by Lyda Borelli, before it was shown in France. The French paper seemed to imply that we should always be the last ones to see a picture.

The American Cimena Commissioner who has lately been in Spain, I think made a mistake in saying that Portugal could be furnished with films by an American agency in Cadiz. This may be regarded as a question of economy, but the right thing to do would be to send an experienced man to Lisbon and find out whether it would pay the American manufacturers to establish their agencies there. We in Portugal have at least twenty important cinema houses and we can see them packed every night. What would producers say to have their own agencies and picture palaces in Lisbon and Oporto?

Fox, Goldwyn, Jewel, Select, Paramount and several other well-known brands have never been seen here. One of the most enthusiastic cinema proprietors told me some days ago when talking of American pictures that those shown were nearly all serials and the people got tired of them. When I mentioned Petrova, Mary Pickford, Madge Kennedy, Clara Kimball Young, William Farnum and othrs, he confessed he had never heard of them.

There are rumors from France that producing companies in that country have decided to open branches in Lisbon to save themselves from the intervention of Spanish agents in Barcelona. Is this the beginning of a campaign against the granting of rights for Spain and Portugal to Spanish agents?

The Salao Central is finishing running "The Great Secret," by Beverly Bayne and Francis X. Bushman, and if the public were not so tired of serials, it would have appreciated it better, as it is the best picture of its kind ever seen here.

"Invicta-Film," a company established in Oporto, has decided to produce Portuguese plays with Portuguese actors.

It counts upon a French "metteur-en-scene" and some Italian laboratory men to teach the Portuguese all the tricks of the game. One of the directors went to Italy and her first picture is announced as the masterpiece "Amor de Perdicao" of our late well-known writer, Camilo Castelo Branco.

E. H. Kaufman, in charge of the distribution of Speer carbons for the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, is negotiating for a number of other supplies and accessories for the foreign markets in which he has so successfully placed the Speer. Louis Brock, manager of the Sales Department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, sailed for Havana at the beginning of the week. Cuba is one of the few worth-while foreign markets where the Inter-Ocean stills lacks suitable representation, and, as a result of this trip, the company expects to arrive at a satisfactory understanding with some of the local exchanges or establish a direct branch. Mr. Brock will also visit Porto Rico.

Alberto H. Zumsteg, representing J. R. Staffa, one of the large exchanges doing business throughout Brazil, recently arrived in New York. He is interested in the purchase of feature and program pictures and will remain in town for three or four months.

GOLDWYN OPENS IN AUSTRALIA.

Correspondence just received from J. C. Williamson Films, Ltd., dated Sydney, March 13, tells of the gala Australian opening of Goldwyn Pictures in the Commonwealth at the Theatre Royal, Sydney's greatest amusement institution.

So enthusiastic are the executives of the big Williamson interests that Hugh J. Ward and F. W. Thring, the managing director of Williamson Films, delayed the inauguration of Goldwyn production until the theatre had been entirely renovated and redecorated, and while this was in progress a special orchestra was organized and publicly announced as "the Goldwyn Symphony Orchestra." This marks the introduction in Sydney of the American method of picture presentation in conjunction with large orchestras. The subject chosen for the initial showing was "The Auction Block."

First National Issues Handsome Booklet

Souvenir Published Coincident with First Annual Meeting of Circuit's Stockholders.

COINCIDENT with the first annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which was held beginning April 15, at the Hotel Astor, New York, the publicity department of the circuit has issued a souvenir plan book, outlining the purpose and principles of the organization.

The publication, which measures 9½ by 12 inches in size, is printed on the finest quality of glazed book stock, with a heavy embossed cover, showing the circuit's geographical chain design, surmounting the rather quaint title: "The good fellows get by getting together."

At the front of the book a 24 by 36 inch insert has been tipped in, bearing half-tone cuts of ninety-eight theatres owned or controlled by members of the circuit. This is a most impressive spread, giving in one glance a vivid idea of the massed power back of the First National. Altogether, the theatrical property represented amounts to some $40,000,000.

Then follow the text pages, each bordered by interior views of theatres pictured on the spread. The various angles of the organization are covered in brief, breezy paragraphs, explaining the co-operative idea of the circuit; how productions are selected; the ratio of productions purchased to the number viewed; the position that has been adopted in regard to stars, taking the Charlie Chaplin contract as an example.

In the center of the book one comes across a striking double-page layout showing a map of the United States, marked off in alphabetically lettered selling districts, with portraits of the members of the circuit.

The art work throughout is of an unusually high order, having both beauty and dignity. It is printed in light brown ink, which contrasts pleasantly with the cuts and letterpress.

DENVER OPERATORS DANCE.

Operators of the city of Denver, Local Union 230, I. A. T. S. E., and M. P. M. O., gave their fourth annual ball at Caldwell Hall on Wednesday evening, March 27. That it was a social, financial and artistic success goes without saying. Caldwell Hall was filled to capacity; all the film companies were represented and the exhibitors honored the Union by their presence. The grand march disclosed several novelties and its patriotic setting stirred up a wave of enthusiasm. The stars and stripes together with the flags of the Allies were dropped from places of concealment to the strains of the national anthem while the assembled merrymakers, inspired by the spectacle, sang the song, the spotlights concentrating on "Old Glory." It was a moment long to be remembered. The dance broke up at 1 o'clock when the party were conveyed to one of Denver's most popular restaurants where plank steaks and trimmings were served. Thus finished one of the jolliest affairs the men of No. 230 ever enjoyed.

is only following specific instructions from his principals in Europe, who have practically made it clear that they will not buy on any other basis—may not seem to be a good business policy for the American manufacturers to adopt. There is no doubt the result would be ruinous in ordinary times. But the question is: Will its adoption become, or has it become already, absolutely necessary?

There is nothing academic in this question, it is a plain matter of dollars and cents, and it would be fatuous on our part to give any advice. Each manufacturer will decide it according to whatever his interests may dictate.

But there is an angle to this problem that should be called to the attention of every producer and distributer in this country. Even if Mr. Garrett's deductions were unduly pessimistic, and granting that these are trying times for all exporters, no man in touch with foreign conditions will deny that we are rapidly reaching the stage in which anything may happen at any time. The crisis in the motion picture business of Europe is becoming more and more acute, and although it is hard to believe that the authorities on the other side will decide on anything so foolish as a general closing down of the theaters, it must be admitted that all present signs indicate further restrictions, which only emphasize the growing importance of Latin-America as the motion picture field of the present and one of our biggest customers in the future.

And although the effect of these restrictive measures, which at any time may become prohibitive, cannot be entirely neutralized, they still may be parried and their force partially broken by an intensive campaign in the Southern republics, which have been rapidly forging ahead in motion picture development during the past two years and their importance to our manufacturers is bound to become greater and greater as the war goes on.

Goldwyn Sells British Rights to Stoll

Offices Will Be Established Throughout the United Kingdom—Eight Productions Already in Hand.

THE biggest foreign alliance made by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is announced to the effect that exclusive distribution of all Goldwyn productions for England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales will be under the name and direction of Oswald Stoll, one of the amusement magnates of the world.

Negotiations with Mr. Stoll have been conducted by R. S. Edmondson, the London representative of Goldwyn, and the arrival in Great Britain of the first eight Goldwyn productions is hailed by the British trade press and the principal amusement journals of the empire as an event of significance.

In less than eight months from the date of its first American release Goldwyn has completed a world-wide organization, with representation in every part of the habitable globe with the exception of the Teutonic powers and their allies. The British distribution will be made under the name of the Oswald Stoll Film Company, with offices throughout the United Kingdom.

Link by link Goldwyn is forging its chain of representation around the world, and its English and Australasian affiliations, taken in conjunction with Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., of Canada, constitute the most important alliances of all.

In Australia Goldwyn Pictures are distributed by J. C. Williamson Films, Ltd. Goldwyn's New Zealand distribution is under the direction of New Zealand Picture Supplies, Ltd., Harry Hayward being chairman of the board of directors.

In Scandinavia Goldwyn is successfully launched through John Olsen & Company, and in South Africa the South African Film Trust is the Goldwyn distributor.

Goldwyn Pictures are distributed in Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay through Saenz & Gonzalez; Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador distribution is made through the Mutual Export and Import Company; Mexico and Central American business will be handled through Lescale, Goni & Co., and Egypt through Joseph Adda.

In Brazil the Pan-American Trading Company for the Compania Cinematografica Brazileira of Rio de Janeiro, the largest film concern in the country, owning eighteen of the biggest houses in Rio de Janeiro and Santos, will be Goldwyn's distributors.

Final negotiations are now in progress for the distribution of Goldwyn Pictures in France, Italy, the Dutch East Indies, Switzerland, India, Burmah and Ceylon, China and the Philippines, Cuba, Japan, Holland, Spain and Portugal, where the leading film interests of each country are to be drawn into immediate alliance with Goldwyn's American organization.

Theaters and Pictures in Porto Rico

An Account of Business Conditions—Prices Asked for Seats and Popularity of the Shows.

By Harwood Hull.

San Juan, Porto Rico, U. S. A., March 20.

IF you want to see 9 per cent of the population of San Juan sitting at its ease and thoroughly enjoying itself make a flying visit to the cines of the city any night. There are nine picture houses, including one in Puerta de Tierra, and six in Santurce, and you can gratify your curiosity. The crowd will be there laughing at Charlie Chaplin, thrilled by Pearl White and charmed by Mary Pickford.

San Juan is the banner city of Porto Rico. There are more cines here than in any other town in the island and more people attend them. But there is probably not a town in the island without at least one theater, and four nights a week they entertain about two per cent of the entire population, that is to say, there are four evenings every week when you could find 20,000 people distributed in 65 moving picture houses in Porto Rico. Taking 25 cents as the average admission charge, and only where competition exists is the price less, this means that about $20,000 a week is spent in seeing the films. Yet Porto Rico is not a movie country to the same extent that the United States is.

The $20,000 a week spent here in picture shows, though from a patron's point of view an investment in transient pleasure, is from the point of view of the film producer and theater owner a legitimate return on relatively large investments of capital. The value of the films in the island at present will run up to about $300,000. In all the moving picture business as it stands today in Porto Rico represents an investment of nearly half a million dollars.

Porto Rico cannot complain of high admission charges, for the same pictures in the United States are frequently exhibited at a much higher price. Here the admission was never over 50 cents. The star picture is the one that takes here. People will go to see a star picture without a thought about the play.

Portuguese Notes

By Alberto Rocha.

Lisbon, March 9, 1918.

To those who still think that Lisbon is in Spain and Portugal in Africa, go these half-monthly notes. The "Cine-Journal," a Paris trade paper, said in one of its last issues that Portugal had seen "Madame Tallien" (The Birth of Democracy), by Lyda Borelli, before it was shown in France. The French paper seemed to imply that we should always be the last ones to see a picture.

The American Cimena Commissioner who has lately been in Spain, I think made a mistake in saying that Portugal could be furnished with films by an American agency in Cadiz. This may be regarded as a question of economy, but the right thing to do would be to send an experienced man to Lisbon and find out whether it would pay the American manufacturers to establish their agencies there. We in Portugal have at least twenty important cinema houses and we can see them packed every night. What would producers say to have their own agencies and picture palaces in Lisbon and Oporto?

Fox, Goldwyn, Jewel, Select, Paramount and several other well-known brands have never been seen here. One of the most enthusiastic cinema proprietors told me some days ago when talking of American pictures that those shown were nearly all serials and the people got tired of them. When I mentioned Petrova, Mary Pickford, Madge Kennedy, Clara Kimball Young, William Farnum and othrs, he confessed he had never heard of them.

There are rumors from France that producing companies in that country have decided to open branches in Lisbon to save themselves from the intervention of Spanish agents in Barcelona. Is this the beginning of a campaign against the granting of rights for Spain and Portugal to Spanish agents?

The Salao Central is finishing running "The Great Secret," by Beverly Bayne and Francis X. Bushman, and if the public were not so tired of serials, it would have appreciated it better, as it is the best picture of its kind ever seen here.

"Invicta-Film," a company established in Oporto, has decided to produce Portuguese plays with Portuguese actors.

It counts upon a French "metteur-en-scene" and some Italian laboratory men to teach the Portuguese all the tricks of the game. One of the directors went to Italy and her first picture is announced as the masterpiece "Amor de Perdicao" of our late well-known writer, Camilo Castelo Branco.

Louis Brock, manager of the Sales Department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, sailed for Havana at the beginning of the week. Cuba is one of the few worth-while foreign markets where the Inter-Ocean stills lacks suitable representation, and, as a result of this trip, the company expects to arrive at a satisfactory understanding with some of the local exchanges or establish a direct branch. Mr. Brock will also visit Porto Rico.

Alberto H. Zumsteg, representing J. R. Staffa, one of the large exchanges doing business throughout Brazil, recently arrived in New York. He is interested in the purchase of feature and program pictures and will remain in town for three or four months.

GOLDWYN OPENS IN AUSTRALIA.

Correspondence just received from J. C. Williamson Films, Ltd., dated Sydney, March 13, tells of the gala Australian opening of Goldwyn Pictures in the Commonwealth at the Theatre Royal, Sydney's greatest amusement institution.

So enthusiastic are the executives of the big Williamson interests that Hugh J. Ward and F. W. Thring, the managing director of Williamson Films, delayed the inauguration of Goldwyn production until the theatre had been entirely renovated and redecorated, and while this was in progress a special orchestra was organized and publicly announced as "the Goldwyn Symphony Orchestra." This marks the introduction in Sydney of the American method of picture presentation in conjunction with large orchestras. The subject chosen for the initial showing was "The Auction Block."

First National Issues Handsome Booklet

Souvenir Published Coincident with First Annual Meeting of Circuit's Stockholders.

COINCIDENT with the first annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which was held beginning April 15, at the Hotel Astor, New York, the publicity department of the circuit has issued a souvenir plan book, outlining the purpose and principles of the organization.

The publication, which measures 9½ by 12 inches in size, is printed on the finest quality of glazed book stock, with a heavy embossed cover, showing the circuit's geographical chain design, surmounting the rather quaint title: "The good fellows get by getting together."

At the front of the book a 24 by 36 inch insert has been tipped in, bearing half-tone cuts of ninety-eight theatres owned or controlled by members of the circuit. This is a most impressive spread, giving in one glance a vivid idea of the massed power back of the First National. Altogether, the theatrical property represented amounts to some $40,000,000.

Then follow the text pages, each bordered by interior views of theatres pictured on the spread. The various angles of the organization are covered in brief, breezy paragraphs, explaining the co-operative idea of the circuit; how productions are selected; the ratio of productions purchased to the number viewed; the position that has been adopted in regard to stars, taking the Charlie Chaplin contract as an example.

In the center of the book one comes across a striking double-page layout showing a map of the United States, marked off in alphabetically lettered selling districts, with portraits of the members of the circuit.

The art work throughout is of an unusually high order, having both beauty and dignity. It is printed in light brown ink, which contrasts pleasantly with the cuts and letterpress.

Canada's Large Use of Instructive Films

Moving Pictures Show Farmers How to Get Better Profits and Aid Government Generally.

THE Ontario Provincial Government is employing for the production of official films covering a wide variety of subjects the Pathescope of Canada, Ltd. The company also is manufacturing a large number of commercial subjects for business enterprises of the Dominion, and recently a representative of the Pathescope took more than 10,000 feet of pictures of Canadian institutions for convalescent soldiers and military schools. These views will be screened in military hospitals in England and France to show what Canada is doing to reconstruct disabled warriors for future occupations.

The Province of Ontario is far ahead of any other province or state in the adoption of moving pictures for educational purposes among farmers, miners, school children, housewives, factory employees and others. It has an official Provincial Motion Picture Bureau serving as an exchange under the direction of an experienced film expert, S. C. Johnson. In this bureau are hundreds of reels of films, the majority of which are designed to instruct farmers in their work. So important has this official film feature become that the Provincial Legislature, at its recent session, voted $52,000 for the extension of the work this year.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture now has scores of educational films for use at meetings in rural communities which are arranged by the Government's Agricultural representatives. When the use of these films became general over the province the average attendance at the district meetings sprang from fifteen to eighty-five—mainly because of the moving picture demonstrations. During four weeks of the past winter meetings held in forty-five counties at the rate of three each week attracted a total attendance of 67,801 farmers.

More than five thousand farmers saw a special wool-grading picture during the past winter. During three weeks no less than 1,500 women saw farm household pictures at meetings held by the Women's Institutes of Simcoe County alone. One very popular film has been "The Marketing of Live Stock," which shows the farmer what happens to cattle after it has been sold by him. Gardening films have introduced many new methods to vegetable producers. A number of films show how to take care of orchards and how to prevent the destruction of trees or fruit by blight or insects. A very valuable picture at the present time covers the subject of backyard gardening for city people.

Five films have been made of road-building and repair and several films cover the subject of "National Service on the Land." It is interesting to note that prints of these films have been loaned to the United States Government for similar recruiting work.

Ten thousand feet of film show the new farms, mines and other attractions in New Ontario for settlers. Returned soldiers who have taken up farming in New Ontario have the benefit of the entertainment of a moving picture show several times each week through the use of the interesting films which are supplied from the Government Bureau. The Whitby High School is teaching agriculture by means of the films made available by the Provincial Bureau, which has more than three hundred releases in its stock. Practically all of these films were prepared by the Pathescope with the co-operation of the Ontario Government. Many Canadian manufacturers are also sending their trailers out with projectors and films which show how various products are made and used.

The Ontario Government is also arranging for the use of dramatic, comic and scenic subjects to add an entertainment feature to its agricultural film shows, but these pictures will only be incidental to the main issue.

The Pathescope people at Toronto have established a model film factory at its new address. The company started out to supply moving picture projection machines and films to churches, schools and private homes. The machines and films were imported from France, but soon after the outbreak of war it was found impossible to procure further machines from France. Similar types of projectors made in the United States were imported.

RUSSELL TO OPEN CAMP THEATER.

William Russell is billed to appear at Camp Kearny to officiate at the opening of the camp's picture theater, the initial run of which will be a Russell feature. The camp has also invited Mr. Russell to bring with him a mascot which the camp will adopt.

A. S. Winterhoge, one of the old timers of the show business, who operated one of the first theaters in California, the first theater in San Jose, is once more back in the game, although not in the show end of the business. He is a traveling representative for the All Star Features Distributers' production "Birth," of the Eugenic Film Company, which is playing throughout Southern California and Arizona territory.

MacMahon Joins Educational Films

Has Been Appointed General Press Representative of Educational Film Corporation.

HENRY MACMAHON has been appointed general press representative of the Educational Film Corporation, the appointment to take effect on April 29. Mr. MacMahon is a pioneer in educational presswork. Back in the nineties he established the press department of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and reported the first local showing of Edison's kinetoscope, the predecessor of the modern motion picture machine. Some years later he managed for the Shuberts the nation-wide publicity campaign of Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," the stage play that enlisted the attention of educators and cultivated people generally. He was then engaged by J. J. McCarthy to handle the magazine publicity of "The Birth of a Nation."

Out of this interesting assignment grew many connections with the literary side of the films, and Mr. MacMahon has written much about the informative value of pictures and the possibilities of combining sound instruction with lively entertainment. President Earl B. Hammons, of the Educational Film Corporation, has offered every facility to Mr. MacMahon to popularize the knowledge of worth-while films both among the exhibitors and to the public generally, so that the appointment is in the nature of an unusual opportunity to resume a congenial field of work, Announcement of important expansions of Educational's activities will be made as soon as Mr. Hammons has closed several big negotiations which are now pending.

Harry David on Trip East

Associate Manager of San Francisco's California Theater Visiting Larger Cities.

SELECT headquarters in New York has had a welcome visitor during the week in the person of Harry David, associate manager and publicity director of the California theater, San Francisco, the beautiful house of which Eugene H. Roth is the managing director.

Manager David arrived in New York April 12 and proceeded to make himself at home at once in the office of General Manager Arthur S. Kane, who was expecting him, having been apprised of his coming by Select's San Francisco branch manager, Harry H. Hicks.

Mr. David has been making an extensive tour since leaving the California metropolis. On his way east he stopped at Denver, Chicago and Detroit, and visited the principal theaters in each of these cities. He has also seen all the fine houses in New York since his arrival here, and has announced his intention of visiting Philadelphia, Chicago and Los Angeles on his way home, his purpose being to get acquainted with the best motion picture houses in the United States, with a view to learning any new wrinkles they may have to offer in the way of house arrangements or presentation of subjects.

SPANUTH HAS NOVELTY TWO-REELERS.

Hans A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation of Chicago, visited New York during the past week, bringing with him a novelty in the form of a two-reeler; something out of the ordinary, and designed to take the place of comedies or other short subjects.

Further announcement as to the nature of these subjects and method of release will be made shortly. It is expected one will be offered to exhibitors each month.

MARIE DRESSLER SIGNS CONTRACT WITH WORLD.

Canadians Give Dinner to Richardson

Toronto Operators, Exhibitors and Exchangemen Entertain Projection Expert at Toronto—Will Smith Announces Overseas Service.

ALTHOUGH it had not been able to have an official dinner or banquet of any kind since the start of the war in 1914, Toronto Moving Picture Operators' Local No. 173 turned out more than 150 strong, with representatives of local exchanges and prominent local exhibitors, for the dinner at Young's Cafe on Wednesday evening, April 10, in honor of F. H. Richardson, of the projection department of the Moving Picture World. So interesting was the practical talk by Brother Richardson and the speeches of others that the gathering did not break up until 5 o'clock in the morning. At the end of the session the operators and others present freely voted that the game was worth the candle, almost literally speaking.

During the day Brother Richardson had been shown the sights of the "New York of Canada" and, in opening his address, he declared that he had been shown one arsenal, eleven military hospitals and one graveyard. Therefore, he figured that he would have to be very careful what he said. But when he got under way he roasted the operators, the exhibitors, then the exchange managers and even the theater architects—all for one purpose, namely, to improve the standard of moving picture presentation in the city of Toronto. During the course of his speech he paid one marked compliment to the manager and staff of the Regent Theater, Toronto. When he had visited this theater early in the evening he had found people standing four and five deep for a block waiting to gain admission. Upon entering, he noted that the picture was not being speeded in order to empty the house a little more quickly and projection conditions, generally, were good. "There is a real manager," said Mr. Richardson.

He impressed upon the operators the fact that they were handling films every day which were worth, on an average $125 per reel. The equipment in the projection room is worth $450 and every detail in the production of a picture was more or less costly. Yet the projectionist had it in his power to make or mar the whole picture and to throw the theater into disrepute. He went into various mechanical details and asked many pertinent questions. He declared that in 106 different addresses, he had been able to secure only six correct answers to a certain simple question and two of the correct solutions were provided in Vancouver, B. C.

Interesting exhibits which Brother Richardson presented were a sample of the new Hodkinson film, which is of special width, and Biograph's film No. 191, which was one of the first made by that company. The latter was considerably different from the present-day type of moving picture film.

Will C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, was also present. Mr. Smith was cheered when he announced that he had made all but final arrangements to enlist for special service with the United States Army in France. He expected to be overseas within a very few weeks.

In proposing the toast to "Our Brothers Overseas," James Simpson of Toronto, vice president of the Dominion Trades Congress, announced that forty members of Local 173 were in the Canadian Army and eight of the members had returned from overseas after doing their bit. He pointed out that, while many of the workers were serving the colors, it was the duty of organized labor in Canada to use every effort to improve working conditions throughout the country.

T. A. Stevenson, a prominent labor man of Toronto, followed this up by stating that since the election of the Canadian Union Government last December representatives of the workers had been called to a number of conferences of importance at Ottawa so that the voice of the workingman could be heard in various matters. He pointed out that such revelation had been made to the representatives of organized labor with regard to the war situation that he was more impressed than ever with the need for co-operation and united assistance of all in order to win the war.

"Bud" Lennon, Ontario manager for the Canadian Universal Film Company, spoke for the exchange managers. Mr. Lennon declared that he, alone with President Clair Hague of the Canadian Universal, had been given honorary membership cards in the I. A. T. S. E. as being two of the pioneer "Crank turners" of the moving picture business in Canada. He compared several conditions of the early days with those of the present.

W. Baillie, a Toronto exhibitor, who is president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, spoke in behalf of the exhibitors briefly. He declared he had just been doing a lot of hustling to gain a live membership for his association and that there were several important legal matters which required immediate adjustment. The association had these matters in hand and conditions would undoubtdly be improved. GLADISH.

Thanhouser to Resume Production

To Make Six Features a Year, Together with Propaganda and Program Pictures.

ACCORDING to rumors flying about in motion picture circles the Thanhouser Film Corporation will shortly resume active production at its studios in New Rochelle. Plans have been perfected, it is said, for the filming of six big super-features a year, which will be released through the Arrow Film Corporation, as well as a number of propaganda and program pictures.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, who is also treasurer and the active manager of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, was non-committal when asked about Thanhouser's future plans. He admitted it was probable the company would soon resume making pictures, but said he could not announce any definite plans at the present time.

Thanhouser has been out of the production field for some time. For a number of years it was one of the best known producing organizations in the world and some noteworthy pictures were filmed in its studios.

Unlike many other picture organizations Thanhouser temporarily discontinued producing with money in the bank. This has never been withdrawn, it is said, and will probably remain intact until the company launches its new activities.

The Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle were among the best equipped of their kind in the country. Many Eastern producers have tried to buy the studios, but the Thanhouser company has always retained them.

A few weeks ago the Thanhouser company held its annual meeting and elected Crawford Livingston president; Wilbert Shallenberger, vice president; A. E. Jones, secretary and W. E. Shallenberger, treasurer. The following were elected directors: Felix Kahn, Crawford Livingston, Wilbert Shallenberger, A. E. Jones, Gerald Livingston, W. E. Shallenberger and Jessie Bishop.

Following this meeting it was announced that W. E. Shallenberger would take over the active management of the Thanhouser company and studios.

What Goes Into Making of Pictures

World Film Compiles Statistics as to Amount of Material That Goes Into Year's Program.

AN efficiency expert at the World studio at Fort Lee has compiled the following figures of the amount of material required that goes into the making of a year's program: To those who are not familiar with studio activities it may be of interest to know that in the past year, for the sets built for fifty-two pictures, it was necessary to use 1,500,000 feet of lumber, 12,000,000 nails, 100,000 screws, 5,000 locks, hinges and door knobs, 75,000 feet of wall paper, 1,500 gallons of paint, over 100,000 pieces of furniture and 300,000 props. There was consumed in lighting these sets 1,000,000 amperes of current, also 1,500,000 feet of film and a countless number of horses, cows, sheep, goats, birds, goldfish, dogs and oxen were employed. As for bears, snakes, raccoons, lions and elephants, the number of these animals used would equip the Barnum & Bailey Circus several times over.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Manager-Director.

ARE you getting maximum co-operation from your local newspapers? If you are not, you have a matter before you which demands immediate attention. No exhibitor can afford to neglect the great assistance the newspapers in his town can and will give him, if properly handled. The exhibitor of the big motion picture theater can afford a publicity expert. Newspaper publicity is not a luxury, it is an investment. Some exhibitors feel satisfied with their showing when the papers give them a few lines announcing forthcoming attractions. This is not enough for the more progressive exhibitor.

If you are a small-town manager and cannot afford to engage an expert to take care of this end of your business, give it your own supervision at least. Do not put it up to the stenographer or the office boy to send out the customary announcement each week. Develop the acquaintanceships of every dramatic editor in your town. Become a personal friend. Be liberal with passes and extend every courtesy possible. When a critic roasts your show do not become indignant to the extent of writing him a letter "balling him out." On the other hand, should he give you an unusually nice notice, write him your appreciation. Tell him how encouraging his remarks are to you and that they act as an incentive for greater things. In other words, pat him on the back. It's human nature to like this sort of thing, and the fact that you took the pains to write him makes him feel that his work is taken seriously and he will then be glad to give you a stronger boost at the very next opportunity. Of course, there are some exceptions, but the general rules of human nature apply here as everywhere else.

The matter of getting free space in newspapers has become more difficult since the war news has crowded out other material, all of which makes it more imperative that exceptional care be exercised in this direction. An occasional luncheon with a representative of the press "to talk things over" is desirable. You must sell yourself and your theater to the newspaperman just as if you were a salesman selling him a typewriter. No matter how big an exhibitor you are, it is advisable to occasionally meet the dramatic editor in this way. Get his ideas and advice. Much may be impracticable but then again you get the outsider's view and very often ideas that prove a great help. The newspaperman is the medium between you and the public. The good critic knows your business of showmanship and can judge it from the viewpoint of your audience. While many reviewers place their own personal ideas above everything else, most of them review your activities from the viewpoint of the audience.

Never wait until the last minute to get your photographs and stories into the hands of the newspaperman. Get these to him well ahead of the time he makes up. Always send the material to the person who is in charge of the motion picture news of the paper. Get his name, develop his acquaintance and become familiar with his wants. After you have done this, provided you have no press agent of course, see that the right kind of matter is sent to him at the right time. It is only through personal contact that a genuine knowledge of his exact requirements can be had. Stories should be kept short, giving as many facts as possible. Photographs should be glossy prints; cuts or mats should be sent when they are preferable. Announcements should be double spaced, to allow room for editing. So much for the routine newspaper publicity.

Special publicity is more difficult to get, particularly dignified publicity. One good way to get the name of your theater in public print, is to establish it as a local institution as much as possible. Offer the use of your house to worthy causes. Red Cross, Liberty Loan and other benefits of patriotic or charitable nature are desirable. Some of the biggest stories the Strand Theater has ever received, were the rsults of allowing it to be used in such work. At this time it is your duty to put your theater at the disposal of patriotic movements as much as possible. From your personal point of view it is a patriotic duty, from the showmanship's angle, it is good business. The theater that can become established in any community as a local institution, a gathering place of the best classes in your locality, whether it be in order to see your show or in the morning when your house is idle, wins popularity. In this way we have brought to the Strand people who would never visit a picture theater. Once inside they are impressed with its appearance and later come to see just what kind of entertainment it offered here.

If you have an orchestra, go after the music editors of your city. Establish the name of your orchestra in your community. Mention it in your advertising and stories whenever possible. Invite the music critics. Go after them separate and apart from the dramatic critics. Break into the music departments of the newspapers. Even if you only have an organ, an occasional recital or special setting for a picture should be called to the attention of the music editors. In the case of a big special show hold an advance performance for the benefit of the press. Dignified publicity can be obtained without circus sensationalism. Primarily, of course, advertise.

Many Theater Combinations in Cleveland

Tendency Is for Successful Exhibitors to Take Over Two or Three Other Houses.

WITHIN the past year a remarkable situation has been developing in the picture industry of Northern Ohio, especially in Cleveland. This is the combining of theaters in groups of two, three or four, for purposes of economy. In all such cases, however, money changed hands, and it was not merely written agreements to operate together. In fact nearly every combine represented the sale of one or more theaters, or sale of part of the stock of the companies operating them.

When interviewed by the World man many of the heads of these combinations stated they were not brought about principally to fight film exchanges or other units of the industry, but rather by the ambitions of owners to have more than one theater, although it was admitted that experience so far has resulted in some cutting of expenses.

At present nearly fifty theaters in Cleveland are controlled in one way or another, these being owned in groups of two, three and four. These groups, however, do not work together, many of them being competitors. Nor has there been an organized method of bringing about this situation. The most successful owners just seemed to branch out buying or getting control of a theater here and there.

Several of these combinations transpired since January 1. They include those Cleveland houses in which Louis Zoffer is interested, the Alvin, Corona, Reel, Liberty and Gordon Square. Since January 1, the Corona and Reel, both downtown theaters, were acquired.

Another recent deal brought the Gaiety, Bronx and Wonderland, all within a block on East Ninth street, Cleveland, under the control of Max Lefkowich.

J. V. Wolcott, owner of the Princess, a downtown house in Cleveland, within the last month bought the Milo and the Iris, and in May will open a theater in Geneva.

April 1 Messrs. Schuman, Fine and Kramer, of Cleveland, who have operated the Dennison Square, bought the Yale and announced plans for building a new 1,000-seat house on Lorain street, near West Twenty-fifth.

Another combination which was brought about April 10 was that whereby Paul Gusdanovic and J. E. Surrell, owners of the Orpheum, a downtown house, Cleveland, bought the Savoy, in the East End.

Within a few weeks, the deal whereby Dave Adler and associates, who now own the Strand, take over the Fairyland, on West Twenty-fifth street, Cleveland, will no doubt be settled.

Last fall Frank Spoth and his partners bought the Park National and the Enjoyu and combined the interests of these two houses with their Mt. Lebanon.

Montgomery & Balke, by buying the Wade Park Orpheum combined the Camera and the Golden Eagle with it.

The Home and Crown are controlled by Ike Morris and Louis Wilk; the Angela, Erie and Avenue by Schwartz and Lustig; the Bijou, Dream and Crescent, by Flanigan, Nolan and Schwartzer; the Columbia and Boulevard by Sam Bullock; the Doan and Madison, by E. Mandelbaum; the Ezella and Sunbeam by Scoville and Essick; the Fountain by Messrs. Israel and Horwitz; the New Palace and Olympia by the Horwitz interests.

The Polcar interests operate the Lakeview, American and Empress. Among the first-run houses, the Mall and Alhambra are under joint management, while the Metropolitan, Knickerbocker and Lakewood are operated by the Atlas Amusement Co.

Besides the above mentioned combinations in many Ohio towns the same thing has been going on. Among these are Fremont, Elyria, Sandusky, Kenton, Wooster, Delphos, Cambridge, Martin's Ferry, Bellaire, Marietta, Bellefontaine, Akron and others.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

FROM the Moving Picture World's report of the recent dinner given in honor of Edward Earl, of the Nicholas Power Co., we quote this reference to the skill and urbanity of G. W. Landon in his position as Steering Committee in charge of the immediate activities at the speakers' table.

"Mr Landon made a distinct hit as toastmaster. The standing vote of thanks given him by the diners at the close of the speaking program was a well deserved tribute to one who had contributed so materially to the enjoyment of the evening." Pretty good for a press agent.

If the members of the Pleiades were all readers of the World there would be no expressions of surprise that G. Warren Landon had "made good" outside of club confines, for he has long been an active spirit in what we have reason to believe is a most interesting and intellectual circle. Members of the World staff who attended the Edward Earl dinner came back with an especially enthusiastic report of Mr. Landon's dexterity as ringmaster at the oral joust. In particular did they severally expatiate upon considerable he had to say about sleeping car reservations, and the Rambler determined to question Mr. Landon further upon this specific point of his general line of remarks.

"Judge Moore wrote the sleeping car material I used at the dinner," said Mr. Landon when interviewed. "He's a real judge, a Virginian, and lately was secretary of the American Pulp Manufacturers' Association. Likewise he was at one time president of the Pleiades Club, and the material I used appears in the club's year book for 1915-16. Judge Moore is an orator of splendid accomplishments, a writer of clever verse and prose, and is a noted wit. A personal acquaintance of President Wilson he has been a diligent worker and speech-maker in the interest of every patriotic movement in connection with the war, particularly in advancing the various Liberty Loans."

The opportunity to reproduce Judge Moore's contribution to the Pleiades Year Book, copyright waived through the courtesy of Mr. Landon, and with the consent of Judge Moore, will give readers of Rambles a chance to sample some of the good things that so pleased the friends of Edward Earl who assembled at the McAlpin dinner. Here she goes:

(By Judge Charles F. Moore.)

There are many things I do not understand, which at the same time do not bother me; but I must confess that the information one gets from the average ticket agent at a railway station is not only confusing, but intensely irritating. To illustrate. I went into the Pennsylvania station in New York City to make a Pullman reservation to Washington, and this is what happened:

"Let me have sleeping accommodations on the midnight train to Washington," I said to the man at the window, who didn't seem at all concerned whether I took the trip or stayed home.

"For a single passenger?" he finally inquired.

"No," I replied, "I'm married, but I'm not taking anybody with me. A single shelf will answer."

"Upper or lower?" he asked.

"What's the difference?" I inquired.

A difference of fifty cents came the answer. "Our prices to Washington are $1.50 and $2.00."

"Then let me have the one that's lower," I said.

"You understand, of course," explained the agent, "the lower is nearer than the upper. The higher price is for the lower berth. If you want it lower you'll have to go higher. We sell the upper lower than the lower because the upper is higher than the lower. It didn't use to be so, but we found everybody wanted the lower. In other words the higher the fewer."

"Why do they all prefer the lower?" I broke in.

"On account of its convenience," he replied. "Most persons don't like the upper, although its lower, on account of its being higher, and because when you occupy an upper you have to get up when you go to bed, and then get down when you get up. Now, if you don't care to get up to go to bed and to get down to get up, I would advise you to take a lower, although it's higher than the upper, for the reason, as I have stated, that the upper is lower than the lower because it is higher. You can have the lower if you'll pay higher; but if you're willing to go higher it will be lower."

When he got through elucidating I was seasick, and decided I wouldn't go at all if I could get out of it. Upon consulting my attorney I found I was not obliged to go; for, fortunately, I had bought a round trip ticket, which, he explained, was a contract under the terms of which the railroad company agreed to deliver me at the end of the journey right where I was before starting.

Inasmuch, he said, as I was already where I would be when properly returned the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that I would not have to go at all unless I wanted to. So I didn't go, which accounts for my being here; but I did buy an upper, not to use it, but to save fifty cents difference between the upper and lower.

No Friendly Son of German Freedom.

To get in shape for the big fight scene in which he takes part in "Treasure," Edith Storey's forthcoming Metro production, Lewis Willoughby, who plays the heavy, has been boxing every morning at Metro's west coast studios with Danny ("Kid") Hogan. Hogan is chief property-master and an ex-pugilist who in the days when he was fighting Joe Gans and other famous lightweights was known as "One Round" Hogan. He is still able to step some and has a prodigious wallop.

Willoughby is an Englishman, just arrived from Australia and making his debut, both in this country and on the screen, in Miss Storey's picture. He is an athlete, but feels the need of a little exercise after his long journey overseas.

In his first encounter with Hogan the actor caught Danny a stiff jolt on the jaw which ruffled the latter's feelings. Lowering his head he rushed in to mix it up, but suddenly stopped and pulled his punch.

"Gee," he exclaimed with a dawning grin, "I can't hit that guy!"

"Why not?" asked Director Frank Reicher, who was enjoying the bout as a spectator.

"Because he's one of the Allies!" rejoined Hogan, who is a son of Italy, despite the Celtic flavor of his nom de prize ring. He was born Daniel Bertona. The "Hogan" is a pugilistic camouflage.

How (Not) to Get Publicity.

(This Should Be Framed in Every Advertising Agency.)

Always heed what comes from the editor of the M. P. Department. He's not a working man, and does not belong to any set.

Should you, upon your first encounter on the street always look the other way, or better still, close your lips with a haughty sneer at the same time painting your nose directly at the sky.

When he calls on you make him wait an hour, then escape by your back door and have the hall boy say you just stepped out. It will impress him with your importance.

If he makes you allow him to enter your theatre by means of a courtesy pass, Make him pay. If he asks for a ticket for his wife tell him to buy.

When you send him press notices about a coming show have the stuff single spaced; this prevents editorial corrections and blue pencilling, and insures its going in, in its entirety—in the waste basket.

Never send stories of less than five pages. There is nothing an editor likes to do more than blue pencil such a mass of words—if he has nothing else to do. Should there be anything else to keep him awake, paper used on such stories comes in handy for starting the fire.

Always send him photographs the day after he makes up his Sunday layout. This always makes him happy, for then he has a good excuse for throwing away the pictures.

Never allow any of your staff to treat him cordially. The dignity of the theater must be upheld. Of course, it is imperative that you never buy him a drink or a cigar, this breeds familiarity.

Never send him a mat or cut; this might prove of assistance to him and make his job of giving you space too easy.

Always write him stern letters criticizing his reviews of your shows. This will put him in his place and show him how much more you know about pictures than he does.

Never, in any case, write him any letters of encouragement or appreciation of his efforts, it would make him like you and your theater.

Never give him any ideas that would present a good feature for his paper and at the same time boost your business. He's paid to create his own ideas.

If you MUST advertise, take a three-line adv. using pica type only.

Never use Paramount or Artcraft trademark cuts, for that would tell the public that you are showing the best pictures made, and would crowd your theater so that the folks would have to wait in line to get in. Of course, it's always best to have half the house empty, so that any people who arrive in the middle of the show can be comfortably seated.

Above all things NEVER engage a press agent. He might tell untruths and would get the name of your house in the leading columns. This would set people talking about your theater!

Mixing Metaphors for Mary.

The spectator is held more by the playing of Mary Garden than by the story. She is a magnificent mirror for the moods of a passionate woman, and she plays on them till the result looks like music sounds. No other player in the picture is more than momentarily interesting, but they make a good chorus behind the soloist.—Moving Picture World.

Windy City Hails Sour Bath.

Under heading of "Chicago's Vinegar Supply Periled by Goodwin's 'Jag' Absorber," the Journal of that fair city proceeds:

Vinegar is the best known ingredient possessing the quality of pickling. But now comes forward Nat C. Goodwin, night watchman of Broadway, with the discovery that vinegar can also "unpickle."

The merry Nat's wonderful discovery of an antidote for a pickled condition was divulged in New York in his suit for $13,000 against the Mirror Film Company for an alleged broken "movie" contract. The prescription caused keen interest among the managers of Chicago's sousatoriums.

"Mr. Goodwin would come home occasionally before 5 a. m. and I knowed he wanted his vinegar bath," testified John Cryan, his valet.

"Why the bitter penance?" quizzed a lawyer.

"Well, Mr. Goodwin would be kinda groggy, you see," replied the indiscreet valet, "and he said the vinegar bath would recuperate him."

Joseph Turek, manager of the Hotel Morrison baths, was excited over the news.

"If it's true he has discovered a panacea," he said, hopefully. "He is entitled to a Nobel prize. Odd, you think it to pickle a pickle? Not at all. What do we do now? Why, we give them an alcohol rub. No difference at all."

H. J. Gamet, manager of the Lynch baths, 5 North Clark street, studied the news as a botanist examining a strange plant.

"Wonderful—if true," he gasped. "We use the alcohol rub. But we're beginning to miss too many bottles of alcohol. Next time Nat Goodwin comes to town we'll have to find out how many quarts of vinegar go to a tub."

The clerk at the Palmer House baths misunderstood when asked about a cure for the pickled state.

"Send him over," he invited. "There's three more of 'em here now."

Somehow This Sounds Familiar.

"Some of the subtitles I see on the screen," says Tom Bret, the scenario editor, "reveal as much ignorance as one Patsy Donovan. Patsy had just been elected to the Board of Aldermen, and was determined that his friends and relatives should not regret it.

"At the very first meeting of the board one of the members said, 'Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as we all chew tobacco, I move that six cuspidors be installed in the Aldermanic Chamber.'

"Patsy was on his feet in an instant. 'And I move,' he shouted, 'that me brother, Mike, is one av them!' "

Heroes Are Born, Not Trained.

By Hanford C. Judson.

Sargeant William J. Moore has won a croix de guerre, French decoration of honor, for conspicuous courage in a battle with the Germans. They have found out in France that he is a bit more of a man than most. Well, he just happens to be. God decorated his soul when he was born and it comes natural to him to be brave and do brave things. They can train good soldiers to show all kinds of courage; but Willie Moore—I call him that, because five or six years ago when what I'm going to tell about him happened he was a red-headed youngster—didn't need to be trained. His is the kind of heart and hand that need no spur to do something spontaneously courageous. Even before this every-day bit of heroism that I'm speaking of, he had won a Carnegie silver medal for saving a life. That was when he was a mere boy—twelve years ago.

I didn't see this thing happen. It was just behind my back. Those who saw it watched it doubtless with an instant's apprehension—it was over in an instant—then they got Willie out to a surgeon. Most of those with backs turned never knew of it. No one said anything because they feared to frighten women who were present viewing a picture for the National Board of Censors, now called the National Board of Review. It was in a dark cubby-hole of a projection room on Fourteenth street, New York. Small and narrow; its projection booth, with open door, was at the back just beside the only entrance and exit. This was before there were adequate fire regulations.

Willie was at the machine. Several other employees of the company were present in charge of the showing. Somehow while Willie was turning the crank a coil of film fell out of someone's hands and spread itself out snake-like on the floor beside the machine and it happened that at that minute a spark of carbon, thrown out of the lamppost, fell right on the film.

When celluloid is exposed it burns fast—so fast that it gives a burst of the hottest kind of flame. There was probably enough celluloid in the booth to have filled the whole room with fire. If Willie had waited for someone else to do something, if he hadn't done the right thing fast enough to get ahead of that flame, it is probable that I would not be writing now. An instant is short, but the human mind can do some fast thinking in it. One can jerk his hand away from a snake-bite, and that implies a lot of quick recognition.

A man likes to have a hat or something to cover hot flame with. He is apt to look around for something. But Willie Moore had only his bare hands and he put them on to the job. Almost instantaneously he was down on that fire—and it was a real celluloid fire by the time he reached it. Celluloid burns slowly even under smothering hands before it is quite extinguished. He kept a cool head to begin with and endured bare hands on that hot flame till the job was done.

Cigarette Rescues Press Agent.

A cigarette thrown carelessly to the floor by Anders Randolf, one of the principal players in "Reclaimed," caused a near panic in the studio of Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., in Yonkers, during a recent rehearsal. But for the quick action of Niles Welch the incident might have resulted seriously for all concerned. As it is, Mabel Juliene Scott finds herself today minus a gown valued at $370, and her nerves considerably shattered.

The company had just assembled following the noon recess, and director, players and cameramen were giving their entire attention to the work of Miss Scott, who was enacting a scene in an elaborate restaurant setting. "Throw your cigarette to the floor!" shouted director Webster to Randolf. The actor did so instantly, and in less time than it takes to record the result Miss Scott's gown was ablaze.

Smokeless Mondays for Ambulance.

The male employees of Marcus Loew's theaters propose to refrain from smoking one day during the week, and donate the money that would have been expended to a fund with which an ambulance to be known as "Loew Theater Employees' Ambulance" will be maintained on the western fighting front. An appeal to all Loew employees has been issued and reads as follows:

"A committee representing the various employees of the theaters controlled by Marcus Loew have decided to donate an ambulance for special service abroad, and will be given in honor of our fellow employees who are in the service.

"In order to raise funds for the purchase of this ambulance it has been decided to inaugurate a "smokeless day" for the employees or any one connected in any way with Loew's theatrical enterprises.

"Commencing Monday, April 22, and every Monday thereafter, until further notice, every employee is requested to refrain from using tobacco in any form, and the money thus saved is to be given to the house manager, who will in turn forward same to a committee in charge to be deposited in a fund for this great cause.

"Your support is needed and requested. Whether your average daily expense for smokes is 5 cents or 50 cents is not the question; but, whatever it is, donate it to this good cause. Now, boys, let us all work hand in hand to make this a great big success. Show your true spirit; start on the 25th and keep it it up."

It's All in the Last Sentence.

"The Whispering Chorus," which is an Artcraft picture, called all of the studio forces into play in the securing of research data concerning the staging of a murder trial, the scene of which is laid in Ohio some years ago.

The first difficult point came when it was necessary to arrange for the proper costuming of a police chief from the Buckeye city. The Lasky studios telegraphed to the chiefs of police in the leading cities of Ohio for information in this regard.

That matter settled other difficulties came up in connection with the accurate staging of the murder trial, which is one of the intense dramatic scenes in the production. "Get an Ohio judge to help us," was C. B. De Mille's order. Then the assistant directors and the scenario department and research workers got busy, scouring all Southern California for a former Ohio judge.

Former Judge Henry B. Parker from an Ohio court was prevailed upon to come out to the Lasky studio and supervise the staging of the trial. He informed the art directors as to the arrangement of the courtroom, and the wardrobe department as to costuming, thus guaranteeing that the details were technically correct. Any photoplay fans who were ever tried for murder in Ohio may now rest assured that they will observe in the films a trial which is staged correctly in every detail.

Another Cluck to Go with Muck.

An enemy alien, tried and convicted, is interned behind steel bars at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, and the judge and jury in the case was Edith Storey. Miss Storey gave the prisoner thirty days in which to recant and learn to sing "The Star Spangled Banner." The Metro star would have insisted on a salute to the flag also, but the enemy alien happens to be a parrot, whose offense consisted in swearing in German.

The bird, which is a recent acquisition at the Metro studios, had a place in the sun until its disgrace. That is, its cage was hung in Miss Storey's dressing room, and she fed it the choicest seeds. Until one day the parrot said something. It was a twelve-cylinder word. Miss Storey listened, aghast.

The word began with "Verdammte." But that wasn't the half of it. Miss Storey reached for the cage and hauled it down. Then she held a drumhead court martial, and pronounced the following sentence:

"Polly, you are now a prisoner of war. You're to be put in a steel-barred cage until you learn how to sing "The Star Spangled Banner." Meanwhile, you're to have your feathers dyed red, white and blue. You're too noisy for the silent drama anyway."

Investigation revealed that the parrot before coming to Metro belonged to a German family, and was raised on a diet of noodles, weinerwurst, and Rhine wine.

Wouldn't Be Mrs. Powder-Her-Nose.

With an interpreter as first aid to cupid a Yaqui chieftain proposed by proxy to Anna Q. Nilsson, leading woman for the Metro star, Bert Lytell, when Lytell and his supporting company were at Arivaca, Ariz., recently. The players were on location when the chief, who was a daily spectator, became smitten with Miss Nilsson's blonde beauty.

The chief gloried in the name of Proud-of-His-Nose. He pestered Director Carewe to death, finally reaching Carewe's ear through a half-breed interpreter. The Yaqui swore that the pretty paleface, "with eyes like the stars," was the only woman he had ever loved. As an inducement he added that he had a thriving alfalfa ranch and owned twenty-two ponies.

"You tell Chief Proud-of-His-Nose that he's been drinking brandy, and had a pony too much," said Carewe to the interpreter. "Miss Nilsson won't be anybody's squaw. She's already wedded to her art, and is afraid of the Indian sign anyway."

While the nation-wide beauty competitions of the Gaumont Company is being handled by a man named Bryan he is not the silver-tongued orator of that name who prophesied that in the event of a war with Germany a million men would volunteer over night.

But the Gaumont representative of this illustrious name states that the prophesy might better be applied to the number of men who are willing to volunteer their services in the selection of the hundreds of beautiful houris for Gaumont's forthcoming spectacular features.

"If there is a single—or married—man who doesn't envy me my job, or who hasn't volunteered to act as my assistant," says Mr. Bryan, "I have failed to meet him"!

One night recently when the Publicity Department of The Whartons happened to be working overtime, a messenger boy remarked, when he received several telegrams with laconic instruction to "Charge 'em; Wharton account":

"I use to have some night calls where I could make money."

This gave an idea to the Publicity Department, which developed into the following story:

"One night recently a number of still photographs on the third episode of 'The Eagle's Eye' were lying on a desk in the outer office of The Whartons suite, when a messenger boy was waiting for some telegrams. He spent his waiting time glancing over the pictures. The messages were handed over, but the boy made no motions to leave.

"'Well, what's the matter?' he was asked.

"'I was just wondering if I would be lucky enough to be called sometime when that guy is here,' said the lad.

"He was pointing at a picture of King Baggot giving a messenger a dollar."

When this story was shown to the person who had called forth the remark from the messenger boy, it went rather sour. Either version is still deemed serviceable by the Wharton Publicity Department.

Likewise By This Department.

You give me a couple of names, and let me show you how good I am by getting up a story about 'em. I got this game down pat. I got a system."

The speaker in appearance radiated confidence as he spoke to the crowd in the publicity department of World Pictures.

"All I want is a chance," continued Herkimer Henry. "I got a system that you can't beat."

"All right, hop to it," said the World Pictures publicity manager. "Here is your 'chance.' Director Harley Knoles is taking a company to Bat Cave, North Carolina, to take exteriors for a picture to be called 'The Oldest Law.' Now put your system to work on that."

After a few moments of heavy thought, and fifteen minutes of wrestling with a typewriter, Henry turned in the following gem of purest ray serene:

"When Harley Knoles and his World Pictures company of thirteen left New York City on the thirteenth of the month for Bat Cave, North Carolina, to take exteriors for 'The Oldest Law' all sorts of dire things were predicted to happen to them.

"It was declared that the prominence of the figure '13' in their departure would have a grievous effect on the trip. As the figure showed up with increasing prominence the superstitious members of the company became highly aroused, and declared that the trip would settle once for all the question of whether or not the figure was really unlucky.

"The train on which they left New York was scheduled to depart at 11:05, but was held up eight minutes, thereby leaving at 11:13 on track number 13. The car they rode in was also numbered 13. When dining they were served by waiter number 13. After dinner Mr. Knoles, upon looking for his Pullman chair, found it to be number 13. One their arrival the baggage checked amounted to 13 pieces, but one of the trunks was missing.

"'What could you expect?' asked one member of the company. 'Thirteen is a hoodoo number, and that's why we lost the trunk.' But just at that moment the missing trunk was located in a second baggage wagon.

"Now every member of the World Pictures 'Oldest Law' company is firmly convinced that the number '13' is really a lucky number, and far from the unlucky number it has always been thought to be."

Smiling contentedly, Herkimer Henry proferred his 13 story to the publicity manager.

"Some story!" ejaculated Henry. "And some system, eh?"

The publicity manager read the story carefully.

"Some story, all right," he replied, "and some system. But I'm afraid there's no job for you in this office."

"W-w-why not?" gasped Henry.

"Your system's all wrong," was the reply. "You played an unlucky number. News is publicity here—straight news."

U. S. Exhibitors Secure "The Crucible of Life"

Authors Film Company's Production Based on Bartley Campbell's Play "Fairfax," to Be Distributed Through Foursquare.

FOLLOWING closely upon the announcement that the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation had secured from Bacon Backer Film Corporation their initial feature production "Men," founded on Edward Sheldon's powerful play of the same title, comes the further announcement that this company has also secured "The Crucible of Life" from Authors Film Company.

This production is a patriotic drama, in seven reels, dealing with society and the great war, and founded upon the stage success "Fairfax" by Bartley Campbell. It was produced under direction of Captain Harry Lambert. This picture is said to be a strong dramatic production and to possess an abundance of sentimental interest, the variety of dramatic possibilities covering a wide scope; there is the melodramatic and the straight dramatic, the social side and the merest touch of war. Grace Darmond and Jack Sherrill are the featured players, while Frank O'Connor, Winifred Harris and Edwin Fosberg are cast in prominent roles.

"The Crucible of Life" will be distributed in the same manner as "Men," that is, by Foursquare Pictures through their exchanges in principal cities of the United States, and Superfeatures, Limited, in Canada. Foreign distribution, outside of the Dominion of Canada will be handled by Robertson-Cole Company, whose chief offices are located in New York and London, with branches in Singapore, Calcutta, Sidney, and other large foreign cities.

Southwestern to Handle Foursquares.

With a view to enlarging its operations in Southwestern territory, a contract has been entered into by Foursquare Pictures and the Southwestern Film Corporation, by which the latter organization will distribute all of the Foursquare products in the states which it covers.

"Our arrangement with Messrs. F. M. Sanford and L. C. McHenry," said Treasurer Jacob Wildberg, of Foursquare, "is for the purpose of obtaining the utmost efficiency for our patrons. To secure such efficiency the element of distribution cost is an essential, and because of the admorable organization the Southwestern Film Corporation has effected and maintains it is possible to secure a higher degree of service for the exhibitor, and to provide him with photoplays on the commercial basis I regard as imperative for his needs.

"Operating cost is one of the fundamentals in the distribution of pictures which must have the closer attention—I believe—of those in the business who wish to see distribution placed upon a basis of lasting satisfaction. Therefore, whenever such an arrangement similar in advantage to that made with Southwestern can be made at few other points it will be brought about."

Ince to Make Five Petrova Pictures.

In accordance with contract recently entered into between Madame Petrova and Ralph Ince, referred to in our issue of April 20, by which Mr. Ince will devote his talents exclusively to Petrova productions, it is announced that he has obtained a release from the Advance Film Corporation with which he has been associated, and will make three productions for the Polish star in addition to "Tempered Steel," which is already complete, and "Patience Sparhawk," on which he is now working. This means that five of the eight pictures to be made under the present agreement between Madame Petrova and Frederick L. Collins will have been directed by Ralph Ince.

It is stated that Mr. Ince believes in many of the ideals that Madame Petrova has always stood for, such as, that pictures shall not only tell a story but consistently develop a character, giving much the same light and shade as the speaking stage affords; that they shall bring a message of feminism by having strong-charactered virile-minded, big-souled women for their heroines, and that every emotion expressed shall be clearly defined by the art of facial expression. The Petrova Pictures Company claim that the fact that the understanding by the public of the art of repression and the school of mental rather than purely physical acting is on the increase, is evidenced by the rapidly growing following which the Petrova pictures are building up throughout the country.

Katzenjammers in Camouflage Comedy.

The first of the International Film Service "Katzenjammer Kids" cartoons, released this week through the Educational Films Corporation of America, is said to be an unqualified success as a laugh provoker.

The title is "Vanity and Vengeance" and the action deals with a dog in a fox's skin, a cat in a muff, and the Katzenjammer family in church.

Unfortunately the fox's skin, which the Kids annexed to camouflage their dog, happened to be Mamma Katzenjammer's neckpiece, and the muff in which they hid the cat was Mamma's muff, and Mamma, being late for church and not as discerning as usual, placed the neckpiece and the muff in their customary positions without noticing the presence of the household pets. Apparently this particular dog and cat were not in the habit of attending church and a discordant note was in the atmosphere. The dog had been eyeing the cat with a not too friendly gaze, and when she lifted her voice in song it was too much to expect any self-respecting dog to stand, and a fight ensued. The congregation looked upon the dog as a wild animal and stampeded for the doors, windows and other means of egress, climbing over benches, on the roof, and even to the steeple's top, in their fright. The climax shows the Kids hiding under a seat, the organist playing a hymn and the Captain exercising his authority in time with the music.

War Subjects in Gaumont News No. 4.

Current issues of the Gaumont News and the Gaumont Graphic are fully up to the standard set by the first issues of these News reels. At this time, naturally, the greater part of each issue is devoted to wartime subjects, and in Gaument News No. 4 shipped to exchanges on April 16. at the time when the entire universe is watching with breathless interest the grapple between the Allied forces and the invading Huns, every subject relates to the war. There are shown in detail the biggest rifle range in the world, fitted with the latest equipment, where Uncle Sam's soldiers are becoming the most expert marksmen; a big sham battle, where the marines are given hard practice in almost actual warfare; aerial photography, by which submarines may be detected beneath the surface of the ocean; the visit of the Secertary of the Navy to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, where more than 10,000 men are in readiness; and, among other timely scenes, the thrilling, death-defying aerial stunts performed by Lieutenant Flachaire, the famous French "Ace" who is aiding in the instruction of American aviators, which amazed official Washington.

The "News" is shipped every Tuesday morning and the "Graphic" every Friday morning, and exhibitors are enabled to show these reels as soon as received, without having to wait for a release date.

Hiller & Wilk Make a Quick Sale.

When J. J. Goodstein, of the Keystone Distributing Company of Philadelphia, came to the office of Hiller & Wilk, Incorporated, in the Longacre Building, New York, recently to inquire for the rights to "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," for Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico, he was informed that this territory was still available. Knowing the success that attended the exploitation of "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," in Southern New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania, he was anxious to secure another territory for simliar exploitation, but when he left their office had not definitely decided to take this territory. He returned to their office three hours later and when he asked if territory was still available he was surprised to be informed that during the three hours that he was away a sale had been consummated for the rights, contracts drawn and executed and the purchase price paid in cash. Before starting for Philadelphfia, Mr. Goodstein admitted that this was doing business fast.

Further details regarding this purchase and distribution plans for above mentioned territory will be announced later.

The advertising matter on this comedy will be composed of a lobby display of photographs, and one, three and six sheet posters.

Steiner Complimented on Lithographs.

The line of lithographs issued in connection with the Jester Comedies has brought William Steiner many letters of congratulation for its quality and distinctiveness.

Many Newspapers to Publish Story of "Eagle's Eye"

NOVELIZATION OF FLYNN SERIAL TO BE RUN IN TWENTY INSTALMENTS IN SIXTY-SEVEN PROMINENT JOURNALS—ALSO TO APPEAR IN ANOTHER MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

A PUBLICITY campaign in connection with "The Eagle's Eye" has been inaugurated by The Whartons, which they announce will include the publication weekly of a page of reading matter and pictures in sixty-seven newspapers said to have an aggregate sworn circulation of nearly four million.

The newspapers which have already signed contracts are: New York American; Albany, N. Y., Telegram; Troy, N. Y., Observer; Atlanta, Constitution; Charlotte, News; Macon, Ga., News; Boston, American; Bridgeport, Herald; Buffalo, Express; Rochester, N. Y., Herald; Chicago, Examiner; Louisville, Courier-Journal; Springfield, O., News; Canton, O., Repository; Houston, Post; El Paso, Times; Austin, Tex., American; Denver, News; Colorado Springs, Evening Telegraph; Salt Lake City, Tribune; Lansing, State Jornal; Lincoln, State Journal; Los Angeles, Examiner; Minneapolis, Tribune; Sioux Falls, Press; Fargo, Forum; Philadelphia, Public Ledger; Washington, Times; Erie, Times; Wilmington, Del., Star; Pittsburgh, Press; Wheeling, News; San Francisco, Examiner; Boise, Capital News; Montreal, Standard; Winnipeg, Free Press; Hamilton, Spectator; Calgary, News Telegram; Quebec, Telegraph.

The campaign consists of the novelization of the picture, the newspapers having agreed to publish five thousand words a week, each article dealing with only one episode of the picture, the publication to occur for twenty consecutive weeks in the order in which the episodes are released.

Negotiations for fifty-three other territories not entirely covered by the sixty-seven papers already signed are pending and will be announced later. In most cases the Sunday editions will be used. In some instances other editions were selected as being more advantageous to exhibitors, and where the papers do not issue Sunday editions, the one with the largest home circulation was chosen. All installments will be run under the general caption "The Eagle's Eye" and each installment will be published under the sub-title covering the episode.

Publication will start in some of the papers the last week in April, and others will begin shortly after that. While the contracts do not specify any amount of advertising the newspapers must do, it is said that each individual paper has arranged an advertising campaign to call the attention of the public to the novelization, which will mean added benefit to exhibitors.

As previously announced the novelization of "The Eagle's Eye" is appearing in Photoplay Magazine, co-incident as near as possible for a monthly magazine to do so, with the release of the episodes. In addition, the same novelization will appear in "The Gentlewoman," a magazine having a large circulation in the United States and Canada; the installments being published one month later than in Photoplay, which should be of advantage to exhibitors not using first runs.

The negotiation for newspaper syndication is being handled by Allen Rock, of the Press Service Bureau, who early in the production of the picture received a number of requests from his clients for publication rights.

"A Romance of the Underworld" Screened for Prisoners and Praised in Institution's Official Organ.

THE test of expert knowledge was applied to "A Romance of the Underworld" when that picture, the first production of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, was shown recently at Sing Sing Prison before an audience composed of 1,050 inmates of that institution. The picture is an expose of the cocaine and opium traffic in Greater New York and it is doubtful if anywhere an equal number of persons so familiar with the conditions and types of character depicted in this photoplay could have been gotten together.

Evidence of appreciation of the faithful presentation of underworld conditions in the metropolis was furnished by the favorable comments and rapt attention throughout. No word of criticism was heard. Of a rather unusual character is a review of the picture, written by George Gordon Wade, a member of the Mutual Welfare League, composed of inmates of the institution, for the Star-Bulletin, the official organ of the league.

"The two greatest evils in the world today," declares Mr. Wade in his review, "are Prussian kultur and the 'dope' habit, and although the former sooner or later will be crushed, the latter will continue to wreck the minds and bodies of men and kill their souls, just so long as drugs can be obtained in an unlawful manner. The theme of 'A Romance of the Underworld' deals with the drug traffic in and about the Chinatown slums and portrays in a vivid manner the power of the ward 'Boss' that makes possible the existence of this horrible menace, so deadly to the moral atmosphere of any community."

The review reflects the evident admiration of the audience for the star, Catherine Calvert, by referring to her "charming personality, graceful movements and facial beauty" as convincing evidence that she will take her place "in the 'A' class of successful screen stars." It also pays high tribute to the work of Edwin Forsberg, "who plays O'Leary, the political leader, giving a true portrayal of the type that dominates the denizens of the underworld," and finds nothing but commendation for the rest of the all-star cast.

"I value this review," says Mr. Keeney, "possibly more highly than any other which could be written. If such an audience is not capable of passing judgment on a story of the underworld, no audience is."

W. H. Productions Will Reissue Chaplin Comedies

Series of Twenty, Single and Two-Reelers, Now Being Re-edited—Also Report Strong Demand for Harts and Keystones.

W. H. to Reissue Chaplin Comedies.

"WE are working on the principle of supply and demand," says an official of W. H. Productions Company. "The State Rights market from our standpoint is in a healthy condition. We find a demand for good subjects of one and two-reel lengths, and due to the increase in production cost of short subjects, it seems to be impossible for the majority of film producers to turn out the required subjects at a price within the means of the independent exchange man.

"W. H. Productions Company is in position to supply this demand because of the fact that the negative cost of our short subjects is reasonable, and we can sell the rights for various territories at a price assuring a fine profit to both exchange and the exhibitor. This is proven by the fact that we have disposed of the world rights to our Hart features, all but about ten per cent. of the country on our twenty-eight Keystones, and the series of two-reel Shorty Hamiltons are being sold in record-breaking time.

"We have now also decided to release to the State Right market a series of twenty single and two-reel Charlie Chaplins, all being re-edited and the price exceptionally low.

"Our first Bessie Barriscale feature, 'Satan's Pawn,' is being taken up quickly, and we are now working on the second feature with this star."

Gertrude McCoy in Piedmont Film.

For a photodrama that will appeal to the masses it is said that the Piedmont Pictures Corporation's special feature "His Daughter Pays" fills the bill. This picture is an adaptation of the stage play "La Bacarrat," by Frederick H. James, and that it contains all the elements that go to the making of a photodrama of universal appeal, that is thrills, an interesting story, plenty of suspense, good acting, together with being well produced and containing many elaborate scenes. This, the producers say, is the general opinion of those who have seen it, including many state rights buyers and others competent to judge the merits of a motion picture, and it is claimed to be a feature production that will meet with the approval of the "fans" and furnish exhibitors with an attraction that will make itself felt at the box office.

"His Daughter Pays" stars Gertrude McCoy, an actress of ability and one who has a large box office following, being well known and liked by many theatergoers who have seen her in Edison productions and special features. Her name should prove an asset in advertising and publicity campaigns in connection with the picture. In addition it is said that there are many other features that can be played up by the live-wire exhibitors.

Outing-Chesters Prove Popular.

Jesse J. Goldburg announces that he is daily in receipt of telegrams and letters from exhibitors throughout the United States booking the entire series of Outing-Chester travel-scenics one each week, which he is distributing. He states that a total of one hundred and seven letters and telegrams have been received covering every state in the Union, and accounts for this by what is claimed to be the unusual character of the releases and the verdict of trade critics as to their entertaining and instructive character.

While the general trend of the communications indicate that single-reel travels or scenics are largely used as fillers, Mr. Goldburg in all contracts specifies that the Outing-Chester series must be featured as an independent attraction, and not used merely to consume twelve to fifteen minutes of an exhibitor's program. It is stated in this connection that several releasing concerns endeavored to secure the series, but as they were not willing to agree to exploit the series independent of any other attraction they handle, Mr. Goldburg determined to continue to exploit them on a state rights basis, and where the desired medium of distribution is not found in any particular territory to fill the wants of exhibitors direct.

"Mickey" The Result Of Fine Direction

The Best Work of Five Experts Represented in Western Import Company's Production.

A REPRESENTATIVE of the Western Import Company, in speaking of conditions, stated:

"There seems to be an opinion among many who are closely connected with the film industry that it has attained its maximum limitations in the sense of expansion and innovation. In former periods progress and improvement went by rapid jumps and bounds and decisions required quick-fire judgment because delay in consideration of propositions often proved fatal.

"Instead of the industry reaching the 'bumper' end of the line of progress, it has reached in reality a junction of ingenuity. This is the era of finesse, and evidence of this deep finesse, such as Griffith, Ince and others have shown, is again brought forth by Mack Sennett in his new comedy drama 'Mickey.' This production displays Mr. Sennett's new form of technique. In substance, this new form is that of the modern trend—quick action filled with value and composed of all essentials.

"Mr. Sennett, after giving the story of 'Mickey' the most careful treatment, became convinced that it was possessed of five important parts: humor, pathos, thrills, adventure and 'heart.' He then surrounded himself with a capable corps of directors, each a leader of his particular field from the above angles. He caused the production to be constructed from five different viewpoints and then personally supervised its final preparation, using such parts from each director as were most fitting to make 'Mickey' the greatest as well as the first of all comedy dramas constructed under this new form. He further believes that it will be the epic of this particular type for a long time to come."

"Mickey" will soon be released by the Western Import Company.

Francis Ford to Make Short Subjects.

In addition to the feature program which has been laid out for Fordart Films, work on which is to be commenced at the new studios in Los Angeles within a short time, Francis Ford, the director-general, also has planned to make one and two-reel subjects in series of six.

These short pictures are destined to create a sensation when shown to the public. They are complete stories, and are said to be an innovation for this character of releases, and to be entirely different from the short pictures which have been produced in the past.

Announcement will shortly be made regarding the first series of six and the manner in which they will be released to exhibitors.

M. C. Hughes Now With Foursquare.

Foursquare Pictures have just contracted with M. C. Hughes to take complete charge of its Buffalo and Pittsburgh exchanges. Mr. Hughes, though one of the youngest managers in the business, is also one of the most active and successful. A college graduate, he brings to his aid the essentials of a charming personality and a persuasiveness which is one of the chief factors in selling.

In addition Mr. Hughes is an executive of proven ability—as his record as manager of the Metro Film Service, of Canada, has demonstrated. His association with the Foursquare exchanges is one in which he participates in the profits, and he may be counted upon to consider the needs of his patrons to the extent of keeping them permanently on the books of this organization.

Goldburg Moves to Larger Quarters.

After May 1, 1918, Jesse J. Goldburg, state rights and special exploitation representative of motion picture attractions, will move his offices from the Times Building, New York, to 120 West 41st street.

This removal is occasioned because of increased business, and in his new offices, which are larger and more commodious than those occupied by him in the Times Building, Mr. Goldburg will have a perfectly equipped projection room for the viewing of attractions which he is handling.

"The Wrong Flat" Shown to Exhibitors.

"The Wrong Flat," the May release of the Jester Comedies, featuring Twede-Dan, was given a screening to a gathering of New York exhibitors several days ago, and it is stated that the consensus of opinion was "The Wrong Flat" is the best of the Jester Comedies so far released.

Petrova Representatives Complete Tour of Exchanges

Herbert Lubin and Bert Ennis Made Flying Trip in Interest of Polish Star's Productions—Visited Principal Cities in United States.

HERBERT LUBIN, personal representative of Madame Olga Petrova and a representative of the firm of General Enterprises, Inc., together with Bert Ennis, director of publicity for the Petrova Picture Company, returned to New York on Monday following a flying trip which embraced the principal points of the United States.

Messrs. Lubin and Ennis paid a visit to each office of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which is distributing the special productions featuring Madame Olga Petrova made under the auspices of her own personal production organization. During the tour arrangements were completed with each one of the exchanges whereby a new scheme of exploitation is to be worked out commencing with the fourth Petrova feature, "Patience Sparhawk." It is planned to apply a considerable amount of intensive publicity covering each picture in the various localities embraced by the exchanges.

Tentative plans were also laid with the representatives of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and the various newspapers throughout the United States looking toward a personal tour by Madame Olga Petrova to be made during the near future. She will probably appear in leading photoplay houses of the country for the purpose of aiding the present drive now in effect for the sale of War Saving Stamps.

Messrs. Lubin and Ennis report that the franchise holders of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit were enthusiastic regarding the personal appearance of Madame Petrova in their respective territories and the utmost co-operation will be forthcoming from the different exchanges in the carrying out of this scheme.

Thus far but three of the new special productions in which this star has appeared have been released from coast to coast, and it is said that "Daughter of Destiny," the initial release, has more than lived up to the expectations of the Petrova Picture Company and the franchise holders of the circuit, while "The Light Within," the second production, has also met with the approval of those exhibitors who have played the picture, and the box-office results on these two pictures have more than justified the expectations of all concerned.

It is believed by Madame Petrova's representatives that the arrangements consummated during their recent tour will result in bringing the producer and exhibitor more closely together, as special pains were taken to ascertain the type of picture most in demand by the picture showmen, as well as the exact wants of the exhibitor relative to the proper exploitation materials needed to best advertise Petrova Productions.

Steiner Talks of Jesters

Says Exchanges Are Sending In Optimistic Reports and Ordering Additional Prints.

TO make comedies is one thing; but to make comedies that will command a ready market is entirely a different matter," said William Steiner, of the Jester Comedy Company. "When I decided to go in for comedies, I realized the woods were full of them, and they were being ground out in bunches every day. It seemed that everyone in the manufacturing end was making comedies, and with this in mind, I knew that I had a hard road to travel but that did not deter me from going ahead, as I felt sure of Twede-Dan, as a drawing power and had secured stories that would meet with the approval of the fans. That I was right in my judgment, can be proven by the way the Jester Comedies have been received.

"The exchanges, which include the Photo Drama Company of New York City, N. Y.; the Masterpiece Film attractions of Philadelphia, the United Business Association of Penn., of Cleveland, the State Film Company of Detroit, the Unity Photoplays Company of Chicago, the Standard Film Corporation of Minneapolis, the Standard Film Corporation of Omaha, the Standard Film Corporation of St. Louis, the Standard Film Corporation of Kansas City, the Swanson-Nolan Supply Company of Denver, the Western Feature Film Company of San Francisco, R. M. Savini of Atlanta, the Eltabran Film Company of Charlotte, the Foursquare Pictures, Inc., of Dallas, the Foursquare Pictures, Inc., of New Orleans, and the R. D. Marson Attractions Company of Boston have sent in the most optimistic reports, and in many of the territories have ordered extra prints to meet the demand."

"The Recruit," the first release, went over with a rush, and business increased in leaps and bounds with each release. The fourth release, "The Wrong Flat," which goes out in May, gives promise of breaking all records so far achieved.

"Yes, I am more than satisfied," contiued Mr. Steiner, "with my venture into the comedy field. Whether I will go in again for the feature dramas is hard to say at this time, but one can never tell what the morrow will bring forth. At present, all my time is devoted to the Jester Comedies, and between the studio and the business end, I have my hands full."

Petrova Declared "Best Dressed Woman."

After a long and careful study of the leading personages of the theatrical and screen world, the Women's Institute of Domestic Arts and Science of Scranton, Pennsylvania, have conferred on Madame Olga Petrova the appellation "The Best Dressed Woman in America"; this decision, it is said, was reached only after several conferences between the creators and leaders of fashion for this country.

It is also announced that several exclusive photographs of Madame Petrova will be used to illustrate a book entitled "The Secrets of Distinctive Dress," by Mary Brooks Pickens, an authority on matters of this kind. This work deals with style, design and color harmonies of clothes, together with the principles underlying the development of social ease, beauty and personal charm, and it is used in connection with courses of study laid out by the Institute. Madame Petrova will contribute a preface to the above volume, dealing with the selection of gowns for use by women of the picture world.

William Lampe in "Moral Suicide."

William Lampe, who plays the role of Dr. George Daniels in Graphics' latest production, "Moral Suicide," has had a stage experience of twenty-one years. His work, though mainly dramatic, has at times called for comedy roles. Under the direction of the Frohmans he appeared with Nat Goodwin; with James K. Hackett in "Don Caesar's Return" and "The Crisis"; with Wilton Lackaye in "The Law and the Man"; with Henrietta Crossman in "The Real Thing"; with William Collier in "Take My Advice"; with Hilda Spong in "The Firm of Cunningham"; with Blanche Bates in "Madame Butterfly." For three years he played the part of Tilford Wheeler in "The County Chairman." Other roles he has played include Lem Sanderson in "Way Down East," the stellar role in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" and a leading part with Cyril Scott in "The Prince Chap." For many years he starred in his own sketch "One Flight Up." In "Moral Suicide" he is said to have portrayed a difficult role in an excellent manner.

Key Speaks About Foursquare Quality

Also Reviews Achievement of This Organization During Its First Year, Which Will End Shortly.

IN speaking of their first anniversary, which is fast approaching, P. V. R. Key, an official of Foursquare Pictures, called attention to the fact that optimism based upon a foundation of stability is one of the attributes of that organization, and that when conditions in the motion picture field looked the most gloomy, Foursquare held to the belief that all would be well before a great while.

Mr. Key further stated: "The effort to attain a quality standard, which George Backer insisted should be the ultimate achievement, is being insisted upon, and it is gratifying to have exhibitors express their opinion as to the value of the new Foursquare photoplays and the service rendered.

"Jacob Wildberg and George Backer have insisted upon the acceptance of only those photoplays which would please to an unusual degree, and have held that the secret of success meant the securing of a superior article of merchandise, and selling it at a fair price. With such pictures as 'The Cast-Off,' 'The Bar Sinister,' and 'One Hour,' and the U. S. Exhibitor's productions, 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid,' 'Those Who Pay,' 'The Belgian,' and 'Just a Woman,' and the Wharton serial, 'The Eagle's Eye,' Foursquare would appear to be working in the direction of its quality standard.

"But Mr. Backer and Mr. Wildberg have arranged for other correspondingly fine product for distribution, and when these pictures reach the exhibitors there will be evidence that the quality idea is the only one which may be counted on to last."

Arthur F. Beck to Visit Cropper.

Arthur F. Beck, president of the Sterling Pictures Corporation, will leave for Chicago Wednesday to confer with R. C. Cropper, western district manager of the Sterling Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Beck will arrange with Mr. Cropper to handle the new "de luxe" features to be released under the "Sterling System."

H. R. Ebenstein, manager of sales, is now on his way to the coast, screening "The Hypocrites" and "The Natural Law" for independent exchangemen in the important film centres he is visiting.

Ernest Shipman's Activities.

Announcement is made by Ernest Shipman that he has just closed a contract to handle the Josh Binney two-reel comedies, which will be handled on a state rights basis. The first four are already finished, and others are in the course of preparation. A further account of this transaction will be found on another page of this issue.

Mr. Shipman has also made arrangements to release on state rights basis the six and seven-reel feature productions being made by the Titan Feature Photoplay Company, of Spokane, Washington.

He also reports gratifying success in disposing of rights to the Shorty Hamilton series of features, and states that the third picture, "The Rangers," is now complete. W. H. Clifford, of the W. H. Clifford Photoplays, which is producing this series, is expected to reach New York within the next few days, when he will inaugurate an intensive drive in connection with these subjects.

Shipman to Handle "Berlin via America."

"Berlin via America," the first Fordart Production, in which Francis Ford and Edna Emerson are starred, will be released on the state rights basis, as announced. Mr. Ford has selected Mr. Ernest Shipman, 17 West 44th street, as sales agent for the handling of this production. He is said to have a number of buyers interested in "Berlin via America" and expects to close out several territories within a short time.

Billy West Writes a Scenario.

Billie West, star of King-Bee Comedies, announces that a comedy written by himself is soon to be produced by the King-Bee Films Corp. It will be titled "The King of Volcano" and it is said that Billy will have a hot time from start to finish, and that in addition forty pretty girls will be specially engaged for this production, which will be in two reels, and ready for release within a short time.

Heavy Booking of Hart Reissues.

Cole Placing Jesters in Jersey.

Henry Cole, the well-known Bronx exhibitor, is now engaged in placing Jester Comedies with exhibitors in northern New Jersey.

Madge Kennedy Making "The Fair Pretender"

CLOSE on her marked success in "The Danger Game" Goldwyn announces Madge Kennedy in "The Fair Pretender," by Florence C. Bolles, to be released May 19. The high praise from critics, exhibitors and the public evoked by the former vehicle cannot fail to help make the latter photoplay a success. Steadily Madge Kennedy has advanced in favor. Indeed, with the strongest assets a player in the silent drama can have—namely, wonderful eyes and a compelling smile—she relies as much on the technique of an actress as if she were not endowed with these rare gifts of attraction.

As "The Fair Pretender," she has every opportunity to employ her eyes and her smile and her technique. For the play is one of constant movement and her part of Sylvia Maynard is distinctly an acting one.

Throughout the play Madge Kennedy wends here way, a charming figure, bowed down with mock grief, reviving under the spell of her sweetheart's lovemaking and, in the end, proving her interest, womanhood and heroism.

To Issue Pathe Scenic Fortnightly.

Beginning May 12 the Pathe colored scenics and travelogues, which have artistically rounded out the programs of exhibitors all over the United States, will be released every other week instead of weekly. The exquisitely colored scenics and travelogues are in such demand that a large number of new ones are now in process of completion. The decision to issue them every other week is to afford exhibitors an opportunity of using both scenics and the "Britain's Bulwarks" war series.

Bairnsfather's Cartoons Make a Hit.

The most lucrative one-reel subjects ever put on the British market have been Captain Bruce Bairnsfather's film cartoons. With an eye for the humorous amid the bloody strife on the Western front the artist created a couple of delightful characters—Ole Bill and Alf. These two have created more genuine amusement than any other characters evolved from the titanic struggle. As drawings the artist's work first appeared in The Bystander, and created a record for popularity.

The appearance of the film cartoons was the signal for an unprecedented rush of business. One London contract alone was for $16,000, and the provincial bookings were proportionately good. Where Great Britain did so well there is abundant opportunity in the United States to do better. The Cartoon Film Company, Ltd., 76 and 78 Wardour street, London, England, are prepared to sell the exclusive United States rights.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Fox's "The Caillaux Case" Delayed for Developments

THE temporary withholding from release of William Fox's historical film-drama, "The Caillaux Case," to await publication of recent disclosures made by Bolo Pasha to the French Government is announced as the most striking instance in screen history of a picture play following hard on the heels of current events.

The picture was completed, and was ready for the public. All the leading characters had been disposed of not only in the play, but in real life. Bolo Pasha had been condemned to death for treason. Joseph Caillaux, once Premier of France, had been imprisoned on a similar charge. Mme. Caillaux had been disgraced in the eyes of her countrymen. Every sensation in the principals' highly sensational careers had been recorded. It seemed that the whole story had been told. Then came Bolo's sudden revelations, which now promise to add new chapters, involve other prominent figures, and make the picture more far-reaching than was at first expected.

Commenting on the situation last week, Mr. Fox declared:

"We have determined to give the story complete not only as a bigger and better picture, but because we want it to be a patriotic warning to any who would put other interests before love of country. Fact is a hundred times more impressive than fiction, and here is a group of persons who astounded two continents with their attempts—and their tragic failure—to betray the Allies to the Germans. It matters not whom Bolo may involve either in France, England, or America; we shall not hesitate to film his story to the end. 'The Caillaux Case' on the screen will be the Caillaux case in reality—the most notorious international intrigue of modern times."

The three chief figures in the picture are announced to be Mme. Caillaux, Joseph Caillaux, and Bolo Pasha. The drama, in order to reveal the ruthless ambition of Mme. Caillaux, shows that she forsook her first husband and ruined his life in order to make a brilliant marriage with Caillaux, then Minister of Finance. When Gaston Calmette, famous editor of the Paris Figaro, implicated Caillaux in dishonorable public acts, Mme. Caillaux took Calmette's life, was acquitted of murder, and she and her husband continued in their ambitious course.

When war broke out, so the film story shows, Caillaux became active among the pacifists and "defeatists," extending his machinations not only throughout France, but to Italy and America. Through Count Von Bernstorff huge sums of money were sent from Berlin to finance pro-German propaganda, which was spread by agencies closely associated with Caillaux. Bolo Pasha was one of the ringleaders in this intrigue, and the reward to the Caillauxs for their efforts to bring about a German peace was to be supreme power in a Prussianized France.

The United States Government unearthed in America a mass of evidence that completely defeated this plot, and sent the conspirators to punishment.

Rolinda Bainbridge Again with Brabin.

Nine years ago Charles J. Brabin was a leading man with the Edison Company, and Rolinda Bainbridge was his leading woman in one-reel comedy pictures. Today Brabin is directing his former leading woman. In casting "The Heart of a Butterfly," an original story by Katharine Kavanaugh, Brabin decided that the ideal person to play Mrs. Ames in this picture starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne was Rolinda Bainbridge. The first thing that Miss Bainbridge asked the director when assigned the part was whether there were any risks to be taken in the role.

"I always associate Charlie Brabin with risks," said Miss Bainbridge between scenes the other day. "In the old days with Edison he was the man who took all the risks. Whether he was playing the hero or villain it made no difference. As his leading woman I naturally had to work with him in many of the stunts done for comedy pictures, and we had plenty of thrilling escapes."

Ebony Releases "The Porters."

"The Porters," the third of the series of Ebony comedies, released this week by General Film Company, is said to be alive with the quaintest of screen humor. Sufficient punch and action to make a two-reel slapstick comedy are crowded into one reel by the capable company of negro players. The innovation of real black-face on the screen has met with the general approval of exhibitors, General Film says. Following "The Porters," General Film, will release "A Milk-Fed Hero," a fast-stepping farce comedy.

Carey Plays "The Three Bad Men."

Harry Carey has commenced work under the direction of Jack Ford in a new epic of the desert, which the author calls "The Three Bad Men." Eugene B. Lewis wrote the scenario fro man original story told by Ford and Carey.

Some Facts About Hal Cooley.

Hal Cooley, Universal juvenile, was born in Brooklyn twenty-three years ago. He has been on the Universal lot for nearly four years and during that time has appeared in many photodramas in various types.

Previous to his appearance on the screen Mr. Cooley was an actor on the legitimate stage. He played in "Man from Mexico," and "Kingdom of Hearts Content," as well as several short sketches.

Before signing with the Universal, Cooley appeared with Selig, Thomas H. Ince, American and the Mutual motion picture companies. He is now playing the juvenile lead in "The Bull's Eye," a multi-reel serial being directed by James W. Horne.

Mr. Cooley is six feet tall, has brown hair and gray eyes, and weighs 169 pounds. His favorite sports are baseball and football.

Gerard Film to Have Spectacular Showing at Strand

ACCORDING to reports filed by Carney Wilson, the energetic sales manager of the First National Exchange, Inc., of New York, "My Four Years in Germany" shattered some records that were considered impregnable during the week of April 15.

To begin with, an arrangement concluded with Moe Mark, Max Spiegel and Harold Edel sets a wholly new precedent in the American field of motion picture exhibition. This is nothing less than the decision of the Strand executives to show "My Four Years in Germany" for the week of April 28, coincident with its run at the Knickerbocker theater.

During the four years that it has been operated the Strand has exhibited one feature picture each week, or a total of some two hundred and ten productions. Not one picture out of the entire number was ever before shown in another Broadway theater before being booked at the Strand. When this fact is properly taken into consideration one gets some idea of the remarkable compliment that has been paid Ambassador Gerard's screen story. Moe Mark, who was chiefly instrumental in arranging the deal with the sales manager of the First National exchange, when asked his motive for his unprecedented move, said:

"At this tremendous crisis, when civilization is threatened by the most arrogant and cruel military power the world has ever seen, I consider it nothing less than our duty as loyal Americans to show Ambassador Gerard's masterly expose of the Kaiser and his clique. There are occasions when it is wise to forget business policies in order to do good where it will count most. I consider that such an occasion presents itself here, in the opportunity we have of showing 'My Four Years in Germany' to our particular clientele. If the picture has the same effect on others that it had on me personally, I will believe our object well accomplished."

In putting over this double showing in an appropriate manner a most ambitious advertising and publicity campaign will be undertaken. An appropriation of $10,000 equally divided between the Strand management and the First National, will be utilized for newspaper and billboard exploitation of the Gerard picture. Despite the fact that over one thousand 24-sheet stands are at present working in the vicinity of New York, another full edition of paper will be used to announce the Strand engagement.

Max Spiegel further emphasizes the patriotic motives of his associates in featuring "My Four Years in Germany" by declaring that the full gross receipts of the theater for the week will be used to purchase Liberty Bonds. Following out this timely suggestion, the First National Exchange has also pledged itself to convert its entire rental income for the week into the same kind of securities.

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand, has arranged to erect three booths in the lobby of the Strand—one to stimulate recruiting, one for the sale of Liberty Bonds, and one to help popularize War Savings Stamps. An armored car, containing recruiting and Liberty Bond speakers, will also tour the city under the auspices of the Strand management.

Orders have also been given to further augment the fifty-six piece orchestra at the theater with the idea of giving "My Four Years in Germany" the most effective musical presentation that any picture has ever had at the big house.

"Lonely Woman" and "Paying His Debt" Lead Triangle

AMONG Triangle's most popular magazine writer contributors is John A. Morosco, author of "The Lonely Woman," the opening release of the week beginning April 28. This well-known fictionist also wrote "The Shoes That Danced" and "The Hand at the Window," recent Triangle releases. The keen understanding of human nature and dramatic values which characterized the two former plays are apparent in "The Lonely Woman." This is a story of how a woman's unshaken belief in the character of the man she loved resulted in his acquittal and exoneration of a crime of which he had been unjustly accused. Belle Bennett has the featured role. Lee Hill, Percy Challenger, Anna Dodge, Blanche Grey, Alberta Lee, and Walter Perkins are in the cast.

"Paying His Debt," the second release of the week, was written by Alvin J. Neitz. This drama presents Roy Stewart in his first dual role under the Triangle banner. He appears as Frank Borden, the man, and Steve Morton, the vanishing bandit. Cliff Smith directed. Steve Rounds, cameraman, took numerous difficult double exposures for the picture. Roy Stewart, Cliff Smith, and Steve Rounds have worked together in many Western productions, the most recent of which are "Boss of the Lazy Y" and "Faith Endurin'." Spectacular feats of riding and beautiful photography are features of the play. In this story Steve Morton, "vanishing bandit," saves the life of Frank Borden, a human derelict. The two bear an astonishing likeness to one another. When Bordon recovers his health he pays his debt by playing "alibi man" to his benefactor, and very nearly pays the penalty of the other's guilt. Josie Sedgwick is leading woman. Harry Yammamoto, well-known Oriental actor, supplies a humorous touch as Ching, the Chinese cook. The cast includes Walter Perkins, William Ellingford, William Dyer, and Arthur Millett.

A "darktown" ball is a feature of "Mr. Miller's Economies," the two-reel Keystone comedy release of the week. Mrs. Kate Corbaley wrote the story. William Beaudine directed.

Loew Books "A Pair of Sixes."

It has been announced by George Kleine's New York Branch that a contract has been closed with the Loew houses in Greater New York to play "A Pair of Sixes" for sixty-five days. "A Pair of Sixes" is an Essanay production in six reels. The picture sparkles with humorous situations.

Taylor Holmes' clean, wholesome comedy appeals to all.

Bushman to Toe In in "Cyclone Higgins, D.D."

MOTION picture "fans" will see a new Francis X. Bushman in Metro's forthcoming production, "Cyclone Higgins, D. D.," which will have an early release—a Bushman they never knew existed. In the leading role of this five-act screen romance they will see not a Beau Brummel of the screen, but an out-and-out "character" actor. As C. Higgins in this Metro photodrama written and directed by William Christy Cabanne, Mr. Bushman wears goggles and ill-fitting garments of a non-descript type, stray locks of hair insist on tumbling about his forehead, and he "toes in." At no time throughout the five acts does he appear in the ordinary habiliaments of society either polite or near-polite, being frankly and consistently a struggling preacher of a backwoods community. For this reason, if for no other, "Cyclone Higgins, D.D.," should arouse wide interest and comment, but the entire production is one of vital interest and warm human qualities.

"Tarzan of the Apes" Going Strong All Over

THAT "Tarzan of the Apes," in its engagement at the Broadway theater, New York, was not playing an abnormal engagement, is attested by the remarkable business this picture is pulling throughout the entire country. Reports to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit from every point at which their biggest picture has played shows extraordinary results.

At Laramie, Wyoming, the day's receipts exceeded seven hundred dollars. The picture was produced there on a sixty-forty contract and returned over four hundred dollars as rental for one day's showing.

The Strand theater, Minneapolis, broke the house record during an entire week's run and returned over two thousand dollars as rental on a percentage agreement.

The Isis theater, Denver, Colorado, broke its daily and weekly record, while the Goodwin theater at Newark, N. J., originally booked the picture for one week and is keeping over for a run. The Tivoli, at San Francisco, is doing likewise, while Hulsey's Hippodrome at Dallas broke the record for admissions.

James D. Williams, of First National, states that in his opinion and that of his associates, "Tarzan of the Apes" will be the biggest moneymaker the box office has ever known and that bookings are so numerous and of such unusually long runs that in a number of instances extra prints are necessary to take care of them. And this in face of the fact that already ninety prints are in operation in the United States and nine in Canada.

O'Garry Story Released This Week.

The changes worked by a pretty young school teacher in bringing to an end a bitter mountain feud are cleverly and entertainingly pictured in "Mountain Law," a Blue Ridge Drama featuring Ned Finley and Marion Henry, released this week by General Film Company. This is the second of the series of western and mountain stories being produced by the creator of the famous "O'Garry" role.

Production plans for the "Blue Ridge Dramas" are rapidly being worked out in advance by Ned Finley, according to reports which have reached New York. Two subjects announced in preparation are "O'Garry Rides Alone," his second "O'Garry" story, and "The Man from Nowhere." The stories were written by L. Case Russell.

Broadway Showing for W. A. Brady's "Stolen Orders"

WILLIAM A. BRADY announces that his big picture, "Stolen Orders," which is said to equal "The Whip" in its thrilling qualities, is finished and is now undergoing its final cutting, titling and printing and will be shortly shown at a Broadway theater. Harley Knoles and Mr. Brady have been working on this picture off and on for five months, but the climatic conditions at Atlantic City during January and February delayed its completion.

It is to be released in eight reels and will be disposed of to territorial buyers. Sir William Jury, who handled "The Whip" in Great Britain, sent a special messenger across the ocean to bid for it. He saw it run in the rough at the Paragon laboratories and bought it on the spot, paying $60,000 for the rights in Great Britain alone.

The picture is a Drury Lane drama of the hair-raising type. It has the merit of being timely, having been Americanized, and deals with the work of secret German agents in the United States before and after the beginning of the war.

Mr. Brady has had the assistance of the Government in supplying the locale for some of the big scenes. The English Government has also furnished material taken in France to build up others.

Kitty Gordon is said to do the best screen work of her career as the wife of an American admiral who is led temporarily astray by the trickery of a German agent, acted by Montagu Love.

Carlyle Blackwell figures strongly in the picture as a young American lieutenant and June Elvidge plays his sweetheart, doing some remarkable feats of daring in the big balloon and aeroplane scenes. Madge Evans and George MacQuarrie also have important parts.

During the next year Mr. Brady will devote his screen activities to the production of five famous plays—"Way Down East," which is renowned as one of the most successful plays the American stage ever knew, having played nineteen consecutive years in American theaters; "Life," a melodrama so big that it could never be produced outside of the Manhattan opera house, where it ran a full season; "Little Women," Louise Alcott's book, the greatest selling book ever written by an American writer; "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," another famous Drury Lane drama, and "Sinners," Owen Davis' play about New York life that ran a year at the Playhouse.

Mrs. Rinehart Objects to Misleading Advertisements

Mary Roberts Rinehart, author of "K," one of the best sellers, and from which the Jewel Production, "The Doctor and the Woman," was picturized, has protested to the executives of Jewel over the manner in which certain theater managers have endeavored by advertising to give the impression that the picture is in that category upon which censor boards look askance.

The attention of the author was called to the advertising put out by a Chicago theater in which the picture was referred to as the "confession of a woman." The intimation is that the woman has transgressed from the path of morality.

"That is the kind of advertising to which I strenuously object," Mrs. Rinehart writes. "Your picture follows the story of 'K' very closely, and there certainly is nothing in the story to indicate immorality. If it is in your power, please see that the theater men desist from using this sort of advertising."

As a result of Mrs. Rinehart's protest, Jewel executives have sent a request to exhibitors who have booked the picture to desist from the suggestive and make their big drive on the fact that "The Doctor and the Woman" is the screen version of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "K" and that Mildred Harris, as "Sidney" appears at her very best in the picture.

Eddie Polo Beats Out Locomotive.

With the eighteenth episode jammed as full of thrills as any of its predecessors, "The Bull's Eye," the Universal serial of international complications, was brought to a conclusion last week at Universal City. Eddie Polo, the fearless star of the chaptered melodrama, with utter recklessness, risked his life for a spectacular effect. Tied to a railroad track with a runaway engine approaching at terrific speed, Polo was supposed to drop into a culvert beneath the ties. Instead, when the locomotive was almost upon him, with a mighty jerk he pulled his feet out of his boots, did a backward somersault, wrenching loose the cords that held his hands, and leaped to safety just as the locomotive ground his boots to atoms.

"Social Briars" Title of Next Minter.

The next production from the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., starring Mary Miles Minter will be released as "Social Briars." It was produced under the working title of "The Greater Call." It is set for release on the Mutual schedule May 6.

Russell's First Independent Release Comes April 29

THE first picture produced by William Russell Productions, "Hearts or Diamonds," is the feature of Mutual's schedule of releases for the week of April 29. The play was selected by Mr. Russell as one offering opportunities for characteristic Russell spectacular action. The scenario is by William Parker from a story by William Hamilton Osborne, whose magazine stories have attracted wide attention.

Miss Charlotte Burton makes her reappearance on the screen in the role of Adrienne. Miss Burton, who made a sensational success in the mystery-serial sucess of the Mutual, "The Diamond from the Sky," has played lead in some other Russell successes, notably "Soul Mates," "The Highest Bid" and "The Love Hermit."

Screen Telegram Issues Nos. 18 and 19 are released May 1 and 5. American soldiers taking their places in the line to check the Hun offensive; Secretary McAdoo opening the Liberty Loan drive in Philadelphia; the visit of Marguerite Clark, the tiny screen favorite, to Chicago, to boost the sale of Liberty Bonds; baptizing of negroes in the chilly waters of the Mississippi at St. Louis; scenes from the training camps and up-to-the-minute war pictures are some of the features of recent issues of Screen Telegram that make for popularity of the Mutual newsreel.

"Spotted," the Mutual-Strand comedy release of April 30, casts Billie Rhodes, the celever comedienne, in a double role. It is built around a novel idea, prettily staged and well directed. The Rhodes comedies are becoming more and more popular and are being booked in big houses in every section of the country.

Fox Finishes Five Plays At East and West Studios

FOUR photoplays will probably be finished at the William Fox studios in the East and one in the West this week. The pictures which are nearing completion in the New York and New Jersey plants are "The Firebrand," starring Virginia Pearson, under the direction of Edmund Lawrence; "Blue-Eyed Mary," which June Caprice is making and Harry Millarde is directing; "Peg of the Pirates," Peggy Hyland's second production for the Fox forces, which is being staged by O. A. C. Lund, and George Walsh's newest vehicle, "Brave and Bold," in work by Carl Harbaugh.

Gladys Brockwell will complete "The Scarlet Road" at a date somewhat later than was planned originally owing to an accident to Bertram Grassby, her leading man. Grassby's injury forced the substitution of Charles Clary in his part and the rephotographing of all the scenes in which Grassby had appeared. The subject that will be finished at the Coast studios this week or early next week will be "Ace High," which Lynn Reynolds wrote and is directing with Tom Mix in the starred role.

William Farnum is to leave Hollywood behind this week for "location work" in Arizona on the first of the two Zane Grey novels he is to do.

Jane and Katherine Lee are almost halfway through a photo-comedy which Kenean Buel is supervising.

Lytell Subject Leads Metro's Release Program for May

BERT LYTELL'S initial Metro picture heads the quartette of screen attractions which will be released under the parrot trade mark in May. Both the western and eastern studios are represented in the release schedule. The first and last releases of the month were made at the California studio and those underlined for the middle date are New York productions. Following Lytell, the stars who will appear in May are Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, May Allison and Harold Lockwood.

"The Trail to Yesterday," which will be released on May 6, introduces Lytell as a Metro star. This western drama is an adaptation by June Mathis of Charles Alden Seltzer's novel of the same name. Edwin Carewe, assisted by his brother, Finis Fox, directed the production, which was staged in Arizona and in California. Lytell plays an Easterner who goes West and makes good in the face of great obstacles. The star is an expert rider and all-round athlete, and in this red-blooded tale of the plains and ranches he has many opportunities to display his abilities along these lines. Anna Q. Nilsson is leading woman.

"Cyclone Higgins, D.D." is the second May release, being scheduled for the 13th. This is a "truly human" story of an itinerant preacher and a girl of the mountains, written and directed by William Christy Cabanne. Francis X. Bushman appears as Cyrus Higgins, D.D., the preacher who becomes known as "Cyclone," and Beverly Bayne plays Sally Phillips, the belle of Yellville.

May Allison makes her second appearance as a Metro star in "The Winning of Beatrice," an original story by May Tully, which will be released on May 20. Miss Allison plays Beatrice Buckley, whose ability to make different homemade candy by a "secret process" wins for her both fortune and happiness. Harry Franklin directed this picture, which was adapted for the screen by June Mathis and Katharine Kavanaugh. Hale Hamilton, leading man.

Harold Lockwood is the star of "Lend Me Your Name," the final May release which will be offered exhibitors on the 27th. It is a delightful comedy-drama adapted from the novel of the same name by Francis Perry Elliott. The screen version was prepared by Fred J. Balshofer and John B. Clymer. Pauline Curley plays the leading feminine role. Bessie Eyton, a player of reputation, essays Sophronia, the domineering wife.

Triangle's Best Players Are Featured in May Releases

THE Triangle Distributing Corporation has announced its May schedule of releases, which include in addition to society dramas and Westerns a romance of the Adirondacks and a Japanese-American drama. Margery Wilson, William Desmond, Roy Stewart, Gloria Swanson, and J. Barney Sherry are among the featured players of the month.

William Desmond heads the May Triangle card in "An Honest Man," which is described as an interesting psychological drama with a keen sidelight on the power of suggestion to mold character. This theme has been embodied in an amusing and diverting play. Mary Warren has the leading feminine part. Ann Kroman and Graham Pette have supporting roles. Henry P. Dowst wrote the story. Frank Borzage directed.

"Mlle. Paulette" is the second release of May 5. Frank Condon, a writer who has recently joined the Triangle forces, scenarioized the story by George Cowell. The Adirondack Mountains provide the locale for the greater part of the play; the remaining scenes show society life in New York. Wallace MacDonald and Claire Anderson have the leading roles. This marks the second dramatic appearance of the former Keystoner. George Pearce, Walter Perry, Dot Hagar, Anna Dodge, George Hernandez, and John Lince are in the cast. Raymond Wells directed.

The week of May 12 opens with "Her Decision." Jack Conway directed this drama, which features Gloria Swanson in her second dramatic role. The play is based upon a girl's sacrifice to save her sister. She deliberately offers herself in marriage to a man she admits she does not love for the purpose of obtaining a share of his money. J. Barney Sherry has the leading masculine role. Darrell Foss and Ann Kroman have prominent parts.

Roy Stewart is featured in "Wolves of the Border," the second release of the week. This story, formerly titled "A Man Worth While," was written by Alvin J. Neitz, and deals with life on the Mexican frontier, showing the struggle of the cattle kings with the Mexican bandits and cattle rustlers. Josie Sedgwick, leading woman, executes many daring feats of horsemanship. Jack Curtis has a "heavy" role as a crooked foreman in league with the Mexican rustlers. The cast includes Frank McQuarrie, William Jeffries, Louis (Bull) Durham, and that quintet of buckaroos, Pete Morrison, Curley Baldwin, Billy Patton, Abe Farra, and R. M. Thompson. Cliff Smith directed and Steve Rounds photographed.

A Japanese-American drama, "The Loyalty of Taro Sam," heads the May 19 program. This is a screen adaptation of the story by the same name by E. Magnus Ingleton, author of "Her American Husband." Jack Livingston has the title role of the young American lawyer. Jack Abbe is Taro Sam. He was seen in "Her American Husband." Maud Wayne, of the comedy forces, makes her initial dramatic appearance in this drama as leading woman. Lillian West and Lillian Langdon are in the cast. The Triangle wardrobe and research departments have been called upon for elaborate work in this production. Among the effects to be realized are a tearoom in the Nipponese Empire, many luxurious Oriental costumes, jinrikishas and costumes for jinrikisha drivers.

William Desmond has the title role in "Old Hartwell's Club." This is in line with the part he played in "The Sudden Gentleman." Thomas N. Heffron handles the megaphone. Mary Warren has the leading feminine role. Walt Whitman is cast as the venerable parson of a small Western town. Eugene Burr, Percy Challenger, Dorothy Hagar, Graham Pette, and William Ellingford are in the cast.

"Old Loves for New," with Margery Wilson and Lee Hill, and "The Mossback" are scheduled for May 26 release.

Bebe Daniels in Racing Togs.

Trained to the Hour, Mother Called It Off

Here is an unusual photograph of Bebe Daniels, who recently succeeded in persuading her mother to allow her to enter the races at Ascot Park, Cal. Bebe was most enthusiastic and each day added speed to her practice spin around the mile track.

A newspaper man called on Miss Daniels for an interview and made the casual remark: "I hope you win, Miss Daniels. It is surely a distinction worth risking one's life for!" Bebe's mother heard him! And the result was that she withdrew her permission and Bebe had to break off diplomatic relations with the racers and discontinue her thoughts of outclassing Oldfield.

Northrup Still Hears the Pretty Birdies Singing

BERT LYTELL, who is an amateur boxer and as hard as nails, admits he had the stiffest fight of his career in "The Trail to Yesterday," the feature production in which he will make his bow as a Metro star. Lytell is muscled like a middleweight, but he drew a tough customer in Harry S. Northrup, who plays a villainous ranch foreman in the Metro picture.

In the big fight scene, "Dakota," played by Lytell, used his hands alone, while Duncan, played by Northrup, is armed. The battle was staged before the camera in a rocky canyon at Arivaca, Arizona.

Edwin Carewe, directing the picture, called for a regular he-man fight, and both the star and Northrup were willing—Lytell to try out a new punch and Northrup from force of habit.

"Come on," said Northrup, "hit as hard as you like. I have been playing 'heavies' for twenty years, and I don't feel right unless somebody is beating me up. I carry more marks than Kid Broad or Joe Grimm."

They mixed it up. Finally it was up to Lytell to put over the knockout, and he swung a vicious right for the point of Northrup's jaw. The blow was a few inches high, and landed on the latter's left ear. He went down for the count.

Although the fight was staged two weeks ago, Northrup says he can still hear the pretty birdies singing all day long.

Double Role for Billie Rhodes.

Billie Rhodes, playing in Mutual-Strand comedies, does a double role in "Spotted," the release for April 30. Begoggled, mustached and in livery, Billie plays the part of chauffeur and, in black dress and white apron, she is a most fetching maid.

The plot revolves around the desire of a pretty heiress to be "loved for herself alone," who turns her house over to a couple of friends for the entertainment of a handsome young relative, who falls in love with the maid, confesses to her "twin brother" the chauffeur and finds that he has proposed to a vigorously wooed debutante.

Jewel Issuing 30,000-Word Novelette of "The Kaiser"

TO the already record-breaking list of stunts, advertisements, posters, scarehead newspapers, heralds and lobby displays, for "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," has been added a novelization in thirty thousand words, which makes it easily the most heavily munitioned feature offered to the exhibitor in years. The advertising and publicity departments of the Jewel, which purchased the Rupert Julian picture, had the most wonderful opportunity ever presented for their efforts.

It remained, however, for Georgia to demand a thirty-thousand word novel on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." In Georgia the American Defense Society and the Atlanta Constitution combined in sponsoring the picture, in the belief that the patriotic spirit of the state would be deeply stirred by the presentation, spreading broadcast the message that the photoplay conveys.

This request came by telegraph, which stated that the Atlanta Constitution had agreed to run a four-page magazine supplement in the shape of a thirty-thousand word novelization of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." Jewel was fortunate in being able to induce Marjorie Howard, who, in Belgium, witnessed scenes similar to those which are pictured in the descent of the Hun hordes upon Louvain in Rupert Julian's masterpiece, to undertake this novelization.

Scores of papers in the South have telegraphed Jewel, asking for the right to run the novelization. Jewel is now busily engaged in turning out matrices of the four pages, which can be obtained at reasonable cost by any exhibitor who desires his local paper to run the story. It will also be published in book form.

Who's Who in "The Only Road."

The cast of "The Only Road," Viola Dana's next picture to be produced at Metro's West Coast studios, Hollywood, has been completed. Casson Ferguson plays opposite Miss Dana in the leading male role of Bob Armstrong, "who became a Westerner because in the East he put a goat in his professor's bed." Monte Blue is cast as Pedro Lupo, son of a high-caste Mexican lawyer, and is the young "heavy."

Others in the cast are Paul Weigel, Marie Van Tassel, Edith Chapman, and C. E. Geldert. Frank Reicher will direct the production, and the photography will be by John Arnold.

National Is To Produce Two-Reel Western Dramas

General Film Company shortly is to announce a series of two-reel western dramas, to be known as the Rancho series. These subjects are being produced by the National Film Corporation of Denver, of which O. D. Woodward is president. This is the same company that makes the Clover comedies with Bud Duncan, Dot Farley and Kewpie Morgan.

The Rancho dramas will be two-reel productions issued every other week and will contain all-western atmosphere. Story value and thrills will be featured.

The first release in the series will be "In the Shadow of the Rockies," a gripping story of romance and action, in which Palmer Bowman and Dolly Dale are the principal players. The story deals with the adventures of a rich man's son in the west, in which he unwittingly plays the leading part in the unraveling of a drama of mystery and suspense. Succeeding stories are in preparation, written by Richard Goodall and directed by Otis B. Thayer.

More Judge Brown Stories Coming.

Another forthcoming group of Judge Brown stories is promised to General Film Company, the distributors, by the Boy City Film Corporation. New subjects in the series are "Love of Bud," "Dog vs. Dog" and "A Boy-Built City," which are intended for release in April and May. These subjects are said to be even better than the first ten already released, which have scored a tremendous commercial and artistic success.

One of the most popular of the Judge Brown stories released to date is "I'm a Man," a juvenile patriotic story with an unexpected punch, in which a youngster finds a new way to aid his Government. Initial bookings for this story have more than equaled the record established by "Bud's Recruit."

Lytell's First Metro Completed.

"The Trail to Yesterday," in which Bert Lytell will make his debut as a Metro star, has been completed at Metro's West Coast studios. A preliminary showing of the picture in the projecting room revealed that Lytell has done splendid work in the stellar role of "Dakota," grim, silent ranchman, and by his personality has given a new and fascinating twist to this type of hero.

Edwin Carewe, who directed the star in his first Metro production, is especially pleased with the photographic results he obtained while on location for two weeks in Arivaca, Arizona. There the company was quartered on a big cattle ranch.

William Fox Announces Schedule of Releases for May

WILLIAM FOX'S schedule of May releases in the special features is now made up. The pictures will be these issued in the order given: George Walsh in "Brave and Bold," Peggy Hyland in "Peg of the Pirates," Virginia Pearson in "The Firebrand," and June Caprice in "Blue-Eyed Mary." Henry Lehrman's first Sunshine comedy production in May will be released under title of "A Neighbor's Keyhole."

"Brave and Bold" is a mile-a-minute action story seasoned with romance. Carl Harbaugh is the athletic star's director in this film, also based on Perley Poore Shehan's "Four-Forty at Fort Penn." The plot revolves about the hero's efforts to get a big war order. In Mr. Walsh's support there appear Regina Quinn, Mabel Bunyea, Dan Mason, and Francis X. Conlon.

Peggy Hyland's feature, her second Fox production, will be notable, among other things, for its splendid ocean scenes. The company spent more than six weeks on the Atlantic and along the coast near Charleston. O. A. C. Lund was in charge of the drama.

A powerful drama of wartime Russia is the vehicle in which Virginia Pearson will next be seen. The direction is by Edmund Lawrence. Victor Sutherland returns to play the leading masculine part.

The last special feature of the month will be "Blue-Eyed Mary," an appealing screen story in which June Caprice has stellar honors. Harry Millarde is staging the production. The cast includes Helen Tracy, Blanche Hines, Bernard Randall, Thomas Fallon, Jack McLean, Florence Ashbrooke, and Henry Hallam.

The Bud Fisher-Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons for the first three weeks will be "A Fisherless Cartoon," "Occultism," and "Superintendents." The fourth release will soon be announced. The other Sunshine comedies for May also will be made known shortly.

"The Two-Souled Woman" Heads Universal for May 6

HEADING the list of Universal releases for the week of May 6 is "The Two-Soul Woman," a Priscilla Dean special production. It is a mystery story based upon hypnotism, in which the star doubles in her role. In one part she is under hypnotic influence—a wayward, impossible woman, the lure for men, with her thoughts continually seeking the bright lights. In the other portrayal she is her natural self, a clinging, confiding girl. The picture is one that will cause considerable discussion and will possibly reopen the old controversy between believers in hypnotism and the non-believers. Miss Dean has the support of Ashton Dearholt, Joseph Girard and Evelyn Selbie.

Three comedies, one of the two reels and the others one reel each, entitled "Whose Baby Are You?" is a laughter machine.

The L-KO Beauties have another opportunity to display their charms in a two-reel comedy, "Her Movie Madness," with Gale Henry and Hughie Mack, which shows to what lengths a girl who desires entry into pictures will go.

Another comedy on the weekly release is the Nestor, entitled "A Kitchen Hero," featuring Eileen Sedgwick.

The fourth episode of the ten-reel Boy Scout serial, under the general title of "Boy Scouts to the Rescue," also will be presented in more than fourteen hundred theaters. The episode title is "The Spies." This is the serial which hundreds of exhibitors later on are planning to run as a complete show for the purpose of appealing to the four hundred thousand members of the Boy Scouts throughout the country.

"The Bull's Eye," with Eddie Polo, is in its fourteenth episode, entitled "The Firing Squad."

"The Lion's Claw," with Marie Walcamp, the latest Universal serial to be released, is in its sixth episode, entitled "The Dungeon of Terror." The atmosphere of this serial is something entirely new with its setting in the jungles of Africa and the Far East.

The regular weeklies, consisting of the Universal Screen Magazine, Universal Current Events and Universal Animated Weekly, complete the releases.

Hodkinson Headquarters Enlarged Twice Again

THE past week has been a busy one at the home offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation at 527 Fifth avenue. With the increasing activity and expansion of business it was found necessary to enlarge the offices to take over considerably more than three times the original space. The Hodkinson offices now occupy the entire front section of the third floor above the Harriman Bank. One thing that is noticeable to anyone entering the offices is their quiet simplicity, which is according to the ideas of Mr. Hodkinson.

C. E. Shurtleff, general sales manager of the corporation, also returned during the week from his trip to the various exchange centers and reports satisfactory progress being made everywhere. Several changes were made in the management of the offices, all of which have been announced elsewhere by the General Film Company.

C. S. Nordlie, special representative of the corporation, also left Saturday for an extended trip covering Buffalo, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Cincinnati, Louisville, and a section of West Virginia, during which he will talk with the exhibitors in these territories upon the subject of the Hodkinson co-partnership plan, which is now developing in a manner most satisfactory to the Home office.

Normand, Kennedy and Marsh Featured in Goldwyns

IN announcing two new productions, starring vehicles for Madge Kennedy and Mae Marsh, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is directing the attention of exhibitors to its three latest pictures. Following "The Face in the Dark," written by Irvin S. Cobb and starring Mae Marsh, come the followng:

May 5—Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," by Porter Emerson Browne.

May 19—Madge Kennedy in "The Fair Pretender," by Florence C. Bolles.

June 2—Mae Marsh in "The Glorious Adventure," by Edith Barnard Delano.

George Loane Tucker made over "Joan of Plattsburg," which was ready for release several months ago when the Government stepped in and asked that certain of the scenes showing details of the military training methods in vogue at the great Plattsburg training camp for officers be eliminated.

"The Fair Pretender" offers Madge Kennedy a part delightfully different from those she has essayed since her entry into motion pictures six short months ago. Famous as a luckless bride in "Baby Mine," "Nearly Married" and "Our Little Wife," this charming star became a society crook in the serio-comic "The Danger Game." Now she is a widow—a girl bereaved by her own fancy. She never had a husband, but to meet the exigencies of the occasion she rids herself of one by way of the cemetery. The unsought trouble this brings about when she ventures into society is the hub about which the story revolves. Charles Miller is directing "The Fair Pretender."

Hobart Henley, who directed Mae Marsh's "The Face in the Dark," is in charge of her newest production, "The Glorious Adventure." This production is a blend of stirring, forceful drama.

Private Jaccard Visits Pals at University City

HOPING his company, Battery A of the 144th Field Artillery, would soon receive orders to entrain for "somewhere over there," and fearing that he might not have an opportunity to say "good-bye" to comrades with whom he had been associated for several years, Jacques Jaccard, one of the best known serial producers and director of such well-known thrillers as "Liberty, A Daughter of the U. S. A." and "The Red Ace," paid Universal City a flying visit recently.

The ovation he received from his old friends nearly disrupted the usual routine of work at the plant, and the hour spent by the director was in the nature of a public reception.

Private Jacques Jaccard.

"My short experience in the army has entirely changed my viewpoint on everything," said Jaccard, "and work that at first seemed drudgery and the veriest routine has now become an absolute pleasure. Only those who have donned the uniform will really understand what I mean, as the enthusiasm of the men at Camp Kearney,

Fox Buys Rights of Two Zane Grey Stories

WILLIAM FOX has purchased the photoplay rights of two of Zane Grey's most famous and widely read stories of romance and adventure, "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail." The picturizations will be William Farnum de luxe productions, and work on the first of these stirring Western photodramas has already commenced at the big Fox studios in Hollywood. They will be filmed for the chief part in the picturesque regions of Arizona.

To insure so nearly as possible the attainment of success in bringing the spirit of the novels to the screen arrangements have been made for Mr. Grey, himself, to watch the transfer from type to celluloid. Zane Grey is already on his way to Los Angeles, and upon his arrival the large company of photoplayers headed by Mr. Farnum will leave with the star and the author for Arizona.

Mr. Farnum and Mr. Grey are strong personal friends, and they have collaborated on much of the detail of the forthcoming productions. Among the striking scenes will be many in the Grand Canyon of Arizona and on the great desert wastes.

Dolores Cassinelli In Dolly Sisters' Picture

Dolores Cassinelli, the first woman star to win a photoplayers' popularity contest, returns to the screen in "The Million Dollar Dollies," a Screen Classics picture released by Metro, in which the celebrated Dolly Sisters are starred. This romantic fantasy was written and directed by the noted French producer, Leonce Perret. Miss Cassinelli has been off the screen for some time, having retired to take up concert work, as she possesses an excellent soprano voice.

In this elaborate picture Miss Cassinelli plays an East Indian princess, and she lends the same charm to her portrayal that first endeared her to motion picture audiences. She was one of the first screen stars to attain popularity with the public, and when a leading "fan" publication inaugurated the first photoplayers' popularity contest she received more votes than any other woman player.

Miss Cassinelli was born in Italy, but came to the United States when a young girl. She is an excellent linguist, speaking Italian, French, Spanish and English. Besides being a singer of ability she is also an accomplished pianist. She has been in considerable demand as a model for paintings and etchings by distinguished artists, and among others she has posed for Nattyers, the Belgian; Warshowsky, the Russian, and Pizzela, the Spanish painter.

Manager Williams Joins Signal Corps.

Louis Williams, manager of William Fox's Star theater, at 107th street and Lexington avenue, has enlisted in the United States Army. He is now stationed with the 321st Signal Corps at Camp Upton as a telegrapher. Mr. Williams became twenty-one since the passage of the Draft bill, and was probably one of the youngest theatrical managers in the metropolis, if not in the country. The employees of the theater presented him with a wrist watch before his departure.

Congress Gets Measure for fifteen-Cent Coin

THE idea for a fifteen-cent coin has, within a year of its conception, attained the dignity of congressional recognition. It went into the hopper of the National House the other day in the shape of a bill introduced by Representative O'Shaughnessy of Rhode Island authorizing the coinage of a fifteen-cent piece.

The fifteen-cent coin was proposed a year ago by Terry Ramsaye, who saw, with the general adoption of the fifteen-cent admission price at picture theaters, a necessity for a coin to replace the inconvenient nickel and dime. The idea was put up to John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, who said "Push it through."

Immediately the idea met with favor among exhibitors and gradually its merit was realized in other lines of business. It was presented to the director of the mint not long ago by a committee of motion picture exhibitors. A general sentiment in its favor has been developed in many sections of the country, and it is more than likely that the O'Shaughnessy bill will meet with early action in committee and favorable action on the floor of the house.

An investigation carried on by Mr. Ramsaye's department within the last few weeks revealed the fact that there are practically as many fifteen-cent sales in retail trade today as dime sales. Congress' early recognition of the fifteen-cent coin idea is evidence of the widespread adoption of fifteen cents as a standard of barter in American business.

When the idea for a fifteen-cent coin was first suggested, Mr. Ramsaye prepared a design, in which was embodied the head of Helen Holmes, popular star in hair-raising picture serials. The design caused much comment and helped materially in drawing attention to the fifteen-cent-piece proposal.

Gerard Film Gets High Prices.

Two contracts of exceptional interest were closed by the First National Exchange of New York for "My Four Years in Germany" during the past few days.

The first was with the management of the Crescent theater of Brooklyn for a two-weeks' run of the picture at the unprecedented figure of $4,500 for the initial seven days and $2,000 for the second week.

Edward Fay, proprietor of Fay's theater in Rochester, was the party of the second part in the other deal. Mr. Fay made a special trip from Rochester to close his contract for the Gerard film, and seemed well satisfied to pay the sum of $4,000 for a week's run of the picture at his house.

These figures, which are vouched for by the First National executives, are said to top any known records for film contracts in the respective cities.

Universal Puts Out Stirring Training Film

HOW the final touches are put on the training of Uncle Sam's lads in khaki for service in France is the feature of Universal Animated Weekly No. 20. This is one of the best military features ever put out in news reel. The pictures carry the story right through the ordinary routine of training, to trench attacks with the bayonet and mass advances under actual barrage fire.

The pictures were made at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., where the Twenty-seventh Division under command of Major General John F. O'Ryan, is stationed. It is explained that before the rookie can think of undertaking the bayonet attacks practice his muscles must be hardened, and then the scenes show the various forms of calisthenics through which the boys are put. Boxing is included in the hardening process and there are regular boxing classes.

Then follow scenes of bayonet drill, concluding with sweeping attacks on "enemy" trenches, in which "trench moppers" take a hand. A camouflaged dug-out is shown. At first appearance this seems innocent enough, but when the removable cover is lowered a trench mortar is revealed. Several shells loaded with "T. N. T.," the highest explosive known, are fired.

The "baptism of fire" opens with the "shock" troops, armed to the teeth, mobilizing for the attack. While the infantry formations are taking place, the field artillery takes up positions in the hills. The artillery is then seen firing the open shots, and then the lines of men are shown advancing behind the barrage of bursting shells.

Concluding this exceptional military feature are pictures of all of the officers of the Twenty-seventh Division photographed together in one gigantic panorama; Major General John F. O'Ryan, commander of the division, and last a striking picture of General O'Ryan reviewing the division.

O. Henry Story Is of Shop Girl.

"The Buyer from Cactus City," an attractive heart-interest story with a characteristic last minute O. Henry surprise, is the current release in General Film Company's Broadway-Star Feature series. William Dunn and Miriam Miles, who have been featured in a number of other successful O. Henry stories, are the principal players in this subject, which is perhaps the most famous of O. Henry's heart stories of New York shop-girl life.

Loos-Emerson Script of Sardou Play for Billie Burke

BEAUTY is the keynote of production in "Let's Get a Divorce," the latest Paramount picture starring Billie Burke, which is scheduled for release April 29. The settings, appointments and costumes are elaborate, and the exteriors were filmed in Florida.

In order more forcibly to show the injustice of the easy divorce laws Victorien Sardou created his characters in an atmosphere of wealth, so that Cyprienne, the romantic bride played by Miss Burke, was showered with everything a woman's heart could desire, including the honest love of an indulgent husband.

As the bride Miss Burke displays an elaborate trousseau, which will no doubt prove interesting to women patrons. The interior settings were constructed to harmonize with the exteriors, and the furniture and other appointments were selected with extraordinary care.

"Let's Get a Divorce" is based upon "Divorcons," and was adapted to the screen by Anita Loos and John Emerson. The spirit of the play has been well preserved in this picturization, both by the adapters and by Charles Giblyn, who directed. Unique comedy is presented in the methods the husband uses to get rid of a man who covets his wife, and the interloper is placed in a ridiculous light.

Miss Pickford Plays Hoyden in "M'liss."

When the admirers of Mary Pickford see her in "M'liss" they will again recognize the versatility with which she is blessed as well as her ability to portray the unusual character. "Stella Maris" was an eye-opener for those who thought that the Mary with curls was the only Mary who could hold and satisfy their demands. Then she did "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley."

In "M'liss" Miss Pickford is the hoydenish creature who rules the western mining camp with a slingshot and saucy tongue. Bret Harte wrote the story. Frances Marion made it a picture. Marshall Neilan made the production and directed it. Miss Pickford has achieved another triumph it is assured exhibitors and the public by the producers.

Paralta Prepares for War.

War activities are about as bustling with business at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles as they are at any of the Government plants; that is, in proportion to the size of the wars in which Paralta and the Government are participating. Three war pictures, one with Louise Glaum as the star and two featuring Bessie Barriscale, have already been completed at the studio, and although no announcements have yet been made as to any that will follow, there is plenty of ammunition and artillery ready, waiting for some fiery author to write a story in which they can be used to kill off a few of the actors on the Paralta pay roll.

Bill Hart Boosting Liberty Loan by Speech and Purse

BEFORE beginning his tour of the Pacific coast on the drive for the Third Liberty Loan, William S. Hart subscribed for this issue of the bonds to the amount of $105,000, bringing his holdings of the three issues up to a total of nearly half a million dollars.

In a telegram to Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Artcraft star says: "I cannot wear the khaki myself, but I am going to make my money fight for me with the boys who have given themselves up to fight for us to make this world a safe place for every American to live in. I leave Thursday for a campaign of the Pacific coast at the request of Secretary McAdoo. My one regret is that I cannot do more."

In the allotment of territory to be covered by the picture stars in the sale of the Third Liberty Loan the extreme western states were assigned to Hart by Secretary McAdoo, who no doubt took into consideration the physical requirements of the undertaking in that part of the country, with long railroad jumps and a crowded itinerary which would admit of little sleep. The popularity of the star was also important, in a whirlwind campaign of this kind, where quick action was vital.

When the call came Hart was engaged in the production of "Selfish Yates," and in order to get the picture completed in time to devote his entire attention to the Liberty Loan work he was compelled to work day and night for several weeks. Fortune favored him, and but few retakes were necessary, and before leaving the studio to start on his trip he saw the completed picture, entirely assembled, in the private projecting room of the plant.

It is expected that Hart's convincing and forceful character will result in establishing a record in the sale of the bonds.

"Over There" Going Strong.

"Over There," Select's patriotic photodrama featuring the work of the Red Cross, is the subject of daily unsolicited testimonials which pour into the home office and branch offices of Select Pictures Corporation. Patriotic societies as well as theatre owners throughout the land are finding it advantageous to show this stirring photoplay, and are linking it up with drives for the Liberty Loan, War Savings Stamps and the forthcoming Second War Drive of the American Red Cross.

The Chicago office reports that "Over There" was seen by Thomas H. Adams, who is the proprietor of The Daily Commercial, the leading newspaper of Vincennes, Ind., and also the chairman of the State Council of Defence. Mr. Adams was so enthusiastic about "Over There" that he voluntarily advised theater managers in his locality to book this picture, which they did to their own substantial pecuniary profit.

Rupert Julian Again in Action.

"The Shadowed Man" is the working title of Rupert Julian's next photodrama. The creator of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," will play the detective role, as the name suggests. Ruth Clifford, who has been co-starred with Julian and with Monroe Salisbury during the past few productions, will have the stellar feminine role.

The Julian-Salisbury-Clifford combination has been a prominent factor in Bluebirds.

Essanay Is Commended on "A Pair of Sixes"

THE latest George K. Spoor feature "A Pair of Sixes," has received exceptional commendation from the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. The board in passing this picture declares the entertainment value is excellent, the dramatic interest of the story is good, the coherence of the narrative clear, the acting excellent, technical handling good, the atmospheric quality of scenic setting good and the moral effect good.

The board goes on to say in its general comment: "As a play, 'A Pair of Sixes' was a comedy hit. In the photoplay, the story, the partner, the lawyer, the wife, the financee, the cook and the star, Taylor Holmes, have all combined to make it the funniest play of the season."

The cook is one of the cleverest characters in the photoplay, the part being taken by Maude Eburne. The other leading players are Robert Conness and Alice Mann.

The picture already has been released in several of the larger cities and everywhere there has been reported a record-breaking attendance, with audiences more than satisfied. The George Kleine offices announce that the bookings are coming in fast and that the picture promises to make a record run for Essanay. The other recent George K. Spoor features, "Ruggles of Red Gap" and "Uneasy Money," featuring Taylor Holmes, and "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," featuring Mary MacLane, also are reported to be having exceptional runs.

Gerard Plays Highbrow Role.

Charles Gerard, who will be remembered as Count Orloff in "The Legion of Death," the Metro production de luxe starring Edith Storey, has a part in Miss Storey's newest picture, "The Demon," now under production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood.

Gerard, who is the vain possessor of an esthetic mustache, was a deep-dyed villain in "The Legion of Death." In "The Demon" the Irish knight is cast as a regular highbrow, with tortoise-rimmed spectacles and a frock coat. He wears other clothes, too, but he simply can't get used to those "cheaters." He says they're so large that he loses the combination, and, besides, they scratch the walls of his dressing room.

As a Moving Picture, This "Ain't." It Does, However, Show How Lytell Stopped Lockwood from Carrying off Viola Dana.

Chaplin's New Comedy Breaks Many Records

THE showing of "A Dog's Life," first of Charlie Chaplin's comedies, in all houses operating under First National franchises during the week of April 14 resulted in unprecedented business. Attendance records have been broken in many of the largest theaters of America, and it would not be surprising if the First National stockholders get back on this single release most of the money they have invested in the entire series.

At the Strand in New York 16,141 people, on the opening day of the run, paid $5,610 to see Charlie and his trusty hound. The Strand management announced that all attendance records in the history of Manhattan's largest motion picture house had been smashed, and several thousand patrons had been turned away because they could not be accommodated. At best estimates it is declared that the week's business would top $27,000.

The Strand management played the Chaplin picture on a percentage arrangement, because they believed the flat rental price asked by J. D. Williams was too high. The First National Exhibitors' Circuit will receive three times as much money as Mr. Williams wrote into the booking contract that was presented Manager Edel.

Clean-up business on "A Dog's Life" is also reported from other sections of the country. Thomas Saxe, proprietor of the Alhambra theater, Milwaukee, who cancelled Chaplin's previous series, because they were not at that time money-makers for him, states that "A Dog's Life" doubled the business of the Alhambra during its run.

According to Aaron Jones, it has proven a veritable sensation in Chicago, where the greatest picture audience in the history of McVicker's and the Rialto have greeted its first-run week.

The United Booking Offices in New York lost no time in securing "A Dog's Life" for the Keith circuit, breaking a hitherto iron-clad rule against booking any picture on which they are not guaranteed first-run privileges. An extended run will begin at the Palace Theater, New York, the week of April 22.

"Patria" Cast in Coming Pathe Play.

Irene Castle, Milton Sills, and Warner Oland, who played the three big parts in the serial, "Patria," again appear together in the five-part Pathe Play, "The Mysterious Client," coming on May 19.

The picture was made under the direction of Fred Wright from a scenario by Roy Somerville. It meets with the insistent demand of the public for something new. Inspired by the fact that "truth is stranger than fiction" the anonymous author of the original story has chosen a number of thrilling incidents from real life and woven a dramatic story about them with astonishing results.

Trio of Big Thrills in Fox-Kellermann Picture

KEEPING pace with the warm weather calendar, William Fox is out with a promise of release very soon of a new surf spectacle with the incomparable Annette of the Kellermann symmetry and daring of the heroine. "Queen of the Sea" is the title of the new production, and extreme as were the wonders of "A Daughter of the Gods," the original Fox-Kellermann marine and submarine pageant-drama, they are said to be excelled immeasurably, at least in thrills, in the new venture.

For one thing Miss Kellermann is seen taking the highest dive of her career. The drama of the spectacle gives Miss Kellermann but one chance of escape from a tower of great height. This one chance means that the refugee must walk a cable running from the turret of this tower to the shore. Midway in this walk, Miss Kellermann dives to the surf below.

The explosion of the tower, a colossal edifice suggesting the proportions of a giant's castle, with its substance shot into the air in fragments, is a realism that immediately precedes the dive.

A ship so photographed that it resembles a phantom vessel of the type of the Flying Dutchman is the final of the trio of big thrill spots of the new picture.

Symphony to Show Mutt and Jeff.

New York's newest motion picture theater, the Symphony, a modern palace of amusement now being constructed at Broadway and Ninety-fifth street, is to show Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons daily. These Bud Fisher products have been contracted for through William Fox, by whom the cartoons are released.

"My Parisian Sweetheart" (Universal).

Carmel Myers has been cast in the role of a little French maid in "My Parisian Sweetheart." The final touches will be given to the drama next week under the direction of Joseph De Grasse. A cast including Edwin August, Andrew Robson and Lule (Mother) Warrenton is seen in support of the vivacious star.

Walthall Takes Cowboy Role in "With Hoops of Steel"

DURING the years that Henry B. Walthall has been one of the most popular stars in the realm of the silent drama he has appeared in a great variation of types, from the Little Colonel in "The Birth of a Nation" to a judge of the Supreme Court of the State of New York in "His Robe of Honor." Until the making of his latest Paralta play, "With Hoops of Steel," Mr. Walthall had never appeared in the role of a cowboy. The reason is easily understood, for Mr. Walthall has never consented to appear in any story the basis of which was overdrawn to any great extent from life as it is really lived. In "With Hoops of Steel," however, Mr. Walthall has found a story that depicts the life of the cattle ranges of Texas in a true and graphic manner, at the same time containing all the elements of red-blooded action and romance that are needed to carry a story of this kind.

In the role of Emerson Mead he portrays the character of a man at the head of the independent cattle owners, who have been oppressed by the high-handed methods of a large cattle syndicate. He is accused of murder by the head of the syndicate, and is captured after a series of thrilling incidents. Circumstantial evidence is so strongly against him that conviction seems certain. Then there comes that twist in the story when gunplay, law and prejudice are swept away by the vindication of the man through love. Admirers of Walthall are likely to be greatly interested in his "Cowboy."

Most of the scenes of the picture were taken on the cattle ranges of Texas and in the desert country of Arizona.

Roosevelt to Appear in Animated Weekly

Former President Roosevelt's military preparedness doctrines will be promoted largely through the screen. The Colonel's straight-from-the-shoulder talks will be carried into every city and hamlet in the United States through the medium of the Universal Screen Magazine, which has prepared the feature for distribution with a prospective release in about five weeks.

The animated interview opens with a close-up of the Colonel sitting on the lawn of his Oyster Bay estate beginning a casual conversation, which gradually turns to the subject of preparedness. Then all the dynamic action in the man comes to the front. He leaps to his feet, and in short, snappy, biting sentences tells Americans of their shortcomings and the proper methods to remedy them.

To make the animated interview even more realistic Manager Jack Cohn has caused fade-ins to be inserted, illustrating the points made by the Colonel, as he marshals his facts one by one and drives home his points.

It is generally predicted that the animated interview by President Roosevelt will be the most popular of the animated talks as yet released by the Universal Screen Magazine. This is to be followed by talks by other well-known men.

Bessie Love's "How Could You, Caroline?" Leads Pathe

BESSIE LOVE in a delightful comedy-drama, "How Could You, Caroline?" the ninth episode of "The House of Hate," "Our Fighting Ally—the Tank," a war thriller, and another laughgetter featuring Harold Lloyd are the headliners of Pathe's program for May 5.

Bessie Love is more captivating than ever in "How Could You, Caroline?" adapted from the story by Izola Forrester and Mann Page by Agnes C. Johnston. The story deals with the exciting and amusing adventures of Caroline Rogers, an ultra-romantic school girl at the caramel and novel-devouring age. In an exclusive boarding school she becomes affected with "affinityitis" through reading a luridly romantic novel, and things happen quick and fast.

"Poisoned Darts" is the title of the ninth episode of the exciting and highly successful Pathe serial, "The House of Hate," featuring Pearl White and Antonio Moreno, with a fine supporting cast.

"Our Fighting Ally—the Tank" is an intensely interesting war special in line with the numerous other features of this character released by Pathe. The pictures were taken by the Official Government Pictures, Inc., and show the tank Britannia being used by the boys of the National Army in their intensive training.

"Kicked Out" is the title of Harold Lloyd's new one-reel comedy produced for Pathe by Rolin. In it the inimitable comedian performs a "Julian Eltinge" and appears as a buxom, blithe and debonair young woman.

Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 38 and 39 are released on this program.

Paramount to Release "Resurrection."

Pauline Frederick's next Paramount picture to follow "La Tosca" is the sensational expose of Russian conditions in "Resurrection," the story written by Count Leo Tolstoy, which was adapted to the screen by Charles E. Whittaker.

Count Tolstoy was one of the most famous philosophical writers Russia ever has produced. He was as fearless in his scathing arraignment of social, economic and political conditions existing among the Russian people during the fifty years preceding the overthrow of the throne as he was daring in his advocacy of the principles of truth, liberty, freedom, justice and education. When he wrote "Resurrection" his purpose was to expose the degrading conditions by which fallen peasant women became social outcasts without hope of redemption, while the noblemen, responsible for their ruin, were rewarded with the highest honors.

Mr. Whittaker spent many years in Russia and is thoroughly conversant with its social, economic and political life.

"Lest We Forget" Going Big.

Reports of the success of "Lest We Forget," the world-war love drama produced some time ago by the Rita Jolivet Film Corporation, and now being distributed through Metro exchanges, are gratifying to those financially interested in the production. The feature was the attraction at the Regent theater, Toronto, during the week beginning Monday, April 8, and broke all previous records at the house. Rita Jolivet, star of the picture, appeared in person during the early days of the engagement and aroused enthusiasm with her patriotic speeches. Miss Jolivet is a great favorite in Canada. More house records were smashed by the picture in Waterbury, Conn., the first three days of the week of April 15, and in the Loew houses in New York City the following week.

Essanay Getting Ready for "Young America"

OLD SOL has been a little tardy this spring, but he now promises to get busy and arrange Essanay's outdoor settings for the next George K. Spoor feature, "Young America." For the outdoor settings in this picture require that the trees be in full foliage.

Everything practically now is ready to begin work on the picture and Essanay is waiting only for the buds on the trees to turn into full-fledged leaves. Several of the indoor sets have already been built in the Essanay studios and others planned so that they can be erected at a moment's notice. Outside locations also have all been chosen awaiting nature's carpenter to complete the work.

The picture, taken from the Cohan and Harris Broadway success written by Frank Craven, will carry an all-star cast. Most of the players have been tentatively selected for engagement at a moment's notice.

Arthur Berthelet will direct the production.

"Yellow Ticket" Coming June 2.

The release date of Pathe's screen version of the famous A. H. Woods' play, "The Yellow Ticket," produced by Astra under the direction of William Parke, has been decided upon, and this important picture is set for June 2 under Pathe's Selective Feature Service Plan, while it is announced that a number of important houses have already applied for dates on this picture.

In addition to Fannie Ward, Warner Oland, and Milton Sills in the three biggest parts are Helen Chadwick, Armand Kalisz, J. H. Gilmour, Leon Bary, Anna Lehr, Nicholas Duneaw, Charlie Jackson, Edward Elkus, and Richard Thornton.

Ouida Bergere to Open Office in Los Angeles

MARKING an important step in the rapid growth of the business which she has been conducting in New York City during the past two or three years Miss Ouida Bergere is soon to open a branch office in Los Angeles. Miss Bergere is scheduled to leave New York for the Pacific coast in the near future, and arrangements have already been completed which will enable her at once to become active in that field.

Miss Bergere has for a long time been identified with the moving picture industry in various ways, and most recently at her offices at 516 Fifth avenue, New York, she has been specializing in the business of placing moving picture principals with producing companies and in providing the producing companies with scenarios and plays suitable for use on the screen. She also takes care of the publicity interests of moving picture stars, and in general acts as their agents in their relations with the producing companies and the general public. The business established in New York has grown to considerable proportions, Miss Bergere says, and the need of a Los Angeles office has been apparent for some time. When this branch office opens the interests of twelve important stars will be handled through it, in addition to the work that is now being done in New York.

The New York office of Ouida Bergere, Inc., will not be discontinued, but will continue as heretofore under the direction of H. R. Sanger, formerly casting director at the Selznick studios and one time in the employ of Pathe. Miss Bergere will return to New York after she has established the Los Angeles office, and expects to be of the Broadway colony once more some time in the fall.

Pathe Finishing "The Bells."

The finishing touches, including a beautiful set of artistically illustrated titles, are being made on Pathe's presentation of "The Bells," starring Frank Keenan, at the New York office. The celebrated play made famous by Sir Henry Irving will be released as a Pathe Play on the Selective Feature Service.

The illustrated titles are similar to those which were so highly praised in the Pathe Plays "Innocent" and "The Naulahka."

The supervising staff at the home office, aided by cutting experts, has been busily engaged in perfecting the technical work.

Essanay to Put Out a Second Block of Ten Bronchos

ESSANAY announces that it has met with such a success in the first ten of its revivified Broncho Billy dramas of the hills and plains that it will follow with another set of ten Broncho Billy pictures, probably beginning May 10, a week after the last release of the first ten.

The pictures, which are being released through the George Kleine system, are one-reel subjects and have been found by exhibitors to be an excellent addition to any program. They have been booked in the majority of cases by the entire block of ten, the exhibitor running them on a special night each week.

New prints are made on all the pictures by new process photography which has enhanced the beauty greatly. Mostly outdoor scenes, the photography, under the new process treatment, stands out with unusual clearness.

The western scenery and the daring riding have proved a great attraction to young and old alike, and exhibitors report that all the pictures so far released have been received with enthusiasm.

It is also probable that another block of ten of the Snakeville comedies also will be released. They feature the comedians Slippery Slim, Sophie Cultts and Mustang Pete. These comedies have proved to be excellent attractions with feature programs and have been favorably received by the photoplay public. They are exceptionally fast-moving slapsticks and provocative of hilarious laughter. The screen is taking the place of "Wild West Shows" in public favor.

Kerrigan Getting Ready for Work.

After an absence of eight months from the studio J. Warren Kerrigan is completing arrangements to appear before the camera at the Paralta plant in Los Angeles within the next two weeks. Mr. Kerrigan has been incapacitated since an accident which occurred during the filming of his second Paralta play, "The Turn of a Card," and which resulted in a broken leg. The vehicle chosen for his return to the screen is "Toby," from the book of the same name by Credo Harris, which is particularly adapted to Mr. Kerrigan's type of interpretation, and which has just been purchased by the Paralta company. Thomas J. Geraghty, of the Paralta staff of authors, has been engaged for some time past in the preparation of the screen version of "Toby."

Raymond B. West will direct the production. The supporting cast for "Toby" has not yet been selected, but it is quite probable that Lois Wilson will play opposite him. Miss Wilson has also been absent from the Paralta screen since Mr. Kerrigan's last picture.

Louise Glaum at Work On Second Paralta Play

THE company of players which is now engaged at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles upon the second Paralta Play to feature Louise Glaum is being worked to capacity every moment allowed by the sunlight. Director Wallace Horsley, who is staging the production of "Shackled," from the Lawrence McCloskey story, is rushing the filming of the interiors, due to the great demand for Miss Glaum's Paralta Plays created since the recent release of her initial production for this organization, "An Alien Enemy."

Mr. Horsley expects to have completed all of the interior scenes within another few days and he will immediately leave with Miss Glaum and the entire company for Del Mar Beach, in Southern California, where he will remain for four days taking exterior scenes. When these have been filmed and a few more exterior locations near the studio have been taken, the production will be practically completed. "Shackled" will no doubt be ready for release within a very short time.

Clara Kimball Young To Wear Gorgeous Gowns

IN marked contrast to the severe settings and plain clothes of her recent Select Picture, "The House of Glass," Clara Kimball Young, in her latest production, "The Reason Why," released the last week in April, appears on the screen attired in one gorgeous costume after another.

The settings, too, of "The Reason Why" are in keeping with its sartorial splendor, for after the first stage of the story has been passed they are laid almost entirely in the fashionable haunts of London's Mayfair. Full scope, therefore, is given Miss Young for the display of beautiful gowns, and the star does not fail to make the most of her opportunities in this regard.

Milton Sills, Miss Young's leading man, and Frank Losee, both seasoned actors from the speaking stage, are chief in the Select star's support. "The Reason Why" is the struggle of a young wife to establish her position in the aristocratic family into which she has married shortly after her arrival in England from the Continent, where she has led a somewhat eventful existence.

De Luxe Finishing First Subject.

Doris Kenyon is rapidly completing work on "The Street of Seven Stars," the Mary Roberts Rinehart story which will be the initial offering of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., with Miss Kenyon at the head of her own company. Director John B. O'Brien has practically finished all of the interiors and expects to leave with Miss Kenyon and other principals within a few days for Virginia in order to secure a few scenes in which dense foliage is required. The feature is being made in six reels.

Immediately following the completion of "The Street of Seven Stars" Miss Kenyon will start on the second picture to be made by her own company. The author is one of the foremost writers in the country, whose works are in as great demand for the screen as are those of Mrs. Rinehart.

Enid Bennett Appears in Circus Story.

In the story of "The Biggest Show on Earth," in which Enid Bennett, the Thomas H. Ince star, will appear for Paramount shortly, is embodied a tale of life under the big tops with a romance and a mystery combining with many thrills. Florence Vincent wrote the story, which tells of Roxie Kemp, seventeen, and daughter of Matt Kemp, half owner of the K-T Mammoth circus. Her whole life has been spent in the atmosphere of the circus, but on her birthday her father tells her that her mother was a woman of high social position and that she is to be educated according to her wish. But the circus does not pass out of her life as events prove. Jerome Storm directed the picture.

In "Britain's Bulwarks" Pathe Has Strong Serial

VIVID and graphic scenes from all phases of the World War are shown in the gripping series of twelve official British pictures set for exclusive release by Pathe at weekly intervals beginning May 12 under the main title of "Britain's Bulwarks."

These remarkable pictures bring the great war with its hardships, suffering, indomitably courageous soldiers, and dramatic incidents to the screen for the benefit of the American public, showing what England's power has meant to us and to civilization.

The release of these official pictures is in line with the new policy of America and her Allies to take the people into the confidence of the Governments, and to let them see the heroic sacrifices and achievements of the soldiers, sailors, and women of Great Britain. They lend themselves to booking as three four-reel features if exhibitors so desire.

Scenes from the sun-scorched valley of the Tigris showing the hardships of the soldiers in the Mesopotamia campaign from the shell torn hills of Vimy Ridge, where the Canadians are at grips with the Hun, and from the fighting top of a destroyer in a naval battle with the enemy are included in this remarkable series of pictures.

The first picture of the series shows the women munitioners of Great Britain busily engaged in their work of shellmaking. Three-fourths of all the ammunition in Great Britain is turned out by women. The first picture also shows British cavalry at the front, with the horses leaping trenches, and the squadron occupying the smoking ruins of a village.

The second picture shows Messines Ridge, which is now the center of the heaviest onslaughts of the German troops in their new drive. An additional appeal is sure to result from locating episodes in these historic scenes.

Western Pathe Studios Working at Capacity

PRODUCTION of Pathe features starring Frank Keenan, Fannie Ward, Bessie Love, and Bryant Washburn is going forward with high sped in West Coast studios together with Baby Marie Osborne photoplays, two new serials, and comedies featuring Harold Lloyd and Toto.

At the Paralta studio, Frank Keenan is completing his forthcoming comedy, "More Trouble," and is preparing to begin work in "The Sierra Sixties," an adaptation from "The Lyons Mail," a gripping Western melodrama. Maude George, one of the best known and most capable "heavy" actresses on the screen, has been selected to play opposite Mr. Keenan in the part of Nita, taken from the role of Jeanne in the original story. This is the strongest woman part in the play.

Fannie Ward is nearing the completion of Sir William Young's famous play, "A Japanese Nightingale," under the direction of George Fitzmaurice.

Bryant Washburn is busily at work on "All Wrong," a farce comedy by Mildred Considine. He has just completed "The Range Rider," a drama of the Southwest. William Worthington is directing the picture.

Final conferences have been held on "Hands Up," the great Western serial that is to be made at Universal City for Pathe by Astra. Gilson Willetts, author of the story, which is interwoven with the mysterious rites and traditions of the Incas, is in constant touch with James Horne, the director, and Jack Cunningham, of the West Coast Pathe force, who is doing the scenario for the serial.

"The Wolf-Faced Man," another Pathe serial of romance, mystery and action, also is on its way at the Diando studio under the direction of Stuart Paton. George Larkin, the leading man, and Betty Compson, leading woman; Horace B. Carpenter, True Boardman, Frederick Malatesta, William Quinn, Harry O'Connor, and Ora Carew are playing the big parts.

At the Diando studio the Baby Marie Osborne Company has just completed "The Soul of a Child," and Director William Bertran is now cutting and putting the finishing touches on the film. The title of the next picture upon which Baby Marie will begin work within a few days is "The Record."

At the Rolin studios, Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels, and Harry Pollard are hard at work on a new series of one-reel Lloyd comedies for Pathe. In another part of the studio Toto and his leading woman, Clarine Seymour, are turning out Toto laughs under the direction of Hal Roach.

In other words the activities of producers for Pathe on the West Coast are at full blast.

Edith Storey Departs from Dramas of West

"The Demon," Edith Storey's forthcoming feature picture in the Metro program, will mark a radical change in the character of the versatile star's screen impersonations. It will signalize the departure of Miss Storey from dramas of Western life into the field of romantic comedy and light satire. The production is well under way at Metro's West Coast studios.

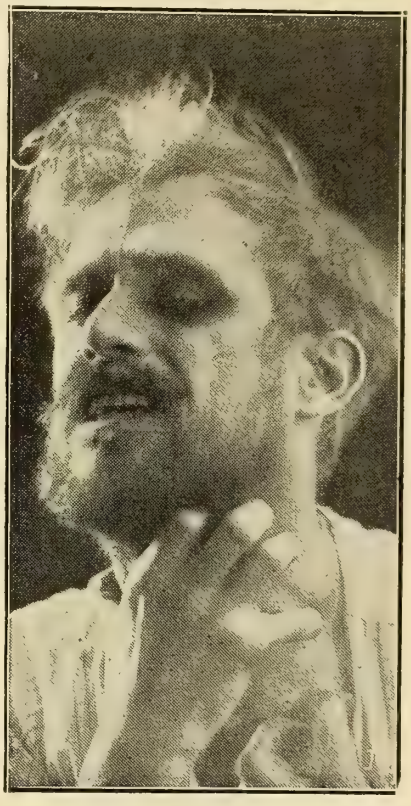
As Perdita in "The Demon," Miss Storey has a stellar role as different from those in her recent pictures, "Treasure of the Sea," "The Claim," and "The Legion of Death," as salt is from sugar. The characterization, that of an American girl sold in childhood in an Algerian slave market and reared in the bandit-ridden hills of Corsica, runs the range of emotions.

"The Demon" is a picturization of the novel by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's Western studios, made the adaptation for the screen. He also is directing Miss Storey.

Conkwright Supporting Farnum.

A. B. Conkwright, well known as a character actor, will be seen in dramatic episodes in "Brave and Bold," William Fox's forthcoming special feature starring George Walsh.

One of Mr. Conkwright's recent portrayals was that of the blood-thirsty Socialist in James W. Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany." The whiskers that adorn him in the picture are entirely real, as he grew them for the part.



A. B. Conkwright.

Broadway knows Conkwright best, perhaps, as a dancer, although, in addition to acting in films, he has written many scenarios. Conkwright is therefore the only bewhiskered exponent of terpsichore on "The Great White Way." A short time since he wrote to Secretary of War Baker offering his services to teach the men in camp how to dance, as part of their course in physical training.

Paralta Studios Expanding.

In accordance with the plans recently approved by the executives of Paralta Plays, Inc., the expansion of the Paralta studios in Los Angeles is now well under way, and no time is being lost in the construction and completion of the new buildings that are to surround the five big stages on the studio grounds.

Already some of the elaborate new dressing rooms have been practically finished and one or two of the stars are awaiting final touches of paint before occupying them. The gorgeous greenroom, which will be an innovation to the motion picture studio, is still in the course of construction, but will be completed before long. The dressing rooms of the stars will consist of a suite elaborately furnished and will really contain "all the comforts of home."

In accordance with the Paralta plan that everything used in the manufacture of films will be made on the grounds, a floral department has been established and several men are continually at work making artificial flowers.

The patriotic movement to promote the sale of Liberty Bonds to everybody in the industry will culminate in a special rally at Brady's Playhouse, Sunday, April 28, at 4:30 p. m.

Raemaeker's Cartoons Offered to Americans

IT may not be amiss to say that Louis Raemaeker's cartoons first opened the eyes of the British public to the full reality and horror of the war. Before the war he was a landscape painter and an illustrator of books, but henceforth he will be known only for his cartoons.

The work of this distinguished Dutch cartoonist received a tremendous impetus when filmed, and the exhibition of the cartoons throughout Great Britain has been extraordinarily successful. The exclusive rights for the film cartoons throughout the United States and Canada are now offered by the Cartoon Film Company, Ltd., 76 and 78 Wardour street, London, England. These wonderful cartoons prove that there are few if any living artists with Raemaeker's power of depicting the very soul of an episode, and be combines with this a keen wit, so that the cartoons are often the most biting satire imaginable. It is a significant fact that the great cartoonist of the war is a neutral, and the American and Canadian public will see that these cartoons form a historical document, the value of which can hardly be over-estimated.

British exhibitors did exceedingly good business with the films, and on this side there is opportunity for even larger business. Film presentation of Raemaeker's cartoons will be of immense assistance in fortifying public opinion in a vigorous prosecution of the war.

Goldwyn Expects Much of "Joan of Plattsburg"

MABEL NORMAND in "Joan of Plattsburg" is the most notable achievement of the Goldwyn organization. This is the opinion of everyone concerned in the production's making. Its reception by the public is waited with no doubt of the overwhelming success of "Joan of Plattsburg." The popularity of Mabel Normand in Goldwyn Pictures will, it is predicted, rise after May 5, the release date of the patriotic comedy-drama.

Emphatically "Joan of Plattsburg" is not a war story, nor are there any of the depressing features usually found in a photodrama dealing with the great conflict. Yet "Joan of Plattsburg" holds all the thrills, all the patriotic appeal of the most obvious battle story.

George Loane Tucker has taken the original version of the Porter Emerson Browne play, some scenes of which were disapproved by the Government when it was first produced by Goldwyn, and has injected imagination, emotional appeal and spiritual beauty. Many scenes showing details of training at Plattsburg have been eliminated, and in their place Mr. Tucker has substituted a story of charm and depth, relying for its interpretation on extraordinary photographic effects and direction.

Another Reissue Chaplin May 4.

"A Night Out," the ninth of the Essanay-Chaplin new editions, is released May 4 by General Film Company. This story recounts Charlie's misadventures in high life and is said to be one of his best comedies. In its new form this subject is presented in even a snappier style than when it was first released.

Lambs Watch Farnum Battle.

That all the world loves a lover, especially a fighting lover, was demonstrated at the Lambs Gambol recently, when the famous theatrical club watched William Farnum, their fellow member, in the terrific fight scene from "Rough and Ready." The dramatic climax of the picture was screened amid thunderous applause from the Lambs.

Fox Players Score in Rio Janeiro Contest

One of William Fox's South American representatives has just sent to the organization the issue of the "Correio Da Manha" (Morning Post), of Rio de Janiero, one of the foremost newspapers of the country, containing the results of a motion picture contest just concluded. The figures published show the popularity of Fox stars in the Latin-American republics.

The contest was divided into two parts. The first was for beauty. Out of a total of 118,000 votes cast, ten William Fox players heading the list scored 90,000 of them—more than three times as many as that obtained by the other twenty-four actresses listed.

The second part of the contest was devoted to what is translated as "appearance" and "dress." Eight Fox players, again heading the list, compiled 86,000 out of the 118,000 votes, almost three times the number secured by forty-two competitors.

Marie Dressler, Liberty Bonder.

This is not a picture of Marie Dressler, the comedienne, posing as Napoleon Bonaparte, but registering the expression as attached to her pronunciamento: "Is there a man with soul so dead who to the world at large has always said, 'Shall I buy a Liberty Bond?' I dare you to refuse!"

Ebony Production Plans.

Following the arrangement with General Film Company to distribute its regular releases of one-reel comedies, the Ebony Film Corporation of Chicago has begun a number of new subjects to continue its series, the first six subjects of which have already been completed and scheduled for release. Some attractive paper is now available for these.

In the Ebony comedies these casts are composed entirely of colored players. They are slapstick productions intended to rate as standard. In addition they have an appeal of novelty, and on top of that the distinctive humor of the negro as brought out by the players.

Telegram Features Liberty Day.

America's celebration of Liberty Day, and the start of the third Liberty Loan drive is pictured in Screen Telegram No. 13, released by Mutual April 14. Screen Telegram correspondents in all parts of the country contributed to the reel. There are views of President Wilson speaking at Baltimore, of Madame Sarah Bernhardt leading the procession at New Orleans, of regular troops on parade in Indianapolis, and of the big military pageant in Chicago.

Scene from "The Lie" (Artcraft).

"Up the Road With Sallie" Liked.

Constance Talmadge has been hailed as captivating in her April release for Select Pictures, "Up the Road With Sallie," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick. Reviewers and exhibitors who have seen this latest production by the Select comedienne have pronounced it "Constance Talmadge's best."

Arbuckle Brings Home "Moonshine."

After being marooned in the mountains for ten days and going through thrilling adventures that weren't in the story Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle and his company of brave comedians and comediennes have returned from San Gabriel Canyon, California, with the completed film of "Moonshine," the round one's latest comedy.

Roscoe Fatty, Al St. John and Buster Keaton all have tales of escapes. Flood waters caused by the recent rains raged through the canyon, carrying trees before them and causing many cave-ins of land where the embankment was steep.

In spite of hardships the members of the company returned in splendid physical condition.

Boston's Eyes Turn Toward Screen Players

Many Big Picture Productions Attract Attention During Liberty Loan Drive when Several Leading Stars Are in the City.

By Robert N. Howe, No. 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—This city is enjoying a photoplay carnival such as it has never known before. Moving picture films have crowded the legitimate drama off the dramatic pages, and moving picture actors have been headliners in the news of the day.

This comes at a psychological time. The great National Moving Picture Exposition is to be held in Boston in July.

The exposition needed some extra stimulus. Thanks to former Ambassador James W. Gerard, David W. Griffith, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Mary Pickford, Alice Brady, and many others this added attention to the film drama has come, and nothing but a hugh success can be predicted for the national convention.

All the Boston papers on Sunday, April 6, carried a larger amount of moving picture advertising than was carried by the legitimate playhouses.

More than two thousand people attended the first showing of the film, "My Four Years in Germany," at the Boston opera house, given under the auspices of the New England Liberty Loan Committee as a patriotic contribution to the drive and a stimulus to the workers who are taking an active part in the work.

Governor Samuel W. McCall and Mayor Andrew J. Peters made speeches, and it was after midnight before the show was completed. The film opened its regular Boston run at Tremont Temple, where it has been enjoying big business.

Harry Jones Will Guide the Codman Square Theater.

The Codman Square theater, a new motion picture and vaudeville house, of Dorchester, Mass., is rapidly nearing completion, and the opening date will soon be announced. The new theater will be under the management of Harry E. Jones, well known in theatrical circles throughout New England, and there will be two performances each day.

New Management for the St. James.

The St. James theater, of Boston, will be under the management of Mr. Gulesian beginning September 1. The theater at present is managed by Loew's Theatrical Enterprises, and is doing an exceedingly fine business out of high class moving pictures and vaudeville. Mr. Gulesian is contemplating some new features for the house which are expected to bring great results. Announcement of these will be made during the coming summer season.

Fire Damages Theater in Lawrence.

The Strand theater, of Lawrence, Mass., was badly damaged by fire, the projection machine and operating booth being totaly destroyed.

Manager Albert Brodie estimated that the damage was about eight hundred and fifty dollars. The fire was confined to the operating booth, thus causing no excitement in the audience. The projection machine was insured.

Worth a Passing Glance.

Carl Crawford, formerly of the General Film Co., Boston, and a salesman for the Fox Film Corporation, has recently joined the Wakefield Rifle range.

Maurice Noones, formerly a booker for the Boston Universal, joined the force of the Boston Photoplay Company, April 15.

Beatrice Roberts, of Winthrop, Mass., who won the beauty contest at the 1916 Arena Screen Ball, and who has been leading the life of a motion picture actress in New York for several months, has returned home for a short visit. Her stay will be a brief one, for she is anxious to get back to the Gay White Way.

Fitchburg Theater Changes Hands.

Boston, Mass.—(Correction.) In last week's issue of the Moving Picture World it was stated that the Majestic theater at Fitchburg was taken over by the United Film Service, which is under the management of S. M. Moscow; it should be, the Majestic theater was taken over by the Bay State Theater Company, of which Mr. Murphy is president and S. M. Moscow is the manager, and the United Film Service has secured the New England rights for Gotham Patriotic Films.

Theater Misrepresentation Suit Lost.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.—Dwight S. Williams, of 247 Webster avenue, lost his suit to recover $5,000 damages from Herman F. Jans, of South Orange, for alleged misrepresentation of facts in the sale of the Roseville theater, Orange and Sixth streets, Newark. The jury in the Supreme Court brought in a verdict April 16 in favor of Jans. Williams testified he had been induced, through the glowing statements of Jans about huge profits the theater was making, to purchase the showhouse. The plaintiff had acquired the theater in November, 1915, and inside of two years, according to his testimony, had lost about $3,500. Jans entered a denial to the statements of Williams, and said the latter owed him a bill amounting to $386.70, for which Mr. Jans put in a counter claim.

Bell Film Takes Cleveland Exchange.

CLEVELAND, O.—The Bell Film Service, which operates a successful exchange in Pittsburgh, Pa., has taken over the United Business Association exchange in Cleveland.

Joseph Spero, manager of the Bell, in Cleveland last week announced plans for the new exchange.

The U. B. A. handled the Jester comedies and other features in Ohio from their office in the Columbia building. The new Bell exchange will be located in the Belmont building.

Among other new features which the Bell will acquire is a big patriotic picture entitled "Mothers of Liberty."

Mr. Spero is an old-timer in the film business, and can be relied upon to take good care of the exhibitors of Ohio. The Bell Film Service makes a big bid for business on a very liberal policy.

Two Baltimore Theaters Change Hands.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The Orpheum theater, 2307 Jefferson street, which has for some time been under the management of C. Alexander, was sold at auction on Wednesday, April 10, by Auctioneers Sam W. Pattison & Company to the New Gem Amusement Company, which operates the New Gem theater, 617 North Duncan street, of which N. B. Burns is the manager. The amount involved in the transaction is understood to be $3,850.

The West End theater, Baltimore and Gilmor streets, of which Paul Emmart is the manager, has been conveyed from George A. Solter, trustee to George W. Walther. About two months ago the property was sold at public auction for $25,000.

Atlantic City Theater Changes Hands.

While no anouncement has come direct from the offices of the Parkway Theater Company it is generally understood that large property has been acquired by this company in Atlantic City, N. J., including a moving picture theater which will shortly be thrown open to the public of that popular resort. Harry W. Webb is the president of the Parkway Company, and Bernard Depkin, Jr., who has general supervision of the three large moving picture theaters of this company in Baltimore, will also have direct charge of the theater, which will probably be opened about May 1 in Atlantic City. Joseph Bowden, who has been helping Mr. Depkin at the Parkway, it is stated, will act in the capacity of house manager of the Atlantic City project.

Floor Gives Way in Cumberland Theater

Cumberland, Md.—On April 13, while the performance at the Leader theater, on Virginia avenue, in this city was progressing in a favorable manner during the second show, the floor suddenly began to sag, and gradually fell down into the basement, forming a bowl shape. Confusion was rampant for a time, but as the lights did not go out there was no loss of life or any serious injury.

Hagerstown Theater in Court.

Hagerstown, Md.—On Thursday, April 4, a bill was filed by the Colonial Real Estate Company to restrain the Washington Street Amusement Company from remaining in forcible possession of the Colonial theater, which was sub-leased by the defendant from Fred. C. Wright, who had leased it from the plaintiff for five and a half years from November 12, 1917. Ernest Westfall is manager, and Fred G. Nixon Nirdlinger is president of the Washington Street Amusement Co. It is alleged that the theater has only been operated for five days, although it was agreed to operate it for not less than 35 weeks each year. Judge Keedy granted a temporary injunction.

Baltimore Personals of the Trade.

S. Feldstein, who has been associated with the Baltimore Film exchange as representative of the Universal, which is under the management of P. Oletsky, it is understood has now returned to his former location at Clarksburg, W. Va., to handle that territory for the Universal.

Carrol E. Stem, who has managed the Majestic theater, 320 South Broadway, for some time, has now been called to the colors, and will take up the duties of a soldier at Camp Meade.

Sophia K. Levine, who for several years acted as bookkeeper at the Mutual, when it was located in Baltimore, has now become associated with the Famous Players exchange in Washington, D. C., as bookkeeper.

J. L. Schanberger, who has for about two years been associated with his father, Frederick C. Schanberger, president of the James L. Kernan Co., in the management of the Maryland theater, has now joined the United States Naval Reserves.

New Brunswick Proposes Drastic Show Tax

Would Charge Picture Theaters a Percentage of Net Earnings at Rate Scaled by Comparison Between Net and Gross Earnings.

By Alice Fairweather, "Standard," St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—There is great agitation among the theater men regarding the proposed tax to be imposed by the Legislature at this session. Many of the exhibitors claim that it is prohibitory and will drive them out of business.

Where the net earnings of a picture theater are not more than five per cent. of its gross earnings the proposed tax rate shall be one per cent. Where net earnings are more than five but not more than seven and one-half per cent. the rate shall be one and one-quarter per cent. Where the net earnings are above seven and one-half per cent. the rate shall be one and one-half per cent. T. P. Regan, who represented the motion picture theater owners at a hearing, asked that the percentages should be reduced to read one-half, instead of one, three-quarters instead of one and one-quarter, and one instead of one and one-half.

At the present time the city imposes a seat tax of thirty cents per seat per year up to one thousand seats and fifteen cents per seat in excess of one thousand. Mayor Hayes of St. John stated that the passage of the new bill would rescind the seat tax and if desired a section to that effect could be included in the bill.

Commissioner McLellan said that motion picture theater men had not consulted the public when they wished to advance their prices of admission and they could not be classed as educational institutions, for some of the pictures shown had no educative quality. He had seen pictures passed by the present board of censors that should never have been passed. [Since the board of censors is offcial, what has the commissioner to say?]

J. M. B. Baxter said that the picture people and others affected who were complaining of the rates proposed had not filed statistical statements as to their inability to pay. There was no such evidence before the committee in any of these cases.

St. John Film Situation Not Promising.

The situation in St. John proper as regards film is not promising, there being only three houses running an entire screen program—the Imperial, the Unique and Nickel theaters. The Imperial, it is understood, is tied up with a Paramount contract extending over a considerable time. This leaves very little chance for a film exchange to book a first-run picture. As there are nine exchanges in the city it is a scramble among them. The Unique theater seats five hundred only. The Nickel is a five-cent house.

Ackers Reopens His Halifax Theater.

L. R. Acker's theater at Halifax reopens on the 20th of April. The house has been practically made over with new seats, new projection booth, new hardwood floors, tiled lobby and raised roof. With new decorations it is going to look splendid. For the first half of the week beginning on Saturday the Universal Weekly, with a single-reel comedy, will be shown in addition to the vaudeville. The second half "The Bull's Eye" serial is shown.

Donaghy Gets Managerial Position.

The Superfeatures Film Co. has a new manager in St. John, Albert Donaghy. Business is excellent and all its specials are doing well.

Maritime Theater Jottings.

The Imperial theater, St. John, N. B., had good success in the showing of "The Kaiser," running it for three days with a double matinee on Wednesday. The American troops received loud and hearty applause whenever they were introduced.

W. H. Golding, manager of the Imperial theater, St. John, N. B., has recovered sufficiently to leave the Infirmary, but he has had a great deal of illness in his family. He has the sympathy of a large number of friends.

F. J. Burt, of Joggins Mines, N. S., has reopened his theater after being closed for four months on account of smallpox in the town. "The Neglected Wife" was running at this theater at the time it had to be closed (Mr. Burt uses Pathe pictures) and the serial will be continued.

N. W. Mason, of the Academy at New Glasgow, N. S., will open with some new Pathe play shortly. Business is very poor in New Glasgow at present owing to peculiar local conditions.

The King Edward theater, Halifax, has reopened. George N. Couture, manager.

The Orpheus, Halifax, under the management of L. R. Acker, opened on Monday, April 8, with the finest orchestra to be heard in the Maritime Provinces, it is claimed. The picture policy is to be the best out of all exchanges, rather an open booking, with special. Jewel productions and Universal specials will be shown.

The Gem theater, St. John, will run two Pathe features each week with its vaudeville program. The vaudeville is that used by L. R. Acker before the time of the Halifax explosion and is now used again in Halifax and at North Sydney, Glace Bay and St. John. It will probably be booked at several other places.

Independent to Leave St. John.

It is rumored that the Independent Film and Theater Supply, Ltd., St. John, N. B., is moving from St. John to locate in Halifax, or it may do business from the head office at Montreal. The Regal Film Company may move into the quarters now occupied by the Independent Company on May first.

Personal and General Items.

"Sirens of the Sea" failed to pass the Board of Censors in St. John recently. They failed to charm the members of the board.

Arch Mason, of Wolfville, N. S., is in St. John, N. B., for a short visit.

L. E. Ouimet, general manager of the Specialty Film Import, was a welcome visitor in St. John. On leaving St. John Mr. Ouimet will go on an inspection tour of the Specialty film exchanges through the West.

Pathe News Items.

"The Price of Folly," a new series featuring Ruth Rolland, is booked in the following theaters: Imperial, Halifax; Savoy, Glace Bay; Khattar's, Whitney Pier; Grand Opera House, Springhill; Unique, St. John; Star, St. John; Empress, West St. John; H. R. Walker, Dartmouth, and at the Spencer houses in Amherst, Charlottetown, Fredericton, Woodstock and Truro. None of the managers of these theaters have as yet seen the series, but they are booking them on the excellent reputation of the past Pathe productions.

"The House of Hate" will be in the territory from June 3 till July 21. It is booked in a number of houses, including six of the F. G. Spencer theaters, the Imperial at Halifax, and the Star and Empress, St. John.

R. A. Schornstein Talks with World Representative on Showmanship in Castile, N. Y., a Village Where They Are Particular.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Film fans of Castile, N. Y., are sticklers for clean shows. Many features which draw the crowds in Buffalo would nearly play to vacant seats in that village. This is the opinion of R. A. Schornstein, who has conducted the Photoplays theater in Castile for the past ten years. He has the only picture house in the village. The wholesome atmosphere of the place, he says, has a direct bearing on the screen tastes of the inhabitants.

"I know just the kind of clean plays my patrons want," said Mr. Schornstein, "and never show anything I cannot recommend. They expect me to stand between them and the picture. I would be satisfied to break even rather than show a picture that would give offense."

Mr. Schornstein is a great believer in occasionally giving free picture shows outdoors during the hot weather for the benefit of his townspeople. He expects to develop this idea extensively after peace is declared.

"I would be willing to close my theater when giving these outdoor shows," he said.

Mr. Schornstein is chairman of the Red Cross and Four-Minute Men of Castile and frequently devotes his time and theater to these worthy causes.

Motor Truck Fund Benefit at the Elmwood.

Manager Weinberg of the Elmwood moving picture theater, Buffalo, recently gave a benefit matinee for the motor truck fund of the National League for Women's Service. The attraction was Frederick Warde in "The Vicar of Wakefield." There were other special features. The entire proceeds were donated to this worthy cause, as were the services of the house employes.

Mayor of Buffalo Gets Censorship Resolutions.

Joseph P. Murphy, general secretary of the Social Welfare conference of Buffalo, has sent to Mayor Buck of this city resolutions adopted by members of that organization relating to moving pictures of a sensational kind. The members of the conference want the city council to create a salaried position of moving picture censor who would be responsible to the city and work in cooperation with the national board of reviews to eliminate exhibitions of "objectionable" films. The communication to Mayor Buck stated that the present censorship has proved unsatisfactory and that constant complaints are received by the organization. The Buffalo City Federation of Women's Clubs is active in the campaign.

Gardiner Syndicate Moves.

The Gardiner Syndicate, which has the New York State rights on the Billy West comedies, has moved from the Chamber of Commerce building to the spacious quarters formerly occupied by the Veribest Pictures at 47 West Swan street, Buffalo.

"In the first thirty days one hundred and two theaters in the state have contracted for all of the Billy West comedies for one year," said T. R. Gardiner. "We have that many more contracts since we took over this business. Thirty-two of the theaters are in Buffalo."

Al Sherry is road representative of the Gardiner Syndicate.

L. D. Hatfield, assistant manager of this concern, has resigned to enlist in the Canadian artillery.

Mr. Gardiner says he is after state rights features, but they must be good ones.

Manager Mack Publicly Thanked.

W. A. V. Mack, Buffalo manager of the Mutual, has received from Hamilton Ward, chairman of the Home Defense Committee of Erie County, N. Y., a letter of thanks for Mr. Mack's work in connection with that organiaztion. Mr. Mack arranged for "four minute men" at the theaters and other details in the Home Defense campaign. He also represented the local moving picture theaters in the work of the War Saving Stamps publicity committee. This campaign was handled here by the Greater Buffalo Advertising Club, of which he is a member. Mr. Mack was also chief of the theatrical division in the first and second Liberty Loan and Red Cross campaigns. Repairs at the Mutual exchange, which was recently visited by fire, have been completed.

Oakland Theater Leased for 10 Years.

Helmar George, of the Central theater, Pontiac, writes the World office that he has taken for a period of 10 years, at a rental of $16,500 per year, the new Oakland theater, and that under a new arrangement with August Keist, Jr., together will practically book all the pictures and entertainment that goes into the Oakland, New Eagle, Howland, Central and White Palace theaters. As a matter of fact, the merging of the booking arrangements will likely reduce the overhead considerably. Mr. Kleist is in the army service at Camp Custer, but Mr. George in his absence will co-operate with Mrs. Kleist, who still resides in Pontiac. The Oakland, seating 1,600 people, and a large, beautiful house, has heretofore been playing vaudeville, but under the new George policy, will likely be given over to pictures seven days a week.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street E., Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—The two food conservation films issued by the Canadian Government have been presented in almost every theater in the Dominion, it has been announced. The pictures, which are two-reel subjects, are "Waste Not, Want Not," and "Everybody's Business." The distribution throughout the country was handled by the Famous Players' Film Service and the Canadian Universal.

Through an advertising arrangement between the Temple theater, Hamilton, and the Hamilton Spectator, a special children's matinee was staged at the theater on Saturday morning, April 20, admission to which was secured by tickets distributed by the newspaper in exchange for coupons clipped from the paper. Two shows were given during the morning to accommodate all the children. This plan has been found to be a fine advertising stunt. It was recently carried out in Toronto by the Allen theater and the Toronto Daily Star for "The Seven Swans" and it has been decided to repeat the stunt in Toronto by the same interests on April 27 for "Blue Bird." In Toronto there are seven designated places around the city where clipped coupons can be exchanged for admission tickets and the first applicants get the admissions. Cincinnati Musicians Want an Increase

All Theaters Get Demands for a Ten Per Cent. Raise and Action Is Expected in Ten Days—Demand May Be Granted at Once.

CINCINNATI, O.—A demand has been presented to all Cincinnati theaters employing musicians for an increase in wages amounting to ten per cent., and action is expected in ten days, according to the terms of the demand. The Musicians' Union Protective Association is the organization through which the musicians are acting, and about fifty members of the union employed in the various theaters are affected. It is understood, however, that the demand will be granted without controversy, the theaters taking the position for the most part that the increase asked is reasonable in view of the high cost of living under present conditions.

Gerard Picture Stays Another Week Circle.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Owing to the precedented demand for admission, management of the Circle theater, Indi apolis, has extended the exhibition of "Four Years in Germany," shown at theater during the week of April 7 to for one more week. The picture, acc ing to Mr. McCormick, has been the gest drawing card ever presented at theater.

Charles Stombaugh Leaves Local Standard to Go to Omaha for Pathe—Harry Muir Succeeds Him—Other Interesting Notes.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Charles Stombaugh, who has been manager of the Standard exchange here since it opened last May, resigned his position on Saturday, April 13, to accept the management of the Pathe exchange at Omaha, Neb.

Charles Stombaugh.

Mr. Stombaugh was one of the most energetic and most successful of local exchange managers and the Pathe exchange is assured a hard working, straight forward manager in the new executive. Mr. Stombaugh was one of the best liked exchange managers that ever held an office in a Minneapolis exchange. It is a fact that at one time Mr. Stombaugh had some of his films in about sixty-five per cent. of the Twin City theaters besides an unusually large distribution throughout the country.

Harry Muir Heads Standard.

Harry Muir, former manager of the Bluebird exchange and later connected with the Paramount, Supreme and Standard exchanges, will succeed Mr. Stombaugh as manager of the Minneapolis Standard branch. Mr. Muir has been very successful in booking Hart re-issues recently and due to the several years he has spent in this territory he is well known, also well liked by exhibitors.

Two Universal Men Visit.

Harry M. Berman and Joe Brandt, of the Jewel and Universal offices, New York, respectively spent two days in Minneapolis recently in conferring with salesmen and Manager E. R. Pearson. Mr. Pearson returned to New York with Mr. Berman while Mr. Brandt went to Des Moines for a conference with Manager Dan Lederman. Matthais Radin, special representative from the New York Jewel exchange, is spending a week in the Northwest territory boosting the firm's products.

At Minneapolis Exchanges.

Manager Ed. S. Flynn, of the Fox exchange, Minneapolis, has begun a drive to put Mutt and Jeff cartoon comedies into a majority of the territory's theaters.

Manager John R. Elliott, of the Elliott & Sherman exchange, has announced the purchase of territorial rights to the feature, "Mothers of Liberty." Mr. Elliott is preparing an advertising campaign to boost the film that is second only to that which he used to "cash in" on "The Birth of a Nation."

Manager "Two Gun" Carter Coen, of the Metro exchange, has made a hit with exhibitors of the territory by announcing that advance deposits and C. O. D.s were eliminated by his exchange on April 1. Mr. Coen emphatically states that this change of policy did not come as an April fool joke either.

Dan Donnelan, chief executive at the local Mutual exchange, has announced the re-issuance of "Damaged Goods," featuring Richard Bennett.

Harry Hollander, brother of W. K. Hollander, Chicago Daily News film critic, has resigned from the Fox exchange sales force following several weeks' illness. Mr. Hollander hopes to join some other exchange here when his health improves. Mr. Hollander has been touring the Northwest territory for over 16 months, and has also seen service in New York, where he has called to help in the exploitation of "The Honor System" last spring.

With Twin City Exhibitors.

Perry Hayes has sold his Nokomis theater, Minneapolis, to Mr. Hansing, a former St. Paul exhibitor. Mr. Hayes has not stated just what his future plans are.

Manager Watson, of the Tryst theater, St. Paul, would have sold out two months ago for little more than a song, no doubt, but today his theater is "turning them away" every evening. The Government transformed the gigantic Overland and Illinois Steel buildings (one block distant from the Tryst) into an aviation training school last month and Mr. Watson's theater being handy, exhibiting up-to-the-minute films and putting on its programs in a nice way, soldiers go to the playhouse by the hundred.

Harry L. Hartman, of the Palace theater, at Mandan, N. D., has boosted the Third Liberty Loan in his city with a specially constructed U-Boat on wheels, operated by a man, pedaling within. The U-Boat made a decided hit in the Loan drive at Mandan and brought some patrons to the Palace as well.

For the first time in history Charlie Chaplin's comedies will appear at the New Garrick. Manager Julius Johnson has contracted for "A Dog's Life." Ruben & Finkelstein, owners of the New Garrick, have contracted for first and second Chaplin runs in the Twin Cities and simultaneously with the New Garrick run here the New Palace, St. Paul, will show "A Dog's Life." The New Aster, Minneapolis, and New Majestic, St. Paul, will have second runs on the comedy within a month. The comedy will be held a week at each theater.

Manager Johnson enjoyed a good business with "Mr. Fix-it," Doug. Fairbanks' latest, by booking it for a run the week of April 14 and taking advantage of the publicity given Fairbanks' personal appearance in this city on April 17. In St. Paul Manager Bert Goldman of the New Majestic also took advantage of the publicity Fairbanks' visit is receiving, and booked "The Modern Musketeer" for showing during the week. "Old Doc Cheerful" was a caller.

"The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," was such a big success at the Minneapolis Strand the week of April 7 that Manager Charles G. Branham held it over for its eighth, ninth and tenth days. The extra days brought addition overflow crowds to the theater.

"The Sign Invisible" succeeded "The Kaiser" at the Strand, and due to the fact that Mabel Julienne Scott, featured in it with Mitchell Lewis, is a Minneapolis girl, this film also enjoyed splendid business. Mr. Branham went to Chicago Monday evening, April 15, for a conference with George Kleine.

Censorship by Persuasion in New Orleans

Louisiana Moral Photoplay Association Will Try Reasoning with Theaters Before Asking for Legal Censorship.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3081 Canal street, New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The Louisiana Moral Photoplay Association has just been formed here to exert strong personal and public influences for the elimination of objectionable motion pictures which are notoriously suggestive and for the elimination of those portions of otherwise acceptable pictures that might have a tendency to offend. The avowed purposes of the association make it appear to be a commendable organiaztion. There is no threat of drastic measures and none are contemplated if the results sought to be obtained can be brought about by the application of the powers of reason. Failing in this, the association membership is of such a quality and of such importance in this community that it would be possible to make matters troublesome for such persons as might attempt to pay no heed to its suggestions for the betterment of film productions. Nearly every civic society and social club in the city has been affiliated with the movement and it is estimated that at lease 30,000 persons are directly interested in the success of any movement which the officers of the organiaztion may inaugurate.

New Orleans is an exceptionally strong motion picture city so far as regular attendance at the theaters is concerned and there are few cities that have a greater special footage taken of local scenes. The Federated Woman's Clubs especially have taken up the subject of motion pictures and their influence upon public and private life and, as a general rule, the feeling toward the pictures is a most kindly one. However, the determination has been made to secure the elimination of all objectionable footage and, rather than fail in the determination, censorship, as a last resort, will be demanded. And if it is demanded, under the present circumstances, it is almost sure to be adopted.

There is not the least objection to Sunday showing of pictures and all of the theaters count upon the Sunday shows as the most profitable ones, while the people have come to regard them as the most wholesome and beneficial diversions that can be devised. They keep the family together and the great portion of the weekly wages intact. That the saloons and old-time resorts have suffered irreparably through the furnishing of well-regulated motion picture entertainment on Sunday, is an admitted fact. New Orleans now, for the first time in a long term of years, enforces the Sunday closing of saloons, nor is it possible to secure liquors under any of the ordinary subterfuges. Wines only may be served with meals in hotels and restaurants. It is impossible to buy a cigar on Sunday and the result is that the family, including father, spends the day in the parks or on short excursions and winds up the season of surcease from the grind of breadwinning by going to a picture show in the evening, which is regarded as the fitting ending for a perfect day. That the newly organized Louisiana Moral Photoplay Association will accomplish much good appears to be the consensus of opinion.

Popular Demand for Sunday Shows.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Rev. W. B. Taylor, pastor of the First Unitarian Church, of Nashville, concluded his Sunday night lectures at the Knickerbocker theater with a talk on the benefit of Sunday entertainment. Rev. Taylor has been active in the fight at Nashville to secure Sunday moving pictures as a necessary diversion for the new influx of people coming to Nashville as a result of the powder plant's establishment here, and his appeal for Sunday opening has been with a broad sympathy.

At the end of his talk he requested that every member of the audience in favor of opening the moving picture houses on Sunday stand up. About six people remained seated, and they are the class who remain seated when the Star Spangled Banner is played. The people of Nashville want Sunday pictures, and will continue to fight until they get them.

Big Picture for Charity.

Much interest is being created in Nashville in the forthcoming presentation of "America at War," an official American Government war feature, which will be run at the Vendome theater for a three days' run. The production is in nine reels, having been directed by the National Committee on Public Information at Washington. Net proceeds of the show will be donated to the war charities.

Oldknow Leases Atlanta's Odeon.

ATLANTA, GA.—William Oldknow, general representative for the Universal in the Southern States, has leased the Odeon theater, at 79 Peachtree street, in the heart of the amusement center, has changed its name to the Tudor and announced that he will completely remodel it immediately with a view to making it a Universal theater.

Mr. Oldknow is a pioneer motion picture man in the South and formerly operated several theaters in Atlanta. His theater was Atlanta's first "motion picture theater de luxe." Built years ago as the Montgomery, it was then the most extravagant and beautiful movie house in the South.

Gradually others of greater seating capacity and more lavish embellishments sprang up. The Montgomery became the Georgian; then was leased by Jake Wells and John Evins, who changed its name to the Odeon. Its fourth name is to be the Tudor.

"The German Curse in Russia," shown at the Alamo No. 2 theater the week of April 15, proved a tremendous box-office attraction. The Atlanta Woman's club sponsored the exhibition, and various organizations, such as the Rotary club, the Ad Men's club, and others, attended the theater in force. The picture is said to be going big throughout the South.

Stamford, Texas, Folk Celebrate Rainfall

Manager Harry Johnston of Local Theater Says They Had Good Right to, As They Had Waited Long for Rain—Business Is Good.

By Douglas Hawley, the Times Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, Tex.—People who didn't know what it was all about might have thought them a lot of escaped inmates of an institution, but Harry Johnston, of the Dixie theater, Stamford, Tex., declares they were justified. He may have been one of 'em.

They had a parade at Stamford, April 13.

A crowd of wildly yelling people with coats off and faces turned to the sky pranced around the public square while rain drops as big as early June peas pelted them.

You see it hadn't rained out there in many a moon, and the people were celebrating. It is reported that the downpour was a dandy one, and after the parade everybody bought a Liberty Bond.

Johnston says they're gonner issue bonds and build 'em a dam across Clear Creek, so's to get lots of drinking water now that the state has gone dry. Incidentally he says the moving picture theater business is pretty good. He called on Dallas exchange folk during the second week in April.

Manager W. Campbell Recovering.

Walter Campbell, manager, Arcade theater, Denison, Tex., is recovering in a Dallas sanitarium from a nasal operation undergone during the week of April 15. Mr. Campbell is well known in Texas, not only by film folk, but others. He was a popular player in the Texas-Oklahoma baseball league a couple of seasons ago.

Rather a Dull Week in Dallas.

Attendance at Dallas theaters hasn't been up to the mark during the week ending April 13, and there were mighty good attractions too. "The Whip" at the Old Mill probably did better than anything else following a crackin' good advertising campaign—which was justified by the production—by Herschel Stuart, publicity sharp. "Lest We Forget" went over in good shape at the Hippodrome following a week's run of "Tarzan" that wasn't up to what it ought to have been. "Tarzan" is all that has been said of it, and the local publicity given it was ample, but somehow Dallas folk didn't seem to enthuse over it. It might do well for another run later. One of the most refreshing things in a month of Sundays was Taylor Holmes in "A Pair of Sixes," with not all the credit to the star. The effort of Maude Euburne as the maid-of-all-work was hailed by local critics as a joy. Elsie Ferguson in "The Lie" pleased not a few Dallas people.

Lively Interest in Coming Films.

Announcement of the forthcoming productions of Screen Classic, Incorporated, has created more than usual interest among Texas exhibitors. They've heard about "My Own United States," and they are interested in announcement of other things to come from this direction.

Universal's announcement of the Dorothy Phillips, Mae Murray, Harry Carey, Mary MacLaren, Priscilla Dean, and Herbert Rawlinson productions is also of big interest. So far as Dallas is concerned all three stars are well known to patrons of the Washington theater, which is to show the new releases on first run time.

C. A. Shivers Joins U. P. T. of A.

C. A. Shivers, formerly sales manager for Paramount, Dallas, Tex., has resigned to join the forces of the United Picture Theaters of America.

Boston and Dallas Have a Bet On.

Who'll win the hundred—or maybe it's two? J. B. Dugger, Dallas Vitagraph manager, has taken on C. W. Sawin, Boston Vitagraph manager, for a wager on increased business. Boston wagers she'll beat Dallas during an eight weeks' period. The Texas manager says remember "Bet a Million" Gates hailed from the Lone Star, and usually made good.

Oklahoma News Letter

By H. W. Smith, Liberty Theater Bldg., Oklahoma City, Okla.

Five Exchanges in Oklahoma City.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—Oklahoma City as a film distributing point has become a definite fact. From a nucleus of two—Universal and Mutual—the film industry locally has spread out until it includes four buying exchanges. Pathe and Metro having entered the field within the year, and a half dozen independent booking concerns. Inability to secure equable rental on quarters which come within the fire ordinance requirements of the city recently caused the local exchanges to get together, with the result that a building has been erected which already houses two of the independent agencies and the Metro. A second building in the same block is under construction, and will be used by the First National Exhibitors' Company and the Mutual. Universal occupies two floors of a fireproof building, and according to present outlook will continue in these quarters. Oklahoma City is midway between Dallas and Kansas City, from each of which film distributing points it has been served heretofore. It is understood that Fox and Foursquare are considering opening exchanges in this city. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will continue for the present its distribution arrangement as regards Oklahoma, the business now dividing equally between Kansas City and Dallas.

Universal Exchange on New Basis.

Oklahoma City.—Universal Film and Supply Company, the name under which the Universal branch operates in this city, has completed after four weeks of "house cleaning" a realignment of policy, and, in part, personnel, in line with a plan outlined by Joseph Brandt. A. S. Dowd, representing the general sales department of the Universal, has been here four weeks on the mission. The Oklahoma City exchange, in charge of Sam Benjamin, now operates after the pattern set in Chicago. Mr. Benjamin directs the sales of Universal pictures, Bluebird, Jewel, and Alice Howell productions, whereas the local exchange formerly had separate managers and systems for each.

M. B. Tritch Heads Metro Branch.

M. B. Tritch, recently of Dallas, and before then in the Universal office here, has been placed in charge of the Metro exchange opened at 112 South Hudson street, Oklahoma City. At present this office is handling one feature a week and the Drew comedies. It is a buying office whose scope will be extended as occasion develops.

T. E. Larson Buys "Four Years."

T. E. Larson, president of the First National Exhibitors, of Oklahoma, which company has secured the rights to "My Four Years in Germany," has personally bought the picture for the state. Sale price is not disclosed, but is said to have been in the neighborhood of $20,000. The top admission price of $1.50 will be held as a restriction in sub-leasing this subject. It will be shown here at the Overholser.

"Kaiser" Makes Hit.

"The Kaiser, Beast of Berlin," established the house record for a solid week's business at the local Strand the week of April 7-14 at admission of 25 cents.

Noise and Enthusiasm at "Kaiser" Showing

Picture Came to San Francisco Strand for Two Weeks, but Time Has Been Extended—Records for Noise and Attendance Broken.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, San Francisco, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—New box office records are being made at the Strand theater, where the "Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" is being shown, and at the same time all records for noise, roof-raising, and enthusiasm in local moving picture houses are being shattered. During the first four days that the picture has been shown the attendance has passed the twenty-eight thousand mark, and the management has been compelled to add another ticket selling booth and to get a special police detail to handle the crowds on the sidewalk. Special performances are being arranged, and the house is being opened earlier than usual to accommodate those who wish to avoid the rush. A feature of the first week's engagement was a special showing to the school teachers of the city, 1,700 strong; this having been arranged for by the superintendent of schools. It was originally planned to show it for two weeks, but the engagement has been extended for another week on account of the great interest aroused. The production has been booked for a full week at Sacramento and Oakland, where more than a three days' run is rare, while exhibitors in such places as Reno and Stockton have booked it for four days.

Week of Notable Screen Offerings.

Productions of unusual merit are being offered at downtown moving picture houses this week, and exhibitors are enjoying the best business in months. "The Unbeliever" is being shown at the Rialto for the second week, with the attendance keeping up remarkably well. The Strand is reaping a harvest with the "Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," having advanced prices for the engagement. At the T. & D. Tivoli, "Tarzan of the Apes" is the attraction, and this will be shown for two weeks. The Imperial is doing a good business with "The Honor of His House" and "The Son of Democracy," an added attraction being the singing of a war song by two soldiers who wrote it and secured for it the official endorsement of the United States Government. The California theater has "The Widow's Might," with Julian Eltinge, and presents as an added attraction Kajetan Attl, the harp virtuoso, who enjoys a world-wide reputation. The offering at the Portola theater is the first Paralta picture to be seen here, "The Turn of a Card," with J. Warren Kerrigan; with Foster Curry in person presenting scenic views of the incomparable Yosemite, San Francisco's playground. At the Alhambra, Harry Carey and Molly Malone in "Thieves' Gold," from the leading attraction. One of the features of the week was the benefit at the Columbia tendered by the Stage Women's War Relief, in which William Farnum, the Fox star, took a prominent part.

Government Films in Demand.

The Film Bureau of the State Council of Defense is meeting with great success in placing the Government films purchased by it in local theaters, the first of the series having been shown at the California theater. Other houses that will take turns in showing these are the Imperial, Strand, Rialto, Tivoli, Portola, Orpheum, Casino, Alhambra, Pantages, and Hippodrome. On April 10 a party consisting of Sol. L. Lesser, chairman of the State Film Bureau; M. J. Cohen, director of publicity; Louis Reichert, president of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California, and Charles Brown and Lester Fountain, of the Casino, motored to Camp Fremont to confer with General Morrison, commander of the Eighth Division, and secure his co-operation in the work under way. The first large feature release, "The Remaking of a Nation," will be shown at the Casino theater during the weke of April 21, and the army official promised a detail of men, a stand of colors, and assistance in other ways.

Equipment and Supply Business Booming

G. A. Metcalfe, of the house bearing his name, states that many machines are being disposed of, and that the demand for theater supplies is heavier than for a long time. He was recently appointed Pacific Coast distributor for the new Alterno carbon, and many exhibitors are giving these a thorough test. He is also handling Rexo motion picture film, and has found such a demand for this that it is impossible to keep stocks on hand. He recently sold a full operating room equipment to Mr. Dippo, who is erecting a theater at San Pablo avenue and Twenty-seventh street, Oakland; a 6A Excelite outfit to the Delco Engineering Company, of San Francisco; a similar equipment to the Atolia Mining Company; complete operating room equipment to S. Enea, of Pittsburg, Cal., who is rebuilding his theater, and a Power's 6B to A. Court, of Livingston, Cal.

Australian Producer Visits States.

J. F. Gavin, of the Australian Famous Feature Company, producer of a number of moving pictures that have been very successful in Australia, including "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell," arrived here recently for an extended stay. He brought a large quantity of negative with him, and this is being printed and made ready for use in the Earle Laboratories. This producing company turns out about one subject in three months, most of these being made in the wilds where scenery of rare beauty is shown.

Soldiers See "The Blue Bird."

The management of the American Photo Player Company tendered a Third Liberty Loan dance to the employes of both the local office in the Film Exchange building and the factory at Berkeley, Cal., on the evening of April 6. Before dancing was indulged in the employes were shown a number of comedy pictures in the big reviewing room and a speaker then took the stage and talked for a short time on the Liberty Loan. A representative of the company announced that the firm was subscribing for $10,000, and the employes swelled the amount materially by subscribing $2,500 more in small lots.

A number of soldiers and sailors from nearby camps were the guests of the management at the dance and the affair was one of the most successful of the kind that has been held so far.

A man dressed as "The Hooded Terror," the mysterious character in "The House of Hate," has been appearing on the streets, in the department stores and the leading cafes. He carried no placard announcing what he was, but the next week full-page advertisements were carried in the papers with a picture of the man in one corner, his face partly disguised by a question mark placed over it, and offering a prize to the person who can identify him. The rest of the page is taken up by advertisements of the stores and cafes in which "The Hooded Terror" has appeared during the week.

Mr. Hamrick will raise his admission price at the Little to 20 cents, beginning the week of the opening of "The House of Hate."

Portland, Ore., Operators Ask for Raise

Claim They Are Now the Poorest Paid Mechanics in City—War Time Rates in Other Trades Are Higher—Recently Won an Increase.

By Abraham Nelson, 661 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—Union operators are going to ask for another raise in wages. The exact time of their demand has not yet been divulged and members of the union intimate they will not call on the owners for more money until September or October. However, the union demands are already beginning to worry the managers for the reason that the operators were given a raise a few months ago.

Union members claim their demands are most equitable and that they are the poorest paid mechanics in the city. Shipyards are paying electricians as high as $9 a day. Portland operators are now getting $30 a week. That union operators are scarce in the Pacific Northwest is indicated by the fact that Seattle and Butte have called on Portland for operators.

Cree, special representative, who has been sojourning in Portland about two weeks, Portland is made an independent exchange. It was formerly a branch of the Seattle office.

Business in the Portland territory has improved wonderfully, says Mr. Cree, with the result that the Rose City office is being enlarged and the space formerly occupied by the Standard Feature Film Company has been taken over. The Portland General office will also have a road man in the person of W. E. ("Smiling Bill") Matthews, who at one time had charge of the Portland branch.

Mr. Cree left April 12 for Seattle, where he will do further work for General and Paralta.

"WESTERN BLOOD."

Border Melodrama, with Tom Mix as Hero, Plays Up Humorous Situations.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE will be a large clientele that will like the new Fox five-reel melodrama, "Western Blood." Tom Mix is the hero of it and Victoria Ford gracefully fills the second part in the love story. Besides this, it plays up humorous situations in a way that will be liked by many. It is undoubtedly a little too long, though it works steadily toward an exciting and interesting wild west climax with dashing horses and smoky shooting. One unusual situation is that of the cowboys all in fifteen-dollar evening suits at a party just before the ranch is raided by Mexican bandits at the instigation of Phul, the German agent.

The direction by Lynn Reynolds of these out-of-door scenes is much abler than his work in the society scenes in the early part of the picture, when Mix, as Tex Taylor, has met the heroine on one of his visits to Los Angeles. He is owner of one of the biggest ranches in Texas and she is a daughter of a Colonel buying horses for the Government. He is invited to a dance by the Colonel and comes in his old clothes, as he is traveling light, yet has given his promise to appear.

The foil to the hero is another horse buyer, agent for the Allies, who loves the girl. The bandit messenger mistakes him for Tex and entices him out of the ranch while the punchers are doing the honors to the Colonel and his daughter. The girl follows this man out and is captured by the Mexicans for Phul. This gives Tex a chance to ride over the Rio Grande to rescue her by his own right arm and skill. The cowboys, after being fooled for a minute, beat off the raiders and then the girl and the hero come riding back on the same noble steed.

It is not an absolutely sure picture for the highbrows or particular audiences, as it is not critic proof. The players "play up to their parts" in the accepted way in many places and the scenes with running horses are really fine. The lesser characters are likable. The photography is good.

"A BACHELOR'S CHILDREN."

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature with Harry Morey Simple, but Pleasing.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE isn't the slightest trace of suspense in "A Bachelor's Children," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature written by William Addison Lathrop and directed by Paul Scardon. The story unfolds itself after the manner of a simple but pleasing little novel and, save for a brief moment at the end when the hero takes the villain by the throat and gives him the good shaking you know all the time is coming to him, the action wanders along without any attempt to stir the blood. The touch of drama is forced into the plot and strikes a jarring note, but the main motive appeals to the better side of human nature. An orphan girl with two small sisters and an empty purse win the sympathy when they are first introduced, and to see them transferred from their one bare room to the fine country home of the man who had robbed them of the fortune left by their father is an agreeable sight.

Young Hugh Jordan, the nephew of the man who robbed the Winthrop children, is earning his living out West when he comes into the millions of his thieving old uncle. Hugh goes East and settles down to a life of ease and enjoyment. He is entertaining a stag party at his home when the butler announces the arrival of the Misses Winthrop. A letter left by their father told them to go to Hugh Jordon, as he held a mining claim in trust for them. Penelope, the oldest girl, shows the letter to Hugh and he invites the orphans to remain until he has investigated the matter. It is all plain sailing after that, and Hugh marries Penelope and the fortune is kept in the family. There is a slight underplot involving a handsome widow, who tries to capture Hugh, and a most despicable specimen of the wealthy class who tries to ruin Penelope.

Some of the scenes with Hugh and the two small girls are charming, and he doesn't forget to send Penelope a set of his pajamas to wear the first night she stops at the Jordon home. This has now become a convention among screen dramatists. Paul Scardon has directed the picture cleverly.

Harry Morey is a most satisfying Hugh Jordon, and, after Penelope's battle with the world, no one will blame her for wanting such a well built, kindly and capable looking husband to do the fighting for her. Alice Terry plays Penelope naturally and appealingly, and the smallest sister is a real little artist. Good work is done by Florence Deshon, Denton Vane, William Shea and Jessie Stevens. Released April 22.

"TYRANT FEAR."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

LIFE in the raw is shown in "Tyrant Fear," a five-part Paramount picture written by R. Cecil Smith and directed by R. William Neill under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Dorothy Dalton is the star. Much of the action takes place in a Northwest gambling hell and dance hall, and the unlovely side of humanity is shown with stark realism. Primitive passions that are supposed to belong only to the caveman are the foundation of most of the scenes, and there is the usual rough-and-tumble fight. Men bargain for a woman as if she were a beast of burden, and the woman fights her way out of the mire fate has thrown her into, and drags the man she loves with her. Cowed by the matter-of-fact way in which her father forces her to marry a brute of a trapper and her husband turns her over to the keeper of the dance hall, the woman drifts with the tide until she meets the man who awakens her real nature.

The story is sordid, but has possibilities of strong drama. In its present form it does not convince, and its direction is not clean-cut. There is no lack of movement, but the situations are often merely theatric. The Nativity scenes are entirely out of place; the atmosphere of lust that prevades the story is not refined by the introduction of this sacred subject.

Dorothy Dalton defines the two phases of Allaine Grandet's character distinctly, and puts real power into her big situations. Thurston Hall as Harley Dane, Melbourne MacDowell as James Dermot, William Conklin as Jules Latour, Lou Salter as Theodore De Coppee, and Carmen Phillips as Marie Courtot make the most of their opportunities.

John Stumar, the photographer, has taken a number of striking long shots of winter exteriors.

"BLUE BLOOD."

Selexart Photoplay Featuring Howard Hickman Has Powerful but Unpleasant Theme.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

STRONG mental food is contained in "Blue Blood," a five-part Selexart picture written by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton, and featuring Howard Hickman. The theme is decidedly unpleasant, and shows the effect of vicious living upon the descendants of the original transgressor. Nothing is glossed over. Spencer Wellington, a wealthy young man, who is threatened with paresis, will not take his physician's warning, and marries Grace Valient. Dr. Rand loves the same woman, but his professional honor will not permit him to tell her the secret about her husband.

A child is born, a hopeless defective that dies almost immediately. The mother loses her mind for a time, and another child is substituted for the dead baby. In the meantime the husband keeps getting worse. Realizing that he cannot hold off the moment of his mental breakdown much longer, Wellington starts in on a fast round of debauchery. He keeps a number of dancing girls in a secret retreat on his estate, and one night falls dead in the middle of a wild carouse. Indications point to the union of Doctor Rand and the widow.

Little is left to the imagination. A pictorial history is shown of the afflicted man's ancestry. The line came down from a London thief who was sent to Virginia on a convict ship from which he escaped and turned pirate. The episode indicating how he contracted disease shows a drunken revel with a number of lewd women. Briefly, "Blue Blood" is along the same lines as "Damaged Goods," with a number of added spectacular features.

The picture is very well produced under the direction of Eliot Howe and was photographed by Carl Widen. Howard Hickman gives a forceful impersonation of Wellington, and is capably supported by George Fisher as Dr. Rand, Mary Mersch as Grace Valient, Nona Thomas as Helen Blakeley, and Ida Lewis as Mrs. Valient.

"DOLLY DOES HER BIT."

Pathe Features Baby Marie Osborne in Delightful Child Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS is one of the best juvenile subjects shown in a long while. It tells a story that every child will comprehend and at the same time one that will amuse older people as well. Baby Marie Osborne has the leading role, exchanging places during the tale with a mechanical doll, a part which she handles very effectively.

The story, which is in five reels, was written by Lucy Sarver and directed by William Bertram. It reveals a close sympathy with the lives of children and the errors into which a mischievous little girl like Dolly sometimes falls.

Dolly lives with her aunt, who is a seamstress. The child is sent home from school because she has been naughty, and finds her aunt in the act of making a Red Cross costume for a huge mechanical doll. The doll can walk and talk and excites Dolly's interest intensely. Some of her playmates come and run away with the doll, which is later smashed by a runaway horse. Dolly then dresses in the Red Cross costume, hides in the big box, and is taken to the rich woman's home. She reveals her secret to the daughter, a little girl who is sick. The fairy story touches thrown in here are very fine and will appeal to the imagination of small observers.

Dolly carries out her deception successfully at the Red Cross bazaar, but later is kidnapped by a gang who have been raiding the house of the wealthy woman. Dolly assists in rounding up the gang.

The story is one that will meet with wide appreciation.

"THE PRIMITIVE WOMAN."

Margarita Fisher in American Production Gives Pleasing Performance.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN criticising the five-part American production "The Primitive Woman" it is difficult to treat it from the standpoint of the drama. It would be classified as a comedy, and while it might be considered entertaining it has not that irresistible quality characteristic of many of the screen comedies of the present day. Margarita Fisher plays in a pleasing manner the role of a young woman of wealth, who revenges herself on a young author whose peculiar ideas about women have led him to act and speak in an insulting manner. This young man isolates himself in the mountains for the purpose of writing a story on the primitive woman, where he is discovered by his friends, to whom he vows that no woman shall cross his threshold.

The mischievous young woman of the story, determined to place him at her feet, goes secretly to the home of a mountain woman with whom she lives in the guise of a wild girl of the hills. Purposely sliding over an embankment where she knows she will fall in his path, she is rewarded by having him pick her up and carry her to his cabin, where she pretends to be too much injured to be moved that day. The mountain woman is sent for and the two remain in the cabin of the author for several days. Finally she is discovered by her people, when it also comes to light that the woman-hating author has fallen to the charms of his pretty visitor.

"DANGER WITHIN."

Five-Reel Bluebird Features Little Zoe Rae in Story of Heart Appeal.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE softening influence of a child upon the heart of a hardened old masculine being has often been used effectively in pictures and fiction. This story, which was written by Charles T. and Frank Dazey, and produced by Rea Berger, introduces the theme in a way that will reach many hearts. The story is, in fact, one that will charm and satisfy the average audience immensely, in spite of its rather quiet development. The full reel of suspense at the close atones for a certain slowness of action in the opening reels, though in spite of this the story is at all times interesting.

Zoe Rae has perhaps never had a story better suited to her childish capabilities than this. She appears first as a helpful little soul in her own family, who practically keeps house owing to her mother's illness and her father's inability to employ help. Later she drops into the home of her father's employer, Matthew Wadgestone, a crusty old bachelor millionaire. While paying Wedgestone a visit the child is caught in a fake smallpox scare, and quarantined with old Wedgestone. She cooks for him and he learns to love her. Later it develops that there is really no smallpox on the premises, but that the enemies of Wedgestone are trying to keep him home while they raid his stocks on the street. The exciting moments of the story concern the child's successful efforts at saving the situation for Mr. Wedgestone and her father.

This number has far too many close-ups, particularly of unimportant characters. It should be noted that Charles H. Mailes does an excellent character bit as Wedgestone.

A GROUP OF CHRISTIES.

Future Releases Which Will Appear on the Program of the First National.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE latest group of Christie comedies are not by any means the best that have appeared under this brand, and in spite of the fact that the First National Exhibitors' Exchanges have taken over their distribution in Greater New York, New York State and New Jersey we have little to say for them in a laudatory way.

These comedies are clean and contain nothing more offensive than a lack of comedy fitness. The situations presented in them are not sufficiently funny, and we fear that they will prove disappointing to the general audience. The following is a brief sketch of the plot of each:

"By Orange Aid."

The story of this number deals with the attempt of a father and mother to interest their son in a girl who is to him uninteresting. The result is that when he sees a pretty girl in a booth at the San Bernardino fair he falls madly in love with her, and finally when by accident she gets work in his father's packing establishment he braves his parents' objections and becomes engaged to her. What comedy there is in the picture is extracted from the young man's attempts to escape the yoke which his parents would place upon him.

"Red Crossed."

This is the story of a competition between a man and his wife on the gathering of funds for patriotic purposes. A raid on a poker game which is being played by the husband and friends, by his wife and her comrades disguised as policemen provides an unconvincing bit of comedy in spite of the fact that the wife gathers enough money to cover the wager in payment for a promise of silence.

"All Dressed Up."

A request from a woman across the hall to a man in the opposite apartment to carry her new dress to the dressmaker's for alterations opens a more amusing situation than is met with in the other numbers. This for the reason that his wife's appearance on the scene at the moment causes him to make her a present of the dress to avoid arousing her suspicions. This opens the way for some amusing but still unconvincing moments.

"Betty's Adventure."

A young girl's craving for adventure is the basis of the comedy in this number. An opportunity which suggests itself to her upon reading of the mysterious disappearance of a certain countess whom she resembles causes her to impersonate her at a cabaret. Here she is accosted and seized by the husband of the countess, and is rescued by a young man who falls in love with her, thus creating a bit of romance for which she has longed.

Betty Compson, "Smiling Billy" Mason, Ethel Lynne, Bobby Vernon, Harry Edwards and Eleanor Field play the principal roles.

"SOCIETY FOR SALE."

William Desmond and Gloria Swanson in Light But Entertaining Triangle.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ENGLISH upper class is the brand referred to in "Society for Sale," a five-part Triangle picture taken from the story by Ruby M. Ayers, scenario by Charles J. Wilson. The plot is not at all complicated and merely skims the surface of things. It is entertaining, however, even if it does show a number of superior social beings in anything but an enviable light. There are too many subtitles used. At times the impression is given that the pictures are only put in as illustrations to a printed story. Careful direction and a generally capable cast presided over by Frank Borzage have accomplished a great deal in the picture's favor.

Phyllis Clyne, a manikin in a modiste's shop in London, learns that a gentleman known as the Honorable Billy has gone broke. Having saved up some money and being anxious to get into society, Phyllis goes to the Hon. William and offers him quite a neat sum if he will pretend that she is engaged to him. Billy consents, with the result that he falls in love with her. Phyllis, in spite of Billy's warning, persists in running about with Lord Sheldon, an elderly nobleman with a spicy reputation.

Just as Billy has made up his mind that he cannot live without Phyllis, he is led to suppose that she has eloped with Sheldon. The nobleman is killed in an auto accident, and Billy then learns the real reason for the girl's buying her way into society. Lord Sheldon was her father. Circumstances connected with her mother's lowly birth had kept father and daughter apart. A desire to know the truth about her father's reputation prompted Phyllis to act as she did. Satisfied that papa had acquired the name without the game, Phyllis is glad to admit to Billy that his love is returned with any amount of fervor.

Gloria Swanson, who used to be a Keystone comedy queen, plays Phyllis surprisingly well. She is comely to look at, knows how to act, and indicates an unexpected depth of real feeling. William Desmond is not at all suited to the part of the Hon. Billy, but goes about his work intelligently. Herbert Prior as Lord Sheldon, Charles Dorian as Furnival, Lillian West as Vi Challoner and Lillian Langdon as Lady Mary complete the cast. Pliny Horne was the photographer.

"AT THE MERCY OF MEN."

Alice Brady in Select Picture That Will Offend the Clean-Minded.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE only explanation for producing "At the Mercy of Men," a five-part Select Picture written by Paul West, was to give Alice Brady an opportunity to repeat the artistic success she made in "The Knife." The photoplay fails of its purpose. It is crudely put together, and its subject matter is of such a nature that it will offend every clean minded person.

A brief synopsis of the story will make it an easy task for an exhibitor to decide if "At the Mercy of Men" is the sort of picture that will appeal to his patrons: Vera Souroff, a young Russian girl, is seized on the street and dragged into a room where three officers of the Czar's guard have been dining. The lights are turned out and the girl is outraged. The crime is brought to the attention of the Czar. Vera cannot tell which of the three officers is the guilty man. The Czar orders Count Nicho, the eldest of the three officers, to marry the girl, and makes them all turn over their fortunes to her. They are then sent to prison. The revolution breaks out. Vera saves her husband at the risk of her own life, as she wishes to wring from him the name of the man that violated her. Nicho, now honestly in love with his wife, admits that he was her assaulter, and the couple clasp each other in a fervent embrace.

There are a number of elaborate mob scenes and the atmosphere of the different grades of Russian society is effectively reproduced. Alice Brady works conscientiously and puts real feeling into the part of Vera, but the inartistic manner in which the disagreeable situations are emphasized defeats her efforts. The quiet intensity of the Walter play was created by a master playwright. The only possible excuse for such a play is the skill shown in its making. Art ceases to be art when it strikes below the belt.

"LEAP TO FAME."

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in Lively World Melodrama.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

KEEP things moving is the watchword in "Leap to Fame," a five-part World picture written by Raymond Schreck and directed by Carlyle Blackwell. The story is rather indefinite, but Carlyle Blackwell, who plays the leading part, keeps all the characters on the jump, including himself, and persons who have neither the time nor the inclination to analyze plots and motives will find entertainment in the photoplay. The experiment of permitting the principal actor in a picture to direct the production is a doubtful one, however. Certain points are bound to be overlooked when the director is not where he belongs—in a position to see just what is being done in every scene.

Charles Trevor, the leading male role, is a young chap just out of college, who is put to work on a daily newspaper and at once starts to lead a life of adventure and romance. A German spy and a maiden in distress cross his path the first day and, before the end of the story, he has landed a big scoop for his paper, put the German in jail and married the girl. There are chases in automobiles, on motorcycles, on horseback and in motorboats, and the entire picture has the bustle and the atmosphere of a melodramatic serial.

As the hero, Carlyle Blackwell is always consistent to the type of all-conquering young gentlemen drawn by the author. He plays the part as if he enjoys doing so and gives an unaccustomed glow of romance to the otherwise humdrum newspaper office, where he is employed. Evelyn Greely as Dorothy offers sufficient excuse for the hero's devotion. Muriel Ostriche as Tootsie Brown, Alec B. Francis, Frank Reamish as a city editor, Philip Van Loan as Tony Figlio, Lionel Belmore as Carl Hoffman, William Bailey as Hoffman's servant, and Benny Nedell as Oscar do their share of the work with credit. The photographer was Lucien Tainguy.

"NINE-TENTHS OF THE LAW."

Atlantic Releases Six-Reel Subject Telling Strong Northwoods Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS six-reel number presents one of the most human and altogether touching stories that have come out of that paradise of the story teller—the Northwoods. It is so big and simple in its conception and so direct in its development that it will have almost universal appeal. Child interest, intense mother love, and stirring personal encounters between rugged men of the woods are features of the tale, which is pictured in a wild region in perfect keeping with the story.

Reaves Eason wrote and produced this remarkably entertaining subject, and also plays the part of "Red" Adair, the villain of the piece. Mitchell Lewis plays the honest-hearted trapper, Leneau, with Jimsey Maye appearing as the wife. But good as the work of the adult actors of the cast is, the honors of the production go to Little Roughneck, played by a child called "Breezy" Reeves. This little fellow is scarcely more than a baby, but he rises to the occasion in every scene, and this is a story which centers largely about him.

The plot, as was said, is simple, but effective. Leneau and his wife, who live in a cabin, lose their own baby early in the story. Red Adair and his partner have kidnapped Little Roughneck, who starts out alone while they are in a drunken orgy. The child wanders over to Leneau's place and falls into a bear trap, where he is found next morning. Leneau and his wife, still mourning for their own child, at first refuse to give him up or look for his family. Later, after Leneau has had mortal combat with the kidnappers, he learns that the Little Roughneck belongs to a judge living at Vancouver. He leaves his despondent wife to take the child back to the city. Then comes a surprise finish, which is too good to spoil by simply relating it. This is a feature that will make its way wherever shown.

"A MOTHER'S SECRET."

Bluebird Features Ella Hall and Mary Hirsch in Unusual Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

PERHAPS in her entire career as a screen actress Ella Hall has never had quite so good an opportunity to bring out her special characteristics as in this entertaining subject. It gives her the opportunity she has always wanted, that of playing both a little girl and a grown woman in the same photoplay. There is probably no one in the moving picture field who combines the two ages in one personality so strikingly. Ella Hall looks like a grown woman at times, but she has never left off being a little girl, a fact she abundantly proves in this number.

The story itself is an absorbing one. It was written by Lois Zellner, adapted by Doris Schroeder and directed by Douglas Gerard. In the course of the narrative Angela, the eighteen-year-old girl, appears suddenly before the mother who has not seen her for years. The mother at the time is making desperate efforts to retain her own youth and land her second husband, a young millionaire. Angela, by the result of an accident, is dressed as a child of thirteen when her mother sees her, and the mother makes her continue to play the role of a child to suit her own purposes. But in the end the truth comes out and Angela wins the young millionaire herself. But by this time the first husband, Angela's father, has shown up and her mother is accordingly happy.

This story is so natural and convincing that it deserves high praise, both for its very human plot and the manner of its presentation. Mary Hirsch does admirable character work in the part of the mother. Others in the cast are Emory Johnson, T. C. Crittenden, Mrs. L. C. Harris and Grace McLean.

The war episodes in France, at the beginning, are exceptionally well staged.

"LET'S GET A DIVORCE."

Paramount Presents Billy Burke in an Adaptation from Sardou's "Divorcons."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ONE of Sardou's most profitable productions, "Divorcons," affords just such comedy opportunity as would be naturally selected for Miss Burke, and her characterization is a delightful one, not at all marred by an injected act of preparation, depicting the romantic tendency of a young girl brought up in the restricted environment of a French convent. The Sardou play begins with this girl's life as the young wife of a man nearing forty, kind enough to his bride, but more or less absorbed in his serious work. She has dreamed of romantic love, intoxicating adventure, and tumultuous passions only to find none of these things in retirement with a good husband. She decided that her existence has been wrecked and ruined, and gets it into her foolish head that the only remedy is a divorce. There is a lover handy, her husband's cousin Adhemar, French in his ambition to have an "affair" with some charming married woman, and equally French in his thrift—he is a poor young man in no situation to marry any such extravagant young lady.

The clear-headed husband enters into a little conspiracy with some friends to let his bored young wife have her own way, ostensibly yielding to her wishes, and he even makes things as easy and comfortable as possible for the unsuspecting lover, inviting him to the house, and announcing that he has even provided for his wife's future by settling a large sum of money upon her. She sees that this settlement has weight with the lover, and begins to falter, but she goes on determinedly with what gradually loses all the charm of forbidden fruit. Her relations with Adhemar become more and more commonplace at a time when she begins to realize her husband's magnanimity. He has denied her nothing, and he gives Adhemar full permission to marry her as soon as the divorce is granted. Meanwhile she begins to be distressed by the fact that her husband seems to be enjoying himself, staying out late at night, and suspects that he has an "affair" with some woman "not worthy" of him. She revolts when he announces he has a dinner engagement, urges him to break it and have a little celebration with her and Adhemar, finally deciding to leave Adhemar out altogether. It would be such a lark to steal away from him and have dinner in a private room with her husband, so compromising.

The humor of the story lies entirely with Sardou, and the wit as well. Where his lines are not followed the subtitles are dreadfully out of the atmosphere of the product. This atmosphere is, however, admirably preserved in the last scene. Adhemar learns of the infidelity of his wife-to-be, and goes in search of her in a rainstorm. He is drenched when he finds the restaurant where she is dining alone with her husband in a private room contrary to what he conceives to be the rights of a husband-to-be, and he is so indignant that he seeks the protection of a Commissary of Police as a safeguard for his future marital rights. The situation now becomes ludicrous in the extreme, and it ends with restored sanity for the young wife, and a complete reconciliation with her husband. Miss Burke is supported by a fine cast, notably John Miltern, Armand Kalise, and Pina Nesbit.

"HER MISTAKE."

Evelyn Nesbit, the Star of Simple Love Story, Produced by Julius Steger.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is very little real drama in "Her Mistake," a photonovel produced by Julius Steger, with Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell, featured. The heroine is a country girl who marries a city chap and finds herself neglected after the novelty of the honeymoon has worn off. Ralph Van Court is lost while hunting in the Adirondacks, and is found by Rose Hale. The young man had been in love with Viola Shepard, but discovered that she intended to marry his uncle, Stephen Van Court, for the sake of his money. After the two marriages, Ralph starts a flirtation with Viola, and spends most of his time away from home. When his son is about five years of age, Ralph's attentions to his uncle's wife become so marked that every one is talking of the affair. The big situation comes when Viola meets Ralph at a road house, after consenting to run away with him. Stephen Van Court learns of the affair, and so does Rose. She reaches the private supper room before Stephen, and manages to make him believe that he has been misled about his wife's duplicity. Rose does this to shield the father of her boy, and Ralph is awakened to the true worth of his wife.

This simple love story is absolutely without thrills, but the character of Rose is a sympathetic one, and is admirably suited to the personality and acting ability of Evelyn Nesbit. In the earlier scenes she hardly looks an eighteen-year-old girl, but in the latter portion of the picture carries her share of the situations surprisingly well. Her son, Russell, is a real help to the picture.

Julius Steger has produced "Her Mistake" with good effect, and the mountain scenery is often beautiful. Eugene Strong, Lois Meredith, and Charles Wellsley are the prominent members of the support.

"THE WHITE MAN'S LAW."

Paramount Presents Sessue Hayakawa in Story of Unusual Dramatic Atmosphere.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

STRANGE selection that of a town and wild country on the northwest coast of Africa for the location of a drama, yet it is far from an uninteresting one in the capable hands of James Young. His treatment is so artistic that it gives the entire piece a combined air of realism and romance, realism in its convincing thoroughness of detail, and romantic in its impressively picturesque interiors and bits of scenery both suggestive and inspiring. This treatment stamps all that is strong in the drama upon memory, and aids materially in making Mr. Hayakawa's fine acting impressive.

There is also a fine cast, the notable support being that of Florence Vidor, but the story is simply that of misplaced confidence, that of deception practiced by a renegade Englishman of attractive personality and high social training upon characters more simple and true-hearted. He has left a wife behind him to retrieve lost fortunes and social position in the ivory trade where climatic conditions are such that the place, Sierra Leone, is known as "the white man's grave."

This renegade, before starting on an expedition to the unexplored interior, trifles with the affections of Maida Verne, a French Sudanese girl, who has been educated at the mission, and becomes something of a favorite with the English colony. She is engaged to the son of a native king, a young man modernized by an education at Oxford, but still retaining the best of native ideals. He is almost unnaturally magnanimous in stepping aside when he believes that Maida is to wed the Englishman, but he discovers that the latter has a wife living while the two are on the expedition returning from a successful search for ivory. The two men fight in a canoe, and the native is apparently drowned. The renegade escapes, but the native returns to their starting point in time to save Maida and execute terrible vengeance. There would be no objection to the dark mood of this story if it had direct significance, but that of its title and of its purpose is that good women are so rare in such places that the few who exist must be protected. That is a good motive in all times and places, and, as such, it deserves commendation, but its remote application seriously lessens the effect intended. As an offset the treatment leaves nothing to be desired.

GENERAL SHOWS FOUR SUBJECTS.

One Ebony Comedy with Negro Cast, Also an O. Henry and Two Clovers.

"Lost on Dress Parade."

THIS two-part comedy drama directed by Martin Justice is an interesting offering, and preserves well the spirit of the O. Henry story from which it is adapted. Towers Chandler, employed in an architect's office, disagrees with his employer over the plans for a villa. Out of his small salary he has saved one dollar a week, and starts out to have one "gentleman's evening." He rescues a shop girl who has hurt her ankle, and takes her to dinner. He cannot resist the temptation to pose as a wealthy idler, while she tells him she can only like a man who has a serious purpose in life.

The girl proves to be a millionaire's daughter who has started out looking for adventure. All finally ends happily when Chandler visits the millionaire's home, taking the villa plans along, and finds out the girl's identity, while she discovers that he is a worker and not an idler.

Evart Overton gives a good performance of the young architect, while Patsy Deforest's work as the girl is most convincing.

"The Wooing of Coffee Cake Kate."

This one-reel production is the first Clover comedy, a new brand on the General Film program, and it also signalizes the return of Bud Duncan, the comedian well known as one of the team of "Ham and Bud." It is a slapstick comedy, and has some amusing situations, but never rises above the average of pictures of this type. Playing opposite Bud is "Kewpie" Morgan, who is many times Bud's size, and makes a good foil for him. Dot Farley appears as Kate.

Kate runs a lunchroom, and has trouble with her customers. Bud and Kewpie arrive, and as they have no money they make love to her. She agrees to accept the first one to bring her a ring. Kewpie holds up a stage, while Bud finds a nickle, and wins a large amount in a gambling place. Bud wins out and gets Kate, but Kewpie, in a jealous rage, tells the sheriff that it was Bud who robbed the stage. Bud is led away, and is about to be hanged when the sheriff discovers that the money is confederate, and all ends satisfactorily. The scene in which Bud is being hanged, although treated in a comedy manner, will be considered unpleasant by many in the audience.

"Rip Roaring Rivals."

Of about the same general character as the preceding comedy is "Rip Roaring Rivals," enacted by the same cast. There are some laughs, and a rather good comedy fight between Bud and Kewpie.

The Lame Cow Saloon is terrorized by Bud, who is a three-gun man, and Kewpie, who is an expert knife thrower. The proprietor in desperation sends for Nifty Nell, a vampire (Dot Farley). Both fall in love with her, and finally fight it out with their respective weapons at a distance. After all of Bud's cartridges are used up and Kewpie has thrown his last knife they continue in hand-to-hand combat, and as both are about ready to quit from exhaustion a boy appears and tells Nifty Nell that her eight children are hungry and want her to come home. They forget their differences, and take their places in two coffins which an enterprising undertaker has provided.

"A Black Sherlock Holmes."

The main feature of this reel, the first Ebony comedy, also a new brand on the General Film program, is the fact that the cast is composed entirely of colored players. It is a burlesque on the Sherlock Holmes stories, and, while there are some amusing scenes, there is a tendency among all of the players to overact. Its strongest point is the novelty of the cast.

"THE DOCTOR AND THE WOMAN."

Lois Weber Production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's Story, "K," with Mildred Harris.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

FOUNDED on the novel, "K," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, "The Doctor and the Woman," follows the construction of the original, and moves along in the deliberate fashion of the usual printed story. Produced under the direction of Lois Weber the picture was bound to lose none of the human qualities of the Rinehart work, but something more is required if a mixed body of spectators is to have its attention held closely during the showing of a six-part screen story. Not until Doctor Wilson meets "K" is there any touch of real drama, and this situation is not reached until the picture is half over. The atmosphere of the operating room will not be pleasing to every one, and the big situation develops too slowly. The finish has the same fault. "The Doctor and the Woman" is another example of how the vividness of the screen occasionally proves too searching and betrays the weakness of a subject that the printed word has managed to conceal.

"K" was a success as a novel. It gets its title from the name adopted by a celebrated surgeon who invents a wonderful operation and then loses his nerve when a nurse tricks him into believing that he has stitched up three of his patients with bandages inside of them. His love for a young girl forces him to perform his famous operation on the man to whom she is engaged, and so reveal his identity. The girl discovers that her lover is unworthy, and "K" starts life over again with a wife to help him.

Mildred Harris as Sidney Page, the heroine, makes the character quite as lovable as the author intended. True Boardman as "K," Albert Roscoe as Doctor Wilson, Zella Caull as Carlotta, and Carl Miller as Joe Drummond are all excellent.

"WITH NEATNESS AND DISPATCH."

Bushman and Bayne Presented in Entertaining Romantic Farce for Metro.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

ENTIRELY different from their recent offerings and providing Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne with an excellent vehicle is "With Neatness and Dispatch," released by Metro on April 15 in five parts. It is an adaptation of a magazine story by Kenneth L. Roberts, and is a romantic farce, being almost a burlesque on modern romantic drama. There is a lot of clean comedy which gets many laughs, and Bushman's handling of a broad comedy role will be a pleasant surprise to his admirers. Altogether the picture provides good entertainment.

Mary Ames is caught while planning to elope, and locked in a room by Aunt Letitia. Her sister, Geraldine, plans to help her, and goes to her friend the police commissioner to borrow a criminal. Paul, the commissioner's nephew, sees her, and loses his heart. He decides to pose as the criminal to be near her. Everything works smoothly, Mary is released, and the elopement takes place; but just at that moment the chauffeur and ex-gardener, together with the real criminal whom Paul is impersonating, arrive, and attempt to rob the house. Of course, Paul subdues them, and saves the jewels. The commissioner and a number of policemen arrive on the scene, everything is explained, and ends happily with a second elopement a short time after.

Mr. Bushman as Paul and Beverly Bayne as Geraldine are both well cast, and together with Ricca Allen as Aunt Letitia and Adella Barker as the butleress provide most of the entertainment. The remainder of the cast, including Frank Currier as the commissioner, Hugh Jeffrey as police inspector, and Sylvia Arnold as Mary, are entirely satisfactory, and much credit should go to Will S. Davis for the admirable manner in which he has directed the production.

"THE HAND AT THE WINDOW."

Absorbing Triangle Detective Story Featuring Margery Wilson and Joe King.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

INTEREST in "The Hand at the Window," a five-part Triangle detective story written by John A. Morosco, is never permitted to slow down. The well contrived mystery which the author uses to such good purpose all through the photoplay will prevent any spectator from leaving his seat until he finds out who fired the shot through the window and why Miss Laura Bowers is able to pick locks with a hairpin.

The story gets away with a bang, as the wedding of Tony the Banker is rudely interrupted by Detective Moran and the bridegroom is dragged off to the station house. Tony is tried, convicted of counterfeiting and sent to prison. Moran becomes a police captain and, shortly afterward, runs up against the most baffling mystery of his career. Laura Bowers, a new boarder at the house where he lives, is the person that excites his curiosity. He sees her open a street door with a hairpin, but is forced to believe her when she assures him she is now leading an honest life.

A love affair follows. After the wedding the couple go to their own home and Moran is shot while seated at a window. Tony threatened to get even when Moran was married and the news is brought that the Italian has escaped from prison. The fact is also established that he was killed while trying to resist capture, but finger marks outside the window prove that he is implicated in the shooting of Moran. The explanations are cleverly planned.

Raymond Wells has directed the picture with skill, and Joe King, Margery Wilson, Francis McDonald, Irene Hunt, Aaron Edwards and Arthur Millett bring out the best points in their several characters. C. G. Peterson was the cameraman.

THE ACCUSING TOE.—This two-reel Judge Brown story is well told and has strong situations. Wharton Jones appears as a hard-hearted miller, who seeks to take an undue advantage to a widow's property; how he is thwarted in his designs as a result of the imprint of a boy's foot with the big toe wrapped up, is cleverly brought out. A full review was published in our last issue.

THE REBELLION.—Three boys who are chafing at parental discipline, run away finally land in court, and as an experiment are allowed to run their respective households for a week, form the basis of this two-reel Judge Brown story, which has interesting scenes, combined with humor and heart interest. ALL DRESSED UP (Christie).—This comedy, which will be found very amusing to some audiences, presents a situation created by a misappropriation of a dress which a young husband is requested by a woman across the hall to carry down town to her dressmaker's. At the moment when he is bidding her an over polite good morning his wife, who has been out of town, unexpectedly enters and is presented with the dress by the terrified husband, who pretends that the other woman is the dressmaker. BETTY'S ADVENTURE (Christie).—Betty Compson and Billy Mason play the leading roles in this comedy, which is moderately entertaining. In the cabaret she is confronted by the count, who tries to detain her and is rescued by a young man who falls in love with and marries her.

BY ORANGE AID (Christie).—A pleasing comedy of the lighter sort, some of the scenes of which have been taken at San Bernardino, Cal., during an orange exhibit. The picture shows a young man being persuaded by his parents to think kindly of a certain young woman against his will. In one of their outings he meets a pretty girl who afterward comes to work in his father's orange packing factory. Finally his parents are persuaded and he becomes betrothed to the girl, after many vicissitudes.

RED CROSSED (Christie), April 15.—A moderately entertaining comedy in which a young married couple compete in raising money for patriotic purposes. The husband, considerably ahead of his wife, is discovered by her playing poker with a group of friends. Billy Mason and Ethel Lynne are featured in this comedy, which is not very convincing.

It has much that is humorous and works up to an exciting climax, but is a bit too long. There is good action in most of it and it will make an excellent picture for a not too critical audience. Others will say that it is over melodramatic and not convincing enough. We have noticed it at length on another page of this issue.

MARY'S FRAME-UP (Strand), April 23.—Rather an amusing comedy, featuring Billie Rhodes. The story centers about a double love affair, which includes a widow and widower and a son and daughter of each. The parents to avoid having the young couple discover their flirtation plan to keep them apart temporarily, but by means of a frame-up, in which the young woman pretends to be drowning and the young man posing as a colored servant, rescues her, matters are straightened out.

HIS BUSY DAY (Pathe), April 28.—A two-reel comic number featuring Toto in his usual knockabout tricks. He is first seen flirting in a park, but later appears at a moving picture studio. He gets in trouble here and escapes dressed as a girl. He then invades the grounds of a dancing school, and later the winter quarters of a circus. There is an abundance of gymnastic actions in this and many of the situations are quite laughable.

KICKED OUT (Rolin-Pathe), May 5.—A laughable one-reel subject, featuring Harold Lloyd. He has trouble with his father and is ordered out of the house. He then becomes a waiter and pulls off some highly amusing stunts at a swell dinner party. This is a very funny subject.

IT'S A CRUEL WORLD (Nestor), April 29.—A comedy number of the knockabout, nonsensical type, by C. B. Hoadley. Wm. Franey, Gale Henry and others appear. This pictures the experience of a janitor who gets his package mixed up with one containing an infernal machine. The number is amusing and entertaining, though slight in plot.

FATHERS' SONS AND CHORUS GIRLS (L-KO), May 1.—A two-reel comic, featuring Dave Morris, Rube Miller and a company of girls. The latter occupy most of the scenes, clad in pajamas and bathing suits. There is no offense in the situations, but the humor is not at all strong. The burlesque on the Kaiser brings one of the few laughs. A fair subject.

THE BULL'S EYE (Universal Special), May 5.—This instalment, No. 13, continues the exciting desert experiences of the principals. There is much fighting between North and Cody for the possession of Cora. Cody rescues her finally, but they fall in with some Mexican desperadoes, who take the girl to Tendez, Mex. The number closes with Cora in peril as her friends are still suffering on the desert. There is considerable exaggeration in these latter scenes, but they are interesting in spite of this.

Foursquare Exchange Shares Profits.

Joseph Horwitz, Detroit manager for Foursquare, has a new arrangement with M. H. Hoffman, whereby he is given a half interest in the exchange, so that his profits depend entirely on his own ability to produce results. "It's a good move," said Mr. Hoffman to the World correspondent while en route to California, "because it gives a good man a chance to make more than he would ordinarily, and assures us of permanent, capable representatives in the different branch offices. A man on a profit-sharing plan is more apt to stay with a concern than he is where there is a specified salary."

Mr. Hoffman says the outlook for the independent distributor is better than ever.

An Hour of Dancing After the Show.

An innovation has been inaugurated by J. C. Ritter, Rialto theater, Detroit, by allowing dancing every Thursday night, from 11 to 12 P. M. in the foyer of his beautiful theater to those attending the last night show. It will be a regular attraction on Thursday nights.

New De Luxe Theater to Open in August

The new DeLuxe theater, Kercheval and Parkview avenues, Detroit, is slowly but surely nearing completion, but the opening will not take place before August 15. It will seat 1,600 and will represent a cash investment of about $230,000, including the property. F. A. Schneider is president and William H. Steffes, secretary.

Buffalo Notes of Interest.

Louis Greene, manager of the George Kleine System, Buffalo, and J. V. Allan, assistant manager, witnessed the opening performance of "The Unbeliever" at the Auditorium, Chicago, April 20. Mr. Greene is negotiating with two leading local houses for a two-weeks' run on this production. He says Essanay's "Chase Me, Charlie," with Charlie Chaplin, is going over big in the Buffalo territory. O. A. Siegel, formerly with the Metro, is now Mr. Greene's road man.

G. H. Christoffers, manager of the United Film Service, 86 Exchange street, Buffalo, has booked the feature, "Mother," for three days in each of these cities: Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and Utica.

"This appeals to me as the best screen feature released in five years," commented Mr. Christoffers.

The board of health of Dunkirk, N. Y., has ordered the local health officer and assistants to make a tour of inspection of the moving picture theaters there and investigate the sanitary conditions now existing. This does not mean that all the exhibitors of Dunkirk have failed to observe hygienic rules in the past. The health board has declared that the houses will be inspected every three months so that every one of them will be spic and span.

John R. Olshei, manager of the Teck theater, Buffalo, is making effective use of the Liberty Bond booth in the lobby of his house. At a recent Teck performance of the war film, "The Kaiser," Roderick H. Macgregor, an officer of the new 74th Regiment, this city, addressed the audience on the bond issue. Mr. Macgregor was in uniform.

Another theater has been built in Ohio to be operated without profit. This is the Acmy, at Brewster, Ohio, where are located the Wheeling and Lake Erie shops. This house was built by the railroad to provide entertainment for the folks there, so that they will be more contented to stay in that town. Mr. Stankowitz is the manager.

One of the features of the selling of Cleveland franchises is that many of the sales were made by exhibitor members themselves who were enthusiastic with the proposition.

KICKED OUT (Rolin-Pathe), May 5.—A laughable one-reel subject, featuring Harold Lloyd. He has trouble with his father and is ordered out of the house. He then becomes a waiter and pulls off some highly amusing stunts at a swell dinner party. This is a very funny subject.

POISONED DARTS (Pathe), May 5.—Episode No. 9 of "The House of Hate."—This is one of the most exciting episodes yet shown of this lively serial. Grimlisk, the shyster lawyer, has no sooner taken up his quarters in a new part of the city, than he is followed by the Hooded Terror. The latter kills him by shooting a poisoned dart through a blow pipe. Pearl and Gresham hasten to save the war plant from being blown up and encounter the Terror on the premises. The number closes with Pearl suspended over an acid vat.

CURRENT EVENTS No. 49 (Universal), April 13.—A large number of subjects are covered in this number, which includes American camp scenes, shipbuilding activities, a colored baptism in the Mississippi river, film flashes from Washington, Liberty Loan work, and others.

ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 20 (Universal), April 17.—Liberty Loan activities lead off this diversified number, which also includes speeches by John Purroy Mitchel and Secretary Daniels, American war-training scenes and cartoons by Hy Mayer.

IT'S A CRUEL WORLD (Nestor), April 29.—A comedy number of the knockabout, nonsensical type, by C. B. Hoadley. Wm. Franey, Gale Henry and others appear. This pictures the experience of a janitor who gets his package mixed up with one containing an infernal machine. The number is amusing and entertaining, though slight in plot.

FATHERS' SONS AND CHORUS GIRLS (L-KO), May 1.—A two-reel comic, featuring Dave Morris, Rube Miller and a company of girls. The latter occupy most of the scenes, clad in pajamas and bathing suits. There is no offense in the situations, but the humor is not at all strong. The burlesque on the Kaiser brings one of the few laughs. A fair subject.

THE BULL'S EYE (Universal Special), May 5.—This instalment, No. 13, continues the exciting desert experiences of the principals. There is much fighting between North and Cody for the possession of Cora. Cody rescues her finally, but they fall in with some Mexican desperadoes, who take the girl to Tendez, Mex. The number closes with Cora in peril as her friends are still suffering on the desert. There is considerable exaggeration in these latter scenes, but they are interesting in spite of this.

Foursquare Exchange Shares Profits.

Joseph Horwitz, Detroit manager for Foursquare, has a new arrangement with M. H. Hoffman, whereby he is given a half interest in the exchange, so that his profits depend entirely on his own ability to produce results. "It's a good move," said Mr. Hoffman to the World correspondent while en route to California, "because it gives a good man a chance to make more than he would ordinarily, and assures us of permanent, capable representatives in the different branch offices. A man on a profit-sharing plan is more apt to stay with a concern than he is where there is a specified salary."

Mr. Hoffman says the outlook for the independent distributor is better than ever.

An Hour of Dancing After the Show.

An innovation has been inaugurated by J. C. Ritter, Rialto theater, Detroit, by allowing dancing every Thursday night, from 11 to 12 P. M. in the foyer of his beautiful theater to those attending the last night show. It will be a regular attraction on Thursday nights.

New De Luxe Theater to Open in August

The new DeLuxe theater, Kercheval and Parkview avenues, Detroit, is slowly but surely nearing completion, but the opening will not take place before August 15. It will seat 1,600 and will represent a cash investment of about $230,000, including the property. F. A. Schneider is president and William H. Steffes, secretary.

Buffalo Notes of Interest.

Louis Greene, manager of the George Kleine System, Buffalo, and J. V. Allan, assistant manager, witnessed the opening performance of "The Unbeliever" at the Auditorium, Chicago, April 20. Mr. Greene is negotiating with two leading local houses for a two-weeks' run on this production. He says Essanay's "Chase Me, Charlie," with Charlie Chaplin, is going over big in the Buffalo territory. O. A. Siegel, formerly with the Metro, is now Mr. Greene's road man.

G. H. Christoffers, manager of the United Film Service, 86 Exchange street, Buffalo, has booked the feature, "Mother," for three days in each of these cities: Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and Utica.

"This appeals to me as the best screen feature released in five years," commented Mr. Christoffers.

The board of health of Dunkirk, N. Y., has ordered the local health officer and assistants to make a tour of inspection of the moving picture theaters there and investigate the sanitary conditions now existing. This does not mean that all the exhibitors of Dunkirk have failed to observe hygienic rules in the past. The health board has declared that the houses will be inspected every three months so that every one of them will be spic and span.

John R. Olshei, manager of the Teck theater, Buffalo, is making effective use of the Liberty Bond booth in the lobby of his house. At a recent Teck performance of the war film, "The Kaiser," Roderick H. Macgregor, an officer of the new 74th Regiment, this city, addressed the audience on the bond issue. Mr. Macgregor was in uniform.

"Kaiser" Hit in Ohio.

"The Kaiser" came to Ohio the week of April 7 and got a royal reception. It was shown at the Standard theater, Cleveland; the Bank, the Akron and the Liberty, at Youngstown. And when he received that smash on the nose there was another wonderful roar of approval.

Railroad Builds Free Picture Theater.

Another theater has been built in Ohio to be operated without profit. This is the Acmy, at Brewster, Ohio, where are located the Wheeling and Lake Erie shops. This house was built by the railroad to provide entertainment for the folks there, so that they will be more contented to stay in that town. Mr. Stankowitz is the manager.

One of the features of the selling of Cleveland franchises is that many of the sales were made by exhibitor members themselves who were enthusiastic with the proposition.

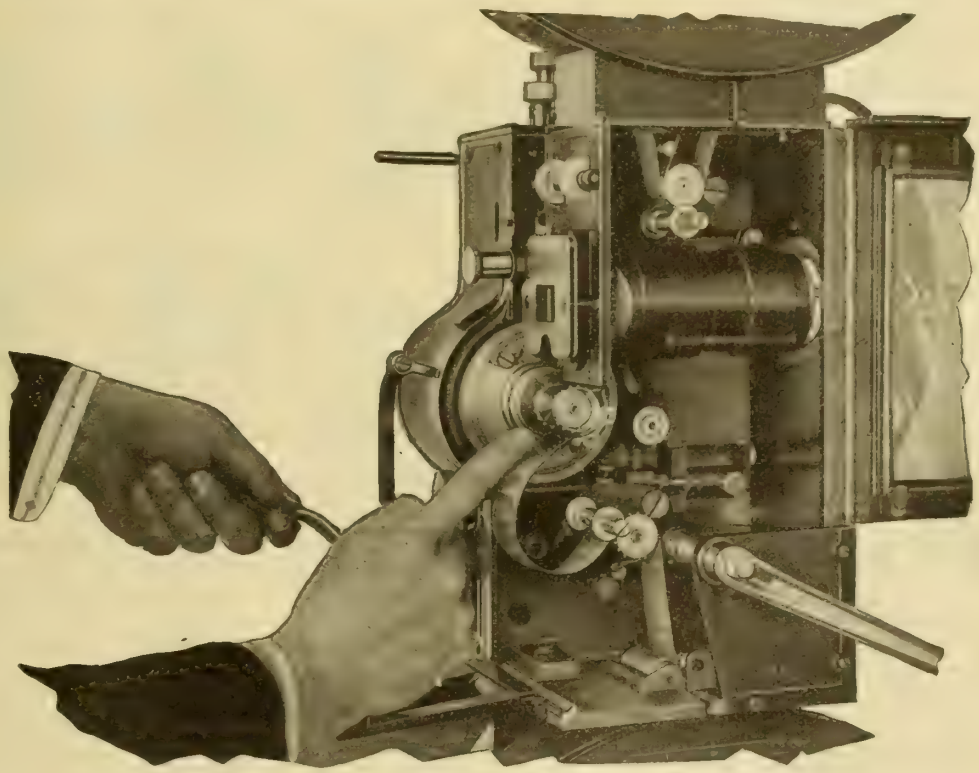
Simplex

You can't put it on

When you hear others tell of the steady picture the Simplex projects, don't imagine that this is a quality we've put onto the Machine, and that it will wear off.

No. Steadiness of picture is designed and built right into the Simplex. It's a quality that stays in; and that's why it is the Machine with Permanently Perfect Projection.



The idea is simply this:

The Intermittent Sprocket is very close to the Aperture—and it stays there.

This is so very important because the film is not made of a perfect material; it shrinks and undergoes changes that introduce inaccuracies. And the greater the distance between the Sprocket and the Aperture, the greater is the effect of these inaccuracies upon the position of each picture in the Aperture—upon the steadiness of the picture on the Screen.

And the Simplex is the only Projector (a patented feature) in which framing is accomplished by revolving the Intermittent Sprocket around its own center. Its distance from the Aperture does not increase in framing, but it sticks close by, and errors in the film are thereby kept off the Screen.

That isn't all. We frame the picture by turning the entire Intermittent Sprocket Oil Chamber; and your mechanical sense will tell you that such a round bearing can be made to move freely without the slightest perceptible looseness, whereas any movement in a straight line must be produced by mounting the parts loosely on rods or guides, without the possibility of a really close, shakeless fit.

There's no room here for other, less important reasons. What we have shown you will help you understand the sound mechanical reasons for the Simplex's unequaled steadiness of picture.

Designed-and-built-in qualities beat so-called "talking points" all hollow

"We've just got to win this war—you and I—"

War on Kaiserism WILL be won—but this rallying call to patriots—to you—must be heeded NOW if we are to extend the utmost help to our soldiers—in France. The Boys' Club Federation (non-sectarian) wants you as a partner in its work of developing the underprivileged, imperiled BOYS who are to back up the U. S. Government with the help it sorely needs. Already 121 clubs are at work in 86 cities—but we need more—and more. What will you do? Will you contribute to our work?

Commended by Government Officials

Boy delinquency has increased from 35% to 65% in Europe. The Boys' Club Federation operates to forestall this appalling condition in America. It gets at the root by specializing exclusively on the underprivileged boy of all ages and cooperates with the Government by recommending all boys over 16 to enroll in the U. S. Boys' Working Reserve, Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

"To make the boys of the Nation physically and morally fit is to fill the ranks of the producers for the present and future, and is specially deserving of the highest commendation. I extend my best wishes to the Boys' Club Federation in its patriotic efforts."
—HERBERT HOOVER,
U. S. Food Commissioner.

"This is truly Boy conservation and the Federation will indeed help the Nation in this present crisis."
WILLIAM B. WILSON,
U. S. Secretary of Labor.

Will YOU—NOW—send $1—or $5—or $25—or more, so that the work of organizing and developing of Clubs can go on? Address

There's No Finer Slogan Than This!

SOME exhibitors designate their houses as "The Place Where the Best Pictures Are Shown." Some advertise "We Always Have a Good Show." Others announce, "The Greatest Stars in the Greatest Pictures."

But those are colorless lines, indefinite, comparatively weak in selling value.

The 100% exhibitor is the man with the slogan that tells something, that guides the crowds to the pictures they want to see. He advertises

"I Show ALL the Paramount Pictures"

No wonder his profits are steadily increasing!

TRIANGLE

TRIANGE
Classified A-1

TRIANGLE is a torpedo aimed at the obstacles that stand in the way of the exhibitor in this year 1918.

The most efficient men in TRIANGLE—men especially picked and trained—have eliminated thousands of dollars of waste—sums of money that would give your adding machine brain fever.

We've fought and conquered that demon "WASTE" which stands at the door of your theatre stealing your profits. Our policy has been simply common sense backed with the ideals that have made a success of every business to which they have been applied since Hector was a pup.

Progress is often costly, and the Motion Picture Industry has paid a horrid price for her experiments. The tremendous shortage of good pictures at a fair price has brought about a demand for productions which $10,000 per week stars and enormous extravagance cannot supply.

Yesterday is a memory, this is 1918 with more working hours on the face of the clock than ever before. Honesty, good business methods and A No. 1 service are as necessary to the Motion Picture Industry as third line trenches and shock troops in modern warfare.

An honest blunder demands no excuse. The mistakes and losses of the past are in the discard—only the future counts. Don't let failure repeat itself.

TRIANGLE is a mighty force by which a new and better Motion Picture Service is being developed that is bound to help that theatre of yours CASH IN.

Hold the throttle—Watch the gauge and signals or there'll be a wreck, and you'll be in it.

There's an Exchangeman near you who can take the name of your Theatre and the letters TRIANGLE and spell SUCCESS with them. See him.

Goldwyn Pictures

IF WE ONLY OWNED YOUR THEATRE FOR A WEEK—

WE would want to put our enthusiasm and imagination behind the presentation of an unusual picture.

We would take MABEL NORMAND IN "JOAN OF PLATTSBURG," our newest and in many respects greatest Goldwyn Picture, and play it in your house.

We would start our musical program with "Keep the Home Fires Burning" for an overture and swing through this heart-thrilling story with patriotic music that would make every person in the audience feel that he was watching Gen. Pershing's victorious army marching triumphantly home to the music of Sousa's inspiring military bands.

There never has been a picture with such a grip on the emotions; that clutches at your heart and puts a mist before your eyes as does MABEL NORMAND IN "JOAN OF PLATTSBURG." Properly handled by resourceful showmen, it will pull audiences up in their seats cheering and shouting.

It IS a picture of Faith and Courage and Hope and Inspiration.

And at this very moment when millions of persons are perplexed and wondering, it contains the answer to the question asked by all loyal Americans: "What can I do to help my country?"

Every LIVE exhibitor with energy and imagination will clean up with Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," by Porter Emerson Browne. Released everywhere May 5.

LOS ANGELES VERDICT ON THIS REMARKABLE STORY.

LOS ANGELES TIMES: "Heart of the Sunset" has been the talk of the town all week. . . . A picture for human beings.

THE EVENING HERALD: Rex Beach did not lose his punch in switching from Alaska to Texas. "Heart of the Sunset" has kept a line standing outside Quinn's Rialto at every performance.

LOS ANGELES EXAMINER: "Heart of the Sunset" is a great production chock full of thrills. . . . Another Rex Beach hit.

LOS ANGELES TRIBUNE: This production has all the power that the public expects in a Rex Beach story.

LOS ANGELES RECORD: The one American author who always delivers a real story on the screen is Rex Beach. Further proof of this is found in "Heart of the Sunset."

$5.00 a Seat

Do you know that people are actually paying as high as $5.00 a seat, night in and night out, at the 44th Street Theatre, New York City, to see

D. W. Griffith's SUPREME

Not one night, not for one seat, but time and again patrons who were unable to secure tickets to see Mr. Griffith's masterpiece, have voluntarily paid as high as $5.00, the excessive price demanded for choice seats by ticket speculators and ticket brokers who realized in advance the wonderful success of "Hearts of the World."

All records in the history of the Motion Picture business have been shattered to smithereens by the sensational success of Mr. Griffith's great triumph. Greater success than even "The Birth of a Nation."

Box Office Statements Sworn to Before

READ THIS GLOWING PRAISE FROM NEW YORK CRITICS:

N. Y. World (Charles Darnton)

"Hearts of the World" is more than a picture play. It is a world drama—it goes straight to the hearts. It is this human quality that makes "Hearts of the World" as big as mankind.

N. Y. Tribune (Harriett Underhill)

New Griffith picture scores great success. Every character in the play is real. There was not a jarring note in the whole performance.

N. Y. Sun (Laurence Reamer)

"Hearts of the World" setting of a love story. Dramatizes war as memorably as Emile Zola's story, "The Attack on the Mill."

N. Y. Times

War vividly seen in Griffith film. A story that quickly stirs the emotions.

N. Y. American (Victor Watson)

"Hearts of the World" another Griffith triumph. A story more vital than "The Birth of a Nation." Last night's audience was spell-bound. It is a monster success.

N. Y. Globe (Louis Sherwin)

Griffith's latest a great picture. There is more thrill, more action, more fine photography, more beautiful scenes, more magnificent acting and more reality than you will get in a dozen so-called feature pictures.

N. Y. Telegram (R. G. Welch)

"Hearts of the World" is more than a masterpiece. It is an inspiration. Scenes of outdoor life that have the atmosphere of great painted canvases. Realistic to the last degree.

Propositions for certain State Rights of D. W. Griffith's supreme triumph, "Hearts of the World," will now be received and considered. Address all communications to Wm. Elliott, F. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest, Mgrs., Century Theatre, New York City.

United States Government Officials

SENSATIONAL SUCCESS DUPLICATED IN BOSTON:

Charles S. Howard, in the Boston Globe

"'Hearts of the World' amazing in art and realism. Quite beyond compare with any previous achievement of even the wizard who created 'The Birth of a Nation' and 'Intolerance.' More artistic photography, more action and thrill and more realism than has ever before been revealed."

Edward Harold Crosby, in the Boston Post

"When D. W. Griffith attempts anything he goes in for the stupendous. His 'Birth of a Nation' startled filmland with its magnitude and marvelous attention to detail. His 'Intolerance' brought into an evening's entertainment all the principal events in the world's history. And now comes 'Hearts of the World,' that in point of execution and vivid realism eclipses all his other efforts."

Forrest Izard, in the Boston Transcript

"'Hearts of the World' is the producer's vivid quality that reveals anew his remarkable power of vigorous, large-scale action. Mr. Griffith is of bold and sweeping imagination and in the execution of his designs he masterfully stops at nothing. The only acted scenes of the great war that carry adequately an impression of its awful vastness."

Katharine Wright, in the Boston Herald

"Griffith's film is a masterpiece. The grim vividness of battle is only one element in the picture. The story itself holds the attention of the audience. Every phase of the story has been elaborated and treated with the utmost significance. The acting throughout is of the best."

E. F. Harkins, in the Boston Advertiser

"Griffith scores triumph. 'Hearts of the World' holds audience at Majestic Theatre enthralled. Art and realism, perfection of detail. Audience cheered and applauded. At the end there was a furore of applause for the United States troops—the Rainbow Division—marching to the front. It was a remarkable night."

Fred J. McIsaac, in the Boston American

"Like former Griffith productions, this was mounted on a grand scale. A large orchestra performed a brilliant score. The march of the French army, war-worn and grim, to the tune of The Marseilles, drove the great audience frantic with enthusiasm. Contains a pulsating and never-to-be-forgotten love story and personal adventures of the most wonderful and thrilling character."

Townsend Walsh, in the Boston Traveler

"The Majestic Theatre was crowded to its utmost capacity. To say that the large audience was thrilled and inspired by this latest creation of David Wark Griffith is to feebly convey the impression made by a finely conceived and exceptionally wrought product of this genius of the film."

Propositions for certain State Rights of D. W. Griffith's supreme triumph, "Hearts of the World," will now be received and considered. Address all communications to Wm. Elliott, F. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest, Mgrs., Century Theatre, New York City.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD"

CHAOS The WAY OUT

LIKE the boom towns of the mining country, the motion picture industry is now paying the price of its "get-rich-quick" development.

The reaction has come. Chaos is rampant.

In the midst of this discord, a carefully built business plan has been launched, which offers definite relief to a depressed and harrassed industry. It is the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan—a plan which provides in place of—

Producer dominance born of greed, and fostered by selfishness— — — — →	Absolute independence of either producer or exhibitor control, and freedom to deal fairly with both.
Unprincipled business methods, inefficient management, and half-baked organizations of mushroom growth— — — →	Sound commercial principles and methods of proven success, administered by a recognized leader in the motion picture industry.
Lack of consistent quality in picture production — — — — — — — →	A continuous supply of consistently good product, because all the producer revenue goes into the making of pictures.
Diversion of Exhibitor's rightful profits →	A co-partnership plan which provides for the return to the Exhibitor of approximately 70% of the distributing profits.
Misuse of Exhibitor's deposits for the financing of production, and maintainance of extravagant exchange systems →	No deposits required from Exhibitor Co-partners.
Inflated capitalization of producing companies, resulting in unfair burden on the exhibitor— — — — — — — →	Conservative capitalization and no watered stock.
Exhibitor forced to endure strangling contracts and exorbitant rentals. Producer confronted with an indefinite and varying market— — — — — — →	Fair prices and equitable agreements for the Exhibitor. A definite and stable market for quality product.
Mutual distrust between Exhibitor and Producer, causing friction and resulting in lack of progress— — — — — →	An absolutely impartial position between these two factors, making for harmony, progress, and profit.

As one concerned with safeguarding your investment, you cannot afford to ignore the Hodkinson Plan. Let us tell you—in a detailed, confidential letter—just what protection and profit it guarantees you.

I was a little skeptical at first, owing to the fact that I will not play serials, in fact I have refused first run on the best that have been released, it took me but a short time to realize that the "Eagles Eye" was out of the serial class, in as much as each part is almost a complete story, so I accordingly booked it. The Right to Use the Name of Frohman

Mr. Daniel Frohman, in a letter sent to the Press and Trade Journals, has stated that neither he nor Charles Frohman was ever connected with The Frohman Amusement Corporation and that the name of Frohman was and is still being used without authority. We desire the trade and public should know—as we believe they do—that these gentlemen never were connected with this Corporation, and therefore are not entitled to credit for any of its success.

The statement, however, that the name was and is being used without authority has no foundation of fact, and Mr. Daniel Frohman must know it, as evidenced by the following excerpt from a contract made by and between Gustave Frohman, the oldest brother of Charles and Daniel (and who, I am informed, is responsible for their being in the theatrical business), and William L. Sherrill, viz.:

"This agreement made this tenth day of June, 1914, by and between Gustave Frohman, party of the first part, and William L. Sherrill, party of the second part,

"Witnesseth:—Party of the second part agrees that he will organize a corporation under the laws of Delaware which shall be named The Frohman Amusement Corporation.

"The party of the first part hereby authorizes the use of the name of Frohman in the corporate title of The Frohman Amusement Corporation, and agrees to act as president of said corporation for a period of at least ten years. IF HE IS SO ELECTED BY THE DIRECTORS.

"The party of the first part agrees that he will not actively be identified with any other company producing motion picture films during a period of ten years from the date thereof.

"Signed in duplicate on this 10th day of June, 1914, City of New York.

"(SIGNED) GUSTAVE FROHMAN, Party of the First Part.
WILLIAM L. SHERRILL, Party of the Second Part.

On January 13th, 1916, we purchased the stock holdings of Gustave Frohman. The success we had attained in building up the name of The Frohman Amusement Corporation with the trade justified our directors in not changing the corporate title.

TRADE ANNOUNCEMENT

To the Exhibitors of the United States and Canada

AT the Hotel Astor, April 8-9-10, representative exhibitors and producers met, discussed and considered the question of co-operative booking and distribution of pictures.

The undersigned were constituted a permanent committee of exhibitors to perfect a national organization of exhibitor booking associations, with these fundamental principles in mind:

1—To insure EXHIBITOR MANAGEMENT and CONTROL in very fact, as well as promise.

2—To in no way disturb existing booking organizations, but rather to encourage them.

3—To keep the capital of each association in its OWN depository, and under its OWN control.

4—To maintain all the benefits of "Open Booking," and at the same time provide a CONSISTENT and DEPENDABLE schedule of releases.

5—To secure, not only ALL the concessions in rental prices which the combined buying power of exhibitors will earn, but the MAJOR SHARE of all excess profits as well.

6—To distribute the cost of all productions on a fair and business basis to each booking association, and to every member of such an association.

7—To regulate expenditures, according to sound business methods and to protect exhibitors against excessive salaries, extravagant advertising and pretentious executive offices.

8—To arrange, on behalf of the booking associations, now existing, and such others as shall be formed, for an affiliation with a national, or central clearing house, upon terms that are JUST and EQUITABLE to all concerned.

In accordance with these principles, and in co-operation with substantial business interests, not heretofore associated with the film industry, the committee has perfected arrangements for an affiliation of exhibitors co-operative booking associations, for operation on a national scale, to be known as the AFFILIATED DISTRIBUTORS' CORPORATION.

The committee invites the co-operation of booking associations, now formed, in the furtherance of its efforts, and solicits the opportunity to work with exhibitors in territories not yet organized into booking associations. Exhibitor organizers are available without expense.

An announcement of the associations which have aligned themselves with this movement, together with further dtails of its operating plans, will be made next week. These plans will be found to be strictly constructive—not destructive.

Interested exhibitors would do well to preserve this, and subsequent announcements, as the advertising expenditure, like all other operating charges, will be limited, in keeping with the determination to conserve the profits of the organization FOR THE EXHIBITOR.

Facts and Comments

STATE conventions of exhibitor organizations are now in order. Some have already been held and more are scheduled. To begin with there should be a good attendance at these meetings; everybody should turn out and take an interest in the several trade subjects that are certain to be discussed. Just now exhibitors will hear a lot about co-operative booking schemes and at no place will those propositions be so thoroughly discussed as at the trade conventions. As these plans interest exhibitors most they should be present at the trade meetings to learn what is going on. It is the ignorance of numerous exhibitors on trade subjects that enables those who are trying to use the league for personal profit to exploit the organization to further their own money making plans. We mention this because at least one such emissary is already making the rounds of the conventions for that express purpose.

Then there is the annual convention at Boston to be considered, which event calls for the election of delegates who will vote at the election of officers of the National League for the ensuing year. It is exceedingly necessary that delegates to that convention be instructed to cast their votes for such men as will give their time to the affairs of the League and not to those who purpose to use the League to further their own interests. For the past two years the League has been particularly unfortunate in its choice of president. During that time there has been accomplished almost nothing of benefit to the organization and nothing has succeeded so well as dissension and opposition.

This state of affairs must be remedied before the National League will serve its members and the trade generally. The proper functions of trade organizations are well defined and the resources of such organizations should not be employed in the building up of comparatively private enterprises. The present administration of the League has promoted and is continuing to promote such enterprises, holding out promises of liberal returns on investments. So far none of the promises has been made good. This would indicate that the promoters were not only wrong in their policies, but that they were not good business men. What the League needs is a radical change of policy. The practice of trying to make money by dickering with side issues should be discontinued forthwith and the efforts of the organization concentrated upon its legitimate purpose.

We believe that there is a strong tendency to correct these mistakes; in fact, they will have to be corrected before a unification of the trade can be effected. New men are coming into the League and new methods are displacing the discredited ones, but little less than a clean sweep will suffice to place the organization upon its proper foundation. Boston will be the place to do the job.

OUR advertising columns this week announce the plans of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, an organization of exhibitors which proposes to institute co-operative booking. The announcement is signed by Sydney Cohen, Byron Park, Joseph Hopp, Louis Frank, Frank Rembusch, John Manheimer and King Perry. Charles C. Pettijohn is general counsel for the committee. This is the organization which grew out of the recent meeting of exhibitors at the Hotel Astor. One of the chief provisions of this organization is that each unit of the Affiliated Distributors shall control its own finances. Another principle is that of non-interference with existing booking organizations. Both of these declarations are commendable. There will be no expensive suites of offices or salaries to officers and other heavy overhead charges which pile up the cost of administration. Whether or not this organization succeeds in performing a distinctly valuable service to its members, it will not burden them with the expense of an unwieldy staff of employees; it will not disorganize the present trade organization and excite the antagonism of the existing producer and distributor. Whether it will be able to do all the other things claimed remains to be seen, but it will at least gratify the desire of the exhibitor to simplify his service.

The Expenseless "Ballyhoo"

By Edward Weitzel.

THE laws that govern the show business were recognized hundreds of years before the moving picture was invented, and the advent of the screen has not altered them in the slightest degree. They are as direct as the law of the straight line and will not change so long as human nature does not undergo a radical transformation. Men and women attend places of entertainment in a holiday mood, and are not entertained by that which they do not comprehend. If a considerable portion of the spectators at a moving picture theater fail to grasp the author's intent until the photoplay is half over and do not sympathize with the disposition he makes of his characters they are not going to like the picture or speak a good word for it to their friends—a method of "ballyhooing" that has the advantages of being unrivaled and without cost.

Highbrow critics may have acclaimed the story in novel or stage play and the man in the next seat may manifest delighted understanding of the entire screen drama, but none of these conditions is first aid to the patron of the perplexed mind. He's come to the theater to enjoy himself and is unable to do so because the author has written over his head. He doesn't understand the theme of the story and wouldn't care for it if he did.

Yet this man has a craving for clean and wholesome entertainment. All his best impulses can be stimulated by a grade of screen drama that excites only derision in certain superior persons. And all the erudite scolding in the world will not awaken his understanding of his interest in something better. He represents an important element among paying patrons and, until the photoplay has its little theaters where the mentally elect may traverse the higher walks of the drama, it is only good business sense to keep spectators of his ilk in mind when selecting subjects for the screen.

His expenseless "ballyhoo" is worth cultivating.

"Ballyhooing" and the Holiday Mood.

"Ballyhooing" is all right—if you deliver the goods. "Ballyhooing" put over "Tarzan of the Apes." It filled the theater on the opening night—and the picture made good. The circus method of exploitation suited this class of photoplay. The circus itself has been pursuing its flamboyant style of advertising since its birth and it still makes money. For years the biggest attraction with the P. T. Barnum show was Phineas himself, and it was his habit to deliver a "ballyhoo" from the ring that put all his three-sheet bills to the blush. There is a subtle connection between "ballyhooing" and the holiday mood with which people go to all forms of entertainment. It is, of course, necessary to adapt the style of the "ballyhoo" to the nature of the article being advertised, and highbrow methods must be used with highbrow attractions.

But it is all part of the game. The wise man knows that the circus will have nothing absolutely new to offer him in spite of the alluring promises on the billboards and in the daily press, but his eye is caught by the array of high-sounding adjectives. He follows the crowd inside the tent, admires the grace, skill and daring of the performance and—goes again the next year.

Skillful "ballyhooing" even has its use in trade paper advertising. The exhibitor is fully aware it is used to catch his eye and is not intended as a "flim-flam." Advertisers rely on their reputations for the effect of their "ballyhooing," and their cleverly devised pages belong to the holiday mood that is always attached to their wares.

The Personal "Ballyhoo."

The announcement that Joseph Arthur's celebrated melodrama, "The Still Alarm," has been put on the screen will recall the run of the play at the Fourteenth Street Theater, New York, about twenty years ago. The use of a real fire engine in the engine house scene was the theatrical sensation of the time. It may also be recalled that the play was owned by the author and by the star, Harry Lacy. Neither gentleman was averse to the personal "ballyhoo" and each managed to get his name on the program no less than seven times. One trembles to think what might have happened if the printer had reduced the repetitions of either of the names to six.

A celebrated piece of personal "ballyhooing" appeared two decades ago in the Detroit Free Press. At that time Robert Downing, now retired, started out as a star under the management of Joseph E. Mack, the latter fact being in evidence in every manner that the said Joseph E. could devise. Every bit of advertising, advance notice and program contained the information as often as it could possibly be crowded in. The morning following Downing's opening in Detroit the review of the performance, written by the veteran George P. Goodale of the Free Press, did not contain a sentence in which "under the management of Joseph E. Mack" was left out. For once, the manager's fondness for the personal "ballyhoo" was satisfied.

Exhibitors as Critics

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE exhibitor is beginning to express himself in no uncertain terms, striking straight out from the shoulder. He enjoys one great advantage, that of observing effects on the audience, but it is his audience, and its general make-up may depend very much upon the location of his theater. He naturally caters to those who support his place of entertainment, and he is quite as naturally influenced by one of two considerations, the drawing power of a name, or the staying power of the play, the first for that great uncertainty, the passing crowd, the second for that substantial support, the steady fan.

There are cases where "paper" counts more than product.

There are, however, no cases where a "good story" does not count in the end. It converts transient into permanent trade, sends satisfied customers out as so many advertising agents, and no exhibitor can reasonably expect great results from putting poor stuff over by billing alone. One crowded house may be significant as to the drawing power of a name, and a poor house to follow be the result of a performance of the day before not up to billboard promise.

But the exhibitor is bound to exert a big influence.

Whether or not his judgment is always correct, it has weight because it is founded on practical observation of results. Every good critic considers audience effect, but the effect on millions of people rather than those of any one locality. On this account he gives attention to "plausibility," "continuity of structure," "definiteness of purpose," discriminating between what satisfies and what offends in theme, form, treatment and interpretation.

It is no easy matter to see through a million eyes.

The summed-up opinion of several exhibitors may show that this or that play is a failure, but it rarely shows why. In not pointing out the causes of failure, the exhibitor may allow them to be repeated over and over again, to his own detriment and that of the producer as well. Once in a while, however, he digs beneath the surface and clearly states what people like and what they do not. Opinions may differ as to comedy and melodrama, even as to the general character of what is shown, but out of it all emerges more than one plain, hard, concrete judgment.

It is unanimous that audiences dislike repetition.

Only when the subject is vital and the treatment appropriate can people be induced to view the same play twice, though it is quite possible to give more than one showing of a popular subject for the benefit of those who did not "happen" to see it. It is so largely a case of "happen" that the best plays are sometimes missed and the poor ones seen by people would become steady patrons, hence the necessity of a steady flow of fine releases. These are very difficult to secure under present conditions.

Producers are obliged to exploit stars.

Exhibitors want the stars, but they want them in plays which suit the audience demand, not the star exaction. As long as the performer, not the people, must be suited, that long we will have plays that start out well, which exhibit the principal performer attractively for a while, but which peter out to nothing at the end from lack of true authorship. The studio writer cannot, because of the circumstances under which he works, supply very much original material. He is under pressure from all sides.

Exhibitors want stars in plays which can stand by themselves.

General criticism which comes from exhibitors is almost one on this subject. They want plays as well as stars, stories worked out by creative talent, sincere of purpose, treated with good taste, the whole effect welded out of all the elements of an entertaining story.

The Comedy Sense

By Robert C. McElravy.

THE desire to do something funny and make other people laugh is a thing that is apt to come to any one of us. Indeed, it is safe to say, we all have a try at it sooner or later, with varying degrees of achievement. But only a lucky few actually climb to fame on the ladder of comedy.

The comedy sense practically defies analysis, but there are certain things about it that may easily be understood. There is, we think, always a certain largeness of attitude on the part of a successful comedian toward the ordinary rules and regulations that we more timid mortals observe so carefully. Sidney Drew, for instance, pictures the faults of an erring husband in so human a way that the world, and even his wife, laughs and forgives him. Charlie Chaplin throws a pie into a crowded ball room and strikes the countenance of a king. He has visualized a universal yearning—we would all like to throw pies at a king, if not something of firmer texture. Again, consider Douglas Fairbanks: he was recently seized with a desire to get his picture into Vanity Fair. This was a commendable ambition, certainly, and has no doubt been tried in various way. But Mr. Fairbanks did not simply instruct his press representative to send in his photograph in the usual crass manner. Instead he went out and had his picture taken with a mule. The editor of Vanity Fair, at once impressed by the good looks of the mule, ran the double portrait!

The world is full of opportunities for the comedian, and people are always ready to laugh if one can make them. The attitude is something like that in the familiar story of the Maine audience, to whom a humorist once lectured for an hour and a half without getting a smile. He kept on for another half-hour and finally gave up. At the close of the lecture, much to his surprise, a man came up, shook hands with him, and said: "That was one of the best talks I ever listened to, Mr. Lecturer. If you'd went on for five or ten minutes longer, I don't think we could a-kept from laughing!"

The comedian never knows when he is going to strike his opportunity. He must keep on and on, thinking up funny things to do, until he finally gets it over. Charlie Chaplin stepped into fame almost by accident, as is pretty well known. He was an extra, "sitting on the bench" at one of the coast studios, when a director unexpectedly gave him a part. It was a subordinate role, but of course Chaplin had it in him, and walked away with the picture.

The history of the elder Sothern, as Lord Dundreary, is an instance of the accidental discovery of a humorous role. Sothern had already won recognition as an actor, in a sense, but his part as Dundreary was an inconspicuous one in the play called "Our American Cousin." He came on the stage, with his mincing step, and spoke his few lines in a way that made his auditors shake with laughter. So successful was his work that the play was afterward revised, and even named after Dundreary, which became the leading role.

The discovery of the comic sense in a performer is not to be based entirely on appearance, as might seem probable. An individual may be funny enough in facial appearance and yet lack the spark which excites mirth in an audience. On the other hand, an actor may have not the slightest peculiarity of appearance and yet turn up repeated shouts of laughter. But it happens perhaps most frequently that humorous looks and humorous methods are combined in the successful comedian.

Directors are always on the lookout for these rare beings. The only safe plan seems to be to try out all aspirants and judge them by the results obtained. The writer once knew a city editor in a certain Western city who hired every applicant for a job, if it was at all possible to stretch the pay roll to that extent. In this way he managed, from year to year, to sort out a lot of good talent of the reportorial kind, and always managed to get out an interesting newspaper.

Trying out new aspirants for fame often puts a number of noses out of joint around the studios, but it is an inevitable requirement of the business of making pictures. It calls for true humility on the part of an artist to step aside and give the other fellow a chance, but if he has a real hold upon the public he need have no fear of losing it. At any rate, he should never exhibit his fears, for the horse that looks around seldom wins the race. He had much better put on blinders and keep up his own pace to the best of his ability. The time comes when all good horses must be turned out to pasture, and if he is a sensible horse the grass will look just as green to him whether he won or lost. It is something at least to have been in the race!

Fame is a vampire at best. She gives you a Theda Bara smile early in youth; you saunter after her in a leisurely way and she quickens her pace; it gets to be a foot race and then an endurance test. When you catch up with her eventually and think she is yours and yours alone, she yawns, looks at her wrist watch and begins winking over your shoulder at some other handsome fellow. Fame herself has a sense of comedy!

Censorship Begins at Home

By Sam Spedon.

WE ARE apt to look upon those who in any way criticise motion pictures as hypersensitive, hypercritical and censorious. The fact of the matter is, we are too severe with our critics in the same way we consider them severe with us.

"Ah!" you will say, "the stage has been through the same fire of criticism as the pictures." That is true, with this difference: The pictures have been adopted by the people into their home and family affairs, they have been made part of their social life and are discussed by the families who patronize them, from the youngest to the oldest members. The motion picture theaters are neighborhood, community affairs, as much so as the public libraries, and have superseded the old time spelling-bees and other local functions of social life. They are looked upon as the modernized, the popularized lyceum and platform. For these reasons the people are anxious that they live long and prosper. They are, therefore, zealous to safeguard them from contaminations that might lessen their popularity and power for good.

Stage performances are patronized almost entirely by adults, who exercise a censorship of the plays for the balance of the family, and if at all questionable prevent the attendance of the younger members. The stage is open to criticism. Invites it and can stand it.

It is a foregone conclusion that the pictures cannot stand adverse criticism and they cannot afford to hold themselves open to it.

We repeat: they are largely a family institution and built upon that foundation. We must, therefore, take every precautionary measure to keep them free from taint and try to preserve the high standards that are set for them and those who are engaged in their creation.

Motion pictures have nothing to answer for; they do not create themselves. They are not responsible for the producer nor for the man who shows them. The pictures are no more responsible for their offenses than children are for the sins of their parents. The producer who makes a risque, a salacious picture and the exhibitor who shows it should be held to a strict accounting to the industry and ousted from it. The slogan of the industry should be: "Let no guilty man escape." We don't want to preach, but we of the industry, and that means producers, exhibitors, actors and everybody else in it, can stand a little preaching now and then, lest we forget.

Betwixt and Between

By Sam Spedon.

THE producers and exhibitors are certainly doing their bit and giving their "bits" to aid the government in helping those "over there" to win the battle for universal democracy and peace. Everything else in the motion picture industry seems to be secondary to that object. Incidentally, some of the "Boston Boosters" have been in town to line up a few more buyers of square footage for the big exposition during the week of July 13, and we heard that they were talking the get-together possibilities of the A. E. A. and the National League at the convention, which is to be held in conjunction with the exposition. That reminds us that we heard the name of Ernest Horstmann mentioned as a presidential possibility to succeed Lee Ochs.

It Looks That Way.

Judging from the recent convention held at the Hotel Astor, New York City, by the exhibitors interested in the Producers to Exhibitors Affiliated plan and the more recent convention of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, we are led to believe that in the near future the producers will produce and the exhibitors will be doing the buying and the distributing.

Wonder if She Is?

It is rumored, upon very good authority, that Norma Talmadge has closed negotiations with the First National Exhibitors Circuit to produce a certain number of pictures for that organization, to be released exclusively under its management.

It Can Be Done—Sometimes.

A short time ago we attended a theater in New Jersey where they charge twenty-five cents admission every night for an eight-reel show. There are two theaters in the town, which is sometimes called a city. One of them is not very modern, but it only goes to show that the public in some places will pay a quarter for the right kind of pictures and the right kind of surroundings.

First Hand Criticism.

The Central Park Theater of Chicago is equipped throughout with dictaphones. They are under the seats, in the lobby and other places in the building. These connect with the manager's office where he hears the criticisms of his patrons. In this way he gets thorough and first-hand criticisms by those who attend his showings.

Fellow Travellers.

Last week we ran into a delegation of the Allied Amusement Association of Chicago, who were in New York City, as Joe Hopp said, to look after a few business matters of more or less importance. Before we got through talking with Joe, we met Louis Frank, Wm. S. Heaney, Henry Corbett and Sam Atkinson. They all returned to Chicago with the intention of stopping over a day at Detroit in company with Charles C. Pettijohn, who was on his way to attend the A. E. A. meeting at Detroit on April 25.

EDWARD WARREN COMPANY RETURNS.

Edward Warren, of the Edward Warren Productions, Inc., has just returned from Asheville, N. C., where he has been photographing the exterior scenes of his latest state right feature. Mr. Warren was accompanied by the principal actors in this production, which include his two stars, House Peters and Miss Anna Lehr; also Miss Corene Uzzell, Henry Sedley, Wilfred Lytell, Dale Hanshaw, Frank Lang and his cameraman, Edward C. Earle.

BOY BORN TO MR. AND MRS. T. E. LARSEN.

President and General Manager Larsen of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Oklahoma recently sent a telegram to the First National headquarters announcing the arrival of T. E. Larsen, Jr., at Los Angeles. He weighed eight pounds. To acquire something new and different is the policy of the First National Circuit, and we hope that the difference between Junior and his dad will be in the line of increase in good gifts rather than marking out a change of kind.

PATHE SERVICE FLAG HAS 2,080 STARS.

There are 2,080 stars in the Pathe service flag. More than 2,000 French, English and Italian employes of Pathe have served in the ranks of the Allies. More than 200 died on the battlefields.

More than 500 have been decorated for bravery.

A large number have been wounded, released from service and returned to their positions with the Etablissements Pathe Freres. More than eighty men have responded to the call to the colors in the United States.

Film Trade a Great Help to Loan

Many Patriotic Shows are Held and Many Bonds Sold by Moving Picture Men and Women

The Work Goes on in Boston.

A TREMENDOUS work has been done by the New England moving picture exhibitors towards the success of the third Liberty Loan drive. They opened their houses to local committees for Liberty Loan days; they used their screens for propaganda at every performance; they gave parts of their performance to speakers to urge people to buy bonds, and they subscribed generously out of their own funds for bonds.

Among the other screen stars who were mentioned last week Miss Emmy Wehlen spoke at Fenway Park, at Boston Common and at the Park theater. She was received everywhere with enthusiasm.

Metro Stars Sell Many Bonds.

Ten millions of dollars have been added to the coffers of Uncle Sam for the third Liberty Loan by Metro Pictures Corporation. Of these five millions were secured by the Metro star, Emmy Wehlen, in her whirlwind tour of eastern cities when she "took the stump," in speeches and songs, in behalf of the loan.

Much Activity for Cause in Newark.

Newark has been visited by scores of motion picture stars in behalf of the Liberty Loan. Wherever they appeared enthusiastic receptions greeted them, and large bond sales were recorded. On April 24 Leah Baird, Betty Howe and Sheldon Lewis sold bonds at the Hahne store. Tyrone Power appeared also at the Hahne store on April 26 and met with success in selling bonds.

Bobby and Dorothy Connelly were at the Bamberger store April 26.

Manager Kridel of the Goodwin theater will devote the entire receipts of the week's run of "My Four Years in Germany" to the purchase of Liberty Bonds. The film will be exhibited during the week of April 28.

During the week of April 22 different nights were designated as Liberty Loan nights at the theaters, and most of them took the Moving Picture World's suggestion of showing some patriotic film, together with special Four-Minute Men. A total of $58,500 was subscribed Wednesday, April 25, at Proctor's Palace theater.

Rita Jolivet Stirs Baltimore.

On Sunday night, April 21, a patriotic entertainment was arranged at the Garden theater, Lexington street, at Park avenue, by L. A. De Hoff to make a drive for the Liberty Loan campaign. Special invitations were sent out to film men of Baltimore by the entertainment committee, which included: S. M. Flax, manager of Washington Metro office; Arthur B. Price, Baltimore Metro representative, and L. A. De Hoff. A splendid crowd gathered to witness Metro's "My Own United States" and to subscribe $5,000.

On this same night seven other theaters arranged attractive programs in the interest of the third Liberty Loan. Those included: The Blue Bell, William Emerich, manager; the Bridge, Louis Schlichter, manager; the Crown, Nat Keene, manager; Fairyland, Garden theater, W. C. Pacey, manager; the Hampden, C. A. Hicks, manager; West End theater, Paul Emmart, manager.

At Loew's Hippodrome theater during the week of April 22 it was just one big Liberty Loan drive, for Manager George A. McDermitt arranged for the personal appearance of Rita Jolivet in conjunction with the forcefully patriotic film play, "Lest We Forget." She made so strong a plea that $305,250 was subscribed to the loan.

High Scores in Philadelphia.

High scores were reached by the following exhibitors, who greatly aided with the sales of Liberty Bonds during the week of April 22: Jules Mastbaum, Stanley; Frank W. Buhler, Victoria; Alexander Boyd, Arcadia; Herbert Effinger, Strand; Columbus Stamper, Coliseum; Fred Felt, Locust; Fred Nixon Nirdlinger, Nixon; Earle Fort, Sherwood; Albert Brown, Overbrook; Wayne Palace; Atwood & Matthews, Globe, Vineland, N. J.; Ben Shindler, Ridge Avenue; J. Wolf, Empress; J. Murphy, Family; L. Miller, Amusement Parlor; Jack Rosenthal, Model; George Ames, Pathe, and Judge J. O'Donnell.

Buffalo Theaters Still Driving On.

Buffalo theaters are more than holding their own in the third Liberty Loan. At Shea's, at one evening performance, the total was $273,150.

Cincinnati Shows Its Patriotic Metal.

Aside from contributing time to Four-Minute Men and space on their screens to slides urging subscriptions to the third Liberty Loan, moving picture theaters and moving picture men in and around Cincinnati have, as usual, been doing their full share of the work which has resulted in Cincinnati going "over the top" before half of the time allotted for the campaign was over. The Orpheum theater subscribed $2,000, other leading houses also taking substantial sums. McMahan & Jackson took $1,000 worth of the bonds, and Mr. McMahan is besides one of the leading solicitors for the loan. At Milford, near Cincinnati, the Family theater was turned over to the authorities in charge of the loan as the scene of a rally to open the campaign, a free moving picture program being shown.

Little Madge Evans Does Her Bit.

Charming little Madge Evans, the kiddie star in World Pictures, recently hung up a record in Atlanta, Georgia, for Liberty Bond sales which is a mighty high mark.

Madge, with her director, Frank Crane, and a company of players, went to Atlanta to film exteriors for a picture. The Atlanta papers seized upon Madge's arrival as a big news event, and the Atlanta people turned her visit into a real triumph. When Madge appeared on the streets in an automobile and began selling Liberty Bonds there was a near riot to buy; so much so, in fact, that Camp Gordon authorities assigned a guard of soldiers to accompany her on further sales trips.

Louisville Theaters Get Full Credit.

Louisville moving picture theaters are given full credit for the fine work they did in preparing the way for the third Liberty Loan, which was oversubscribed by more than $3,000,000 inside of a three-day campaign in Louisville.

Detroit's Alhambra's Big Patriotic Night.

The Alhambra theater, Detroit, held a typical Liberty Loan demonstration last Wednesday night, April 17. Detroit's own Liberty band of 100 pieces marched into the theater in a body and played patriotic numbers from the stage. William O'Mara addressed the crowded theater. More than $15,000 was raised. Charles H. Darrell, manager of the Alhambra, arranged the Liberty Loan demonstration to assist the Northern High School in its race for bond sale supremacy among the high schools of the city.

Flying A Builds Tank for Los Angeles Parade.

The secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Santa Barbara has written a personal letter of congratulation to Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, at Chicago, to express the appreciation of that body for the assistance of the American Film Company in preparing for the big demonstration attendant on the Santa Barbara opening of the third Liberty Loan drive.

"The wonderful war tank built at your studio is admittedly the best piece of work in the way of a float ever turned out at a local plant," he wrote.

Margarita Fisher and Mary Miles Minter, American Film Company stars, devoted a part of each day to talking for the Liberty Loan, and were instrumental in the sales of thousands of dollars worth.

Hayakawa Sells Eighty-two Bonds in Thirty Minutes.

Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese actor, sold $4,100 worth of Liberty Bonds from a stand in front of the Bank of Italy, at Seventh and Broadway, Los Angeles, on the first day of the big drive. The bonds—eighty-two in all—were of the $50 denomination, and they were disposed of in exactly thirty minutes.

What Bill Hart Said in Spokane.

Appearing in his full cowboy regalia as seen in the pictures William S. Hart was greeted by capacity audiences in Spokane while on his Liberty Loan campaign speaking tour when he spent Thursday, April 18, in the city. More than 4,000 persons greeted him at his armory meeting at night, where $52,800 was raised; while thousands more were turned away, although all who could hang to window casings and stand inside of the big armory did so. Still others crowded to the fire-escape.

"Bill" was met at the train by the Liberty Loan Campaign Committee, headed by George P. Hardgrove, in the morning, and when he entered the hall of the Doges at the Davenport at noon fully 400 persons were crowded there. When he appeared everybody stood and gave cheers and yelled "Hurray for Bill Hart."

He may not be considered an orator, but there is much punch in his talk. That he was physically fit was demonstrated by the fact that he shook hands with more than 3,000 persons during the day, and he told your correspondent he had shaken hands with 8,000 others before reaching Spokane.

Announcement was made that Mr. Hart had just invested $105,000 in third Liberty Loan Bonds.

The player was again cheered as he stood to speak, also at the close, and in his address said:

"Brother and sister Americans, I would be a wooden Indian if such a reception as this did not get to me. I just play hero parts, that's all. I am nothing but a motion picture actor, and put paint on my face to make a living.

"Every American has got to say we have got to win this war. We have got to take the toot out of Teuton with the toe of Uncle Sam's boot, and he can kick just as hard with the left one as with the right one.

"We don't want any German-made peace, for that would mean slavery, and if we are to be slaves we will be dead slaves.

"We have the greatest country under the sun of heaven. Here poverty is no disgrace, and charity never grows cold. If you have money invest it in bonds instead of a corporation. Which is more likely to bust, the corporation or the United States? If you have a $100 bill in your trunk invest it in a bond and put that in your trunk and you will get 4¼ per cent. interest. I have put every nickel I have into bonds. If a man who won't buy has money we will take care of him. I am not a religious man, but my mother used to take me by her knees, hear me say my prayers and tuck me to bed. If I ever get to heaven I would be afraid not to have bought bonds for fear God would say, 'Here, you had money and did not buy bonds. Go down below!' I want to beg and plead with every one of you to buy, buy and buy until it hurts like hell!"

Mr. Hart was cheered at intervals throughout his speech at the armory, and signed his name to cards of subscribers, which were returned to them. Those subscribing for $200 or more are to get autographed photographed pictures of Hart.

Bill Hart Makes Stirring Wind-Up

Artcraft Favorite in Tour of West Sells Two Millions in Bonds and Makes Fifty-one Speeches.

San Francisco, April 26.

WILLIAM S. HART closed his Liberty Loan speaking tour of the Pacific Coast here last night. Allen L. Chickering, director of the Speakers' Bureau for the Twelfth Federal Reserve District, said this morning that the tour has been successful beyond all expectations. The motion picture Bad Man has spoken in nineteen cities in ten days to 155,000 persons and has collected $2,000,000 worth of subscriptions from the platform and by the use of autographed photographs. During these ten days Hart has made fifty-one speeches in addition to a visit to Camp Kearny, Camp Lewis and Fort Rosecrans. In many places Hart was mobbed by his admirers, buttons were torn from his clothing, his red 'kerchief was split into ribbons for souvenirs and the police had to rescue him from his friends.

A special squad of police was called last night to keep the big Auditorium crowd back while Hart made a hurried exit to his autmobile. Hart shows the strain of his arduous work and will leave San Francisco tomorrow for a rest in Southern California.

"I have enlisted for the war and whenever Uncle Sam wants my money or my services he can have them both," said Hart this morning. He added $10,000 to his subscription this morning, making his total investment for the Third Loan $115,000.

TWO METRO PLAYERS CONTRIBUTE TO WORK.

Arnold Daly, star in the Screen Classic patriotic production, "My Own United States," released by Metro, by his good work in the picture has been the means of inducing many young men to enlist in the navy, as letters received by Mr. Daly from these boys show.

Christine Mayo, Metro's popular "vamp," now playing in "The House of Mirth," is another Liberty Loan worker. This is her second experience along these lines as she toured the country for the Government for the first Liberty drive. Miss Mayo says that if she could be as successful selling merchandise as she is bonds she would give up acting and become a millionairess.

SPOKANE PUTS THE KAISER ON A FLOAT.

One of the most attractive floats in the Third Liberty Loan parade in Spokane, Wash., Saturday, April 6, was that of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation. It represented the American flag raised over the palace of the Kaiser in Berlin, and in front of it the Kaiser in captivity under guard of regular United States soldiers who were loaned for the occasion by Fort George Wright. Lone Star Dietz was well made up to represent the Kaiser but did not try any of his famous football tactics to escape the soldiers. The float was designed by C. J. Ward, general manager, and Larry Trimble, director of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation.

Fox Defends Costume of Cleopatra

In Address in Chicago Manufacturer Says to Have Ignored Historical Data Would Have Made Picture Ridiculous.

WILLIAM FOX is back at the company's home offices after a two weeks' business trip to the Middle West, which included visits to the Fox exchanges in Chicago, Indianapolis and Cincinnati.

Mr. Fox left New York on April 10. While in Chicago he was among the celebrities present at the Press Club at a dinner given in honor of Raymond Hitchcock, the actor-manager. Mr. Fox had been ill in the Windy City, but he made a special effort to be present to reciprocate for the compliment Mr. Hitchcock paid him in the latter's speech at the recent testimonial dinner given for Mr. Fox.

In his address at the Press Club, Mr. Fox spoke of the censorship problem in Chicago, which has long been a bone of contention between the local authorities and the producers. Mr. Fox vigorously defended the costuming in his production of "Cleopatra," on the grounds chiefly of historical accuracy. He pointed out that to have ignored the data which has come down through the centuries on the costumes and the customs of Cleopatra's time would have made the picture ridiculous and of no historical value.

"I have always opposed censorship of the kind that would deprive the screen—meaning the public—of the worth-while, artistic photoplay," Mr. Fox said. "I cannot understand any logical reason for the condition that has obtained under which such films may be exhibited everywhere except in a particular section of the West, where there has been nothing short of dictation as to the type of motion picture that the people can see.

"In practically every civilized city of the world this authentic version of Cleopatra has been shown and received with acclaim."

Mr. Fox told of the difficulties which confronted his organization in having the picture exhibited in Chicago. The city's Corporation Counsel recently overruled Major Funkhouser, the censor, and gave the film a white permit. At the dinner Mr. Fox was introduced as a "great civic and philanthropic leader of New York City and a man who personally contributed $40,000 to a single charity and who has risked millions of dollars on his opinion of what the public wants in pictures."

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Kansas League Meets at McPherson

.xhibitors Elect New Officers, Plan for National Convention in Boston and Lay Out Work for Next Six Months.

THE annual convention of the Kansas branch of the Nation Exhibitors' League of America was informally opened by C. E. Oelrich, of McPherson, at a smoker eld at the Union Hotel, McPherson, the evening of April 2. At this meeting were all the exhibitors attending the onvention, the exchangemen from Kansas City, and city fficials of McPherson.

After a first preliminary business meeting on the day fol-owing, the convention was called to order by C. E. Oelrich, cting chairman.

In the afternoon, realizing his efforts to further the in-erests of the league, the members made Mr. Oelrich their nanimous choice for the presidency. The new president s the city editor of the McPherson Republican, and operates he Toumey theater of McPherson in connection with his ewspaper work. He is a young man and an up-to-date xhibitor, well liked, admired, and respected by both ex-ibitors and exchangemen. He succeeds Chris Glaman, of Vellington, who has been president of the organization for he last year and a half.

R. W. Holmes, of Emporia, was unanimously elected vice resident of the organization. He is one of that genial type f men that make a success in business and at the same ime acquire a host of friends.

Harry Kiefer, of Salina, was unanimously selected for ecretary to succeed Charles Barron, of Augusta. Mr. Kie-er is a businessman of his city as well as an exhibitor and, ke the newly-elected president, is one of his city's leading itizens. Mr. Barron, assisted by his wife, has held the ffice for several years, and would have liked to continue as uch, but added work in the moving picture business has put im into a position where he would be unable to do justice o the place.

William Meyns, of Kansas City, was re-elected treasurer. The position of sergeant-at-arms fell to the lot of Fred avage, of Hutchinson, who has always been regular in his ttendance of the league conventions and is an "old-timer" n the business.

Plan to Have a Paid Field Man.

Mr. Oelrich then outlined a plan to put a field man into he territory to get new men for the league, and to transact he business of the league with its own members. This vould crystalize the now existing interest in the organiza-ion and stimulate interest among the dormant members. Ie would secure co-operation among the exhibitors in the eague and make it a thing of actual benefit to the members nd not merely an organization taking action only when ne member is threatened with trouble of any kind. This ield man would be either one outside of the league to be aid on a commission basis according to the number of ew members secured, or he may be a member of the league working on the same basis, the expenses being paid by the league. It was at first suggested that one man handle the entire state, but a suggestion that the state be divided, different portions being given to the one man, and others to a second. This was put in the form of a motion, which motion passed on the first vote.

The next proposition taken up was the publication of a monthly paper to be distributed to all members of the league. It was decided that a monthly paper or pamphlet will be got out, at McPherson, and mailed to the members of the league, the publication being edited by Mr. Oelrich. Through his newspaper connection the league is fortunate in having such easy facilities for the issuing of such a paper. Contributions will be received from the exhibitors about the state, and it is planned to secure the help of the trade journals to put the paper on as a "regular film paper." It will contain news of the exhibitors, cuts of these men and their houses, snappy editorials, and such material as are contributed by outside interests. It will be supported by advertising, which will be handled by the editor.

Newspaper Publicity in Kansas.

Another plan, although not in the form of a motion, was considered and will undoubtedly help the organization. This is to get newspaper publicity, which the league of this state and very few others have ever had. The work of the branch will be published in at least 60 per cent. of the papers of the state. This can be accomplished through the relations of the new president with those papers through his newspaper connections. The acquisition of new members, the leaving of others for war or for other reasons, dates and places of conventions, and similar notices and announcements will be given this publicity.

A letter of appreciation for services rendered was suggested as a means for expressing the thanks of the members of the league to the retiring president, Mr. Glaman. A motion to that effect passed immediately, as did a motion that he be made an honorary life member of the organization.

A motion was passed to the effect that all members called to war should be made honorary members for the duration of the war and that on their return upon entering the moving picture business they would again become active members without the payment of additional fees for entrance or initiation.

It was decided that the president should have the power to appoint delegates to the national convention at Boston in July. The appointment was not to be made until the president had communicated with the president of the national organization and had ascertained the full particulars.

The meeting then developed into a free-for-all discussion of the benefits of the national organization to the local branch, and had the national officers been present they would have felt truly gratified in the confidence in and appreciation of their work by the Kansas branch.

A vote of thanks was then given to the retiring secretary, Charles Barron, and his wife, for their kind work for the last few years. A vote of thanks was also given to the City of McPherson for the hospitable and courteous treatment shown the visiting exhibitors and their friends.

Hutchison was the city selected for the next regular convention. Salina was suggested as the place, but lost to Hutchinson, because of the better railroad facilities.

A general discussion as to the relative merits of the trade journals and their aid to the exhibitor brought out the fact that many of the exhibitors use the trade journals as a guide to the successful operation of their theaters and as a text book to the business and all its phases. This was followed by the final decisive action of the convention, the sending of a telegram to President Wilson, in which the league voiced its stand in the present war, and promising the fullest co-operation possible by all members of the league both as a body and individually.

Following the motion for the sending of the telegram a general informal discussion of several matters of minor importance took place. The convention was then adjourned to meet the first Monday and Tuesday following the 15th of next October.

Film Salesmen Form a Club.

While the exhibitors were holding their second meeting the traveling film salesmen working out of Kansas City, Mo., held a meeting of their own, at which they formed a club to be known as the Kansas City Celluloid Pushers. They elected E. E. Reynolds, Mutual salesman, as president; Bert Edwards, Fox, vice president, and Fred Pickrell, Pathe, secretary and treasurer. The club is purely for social purposes, and to insure a greater co-operation among the members of the club.

Something should be said about the hospitality of the city of McPherson throughout the convention. Before the few early arrivals to the convention the city had been decorated especially for the occasion. In all of the store windows were signs and placards indicating a spirit of welcome and hospitality that has never been equaled at a previous convention. The city belonged to the moving picture men, and every one of its citizens made it their point to act the host. In addition to the smoker, there was a dance, and the local theater owned by Mr. Oelrich was at the disposal of the men. It was the consensus of opinion that the exhibitors and the exchangemen were more cordially treated at this convention than at any of the last few years.

Side Lights on the Business.

In a lighter vein can be told the story of the funmaking of the festive and joyous activities of the Kansas City exchangemen who organized a sixteen piece "jazz band," and who made several parades about the streets, and who gave several impromptu concerts. They did this in the face of the competition of the band appearing at the Tourney theater, who likewise paraded, but for a different purpose.

Moving pictures of the city of McPherson, the visiting exhibitors, the exchangemen and of several specially arranged little plays were taken. This was done by V. E. Simes, Mutual Screen Telegram cameraman, who received the fullest co-operation of the city and its officials in so doing. The picture will be owned by the Kansas City men making the trip to the convention.

The final feature of the convention was a dance the evening of April 23 at the Union Hotel, the headquarters of the convention. It concluded one of the best conventions that has ever been held in Kansas so far as business transacted is concerned.

Ochs Expected, but Did Not Show.

Lee Ochs was not there. Three men of the United Picture Theaters Corporation were present, but arrived late. These were C. S. Edwards, Sr., district manager for the company; his son, the manager of the Kansas City office, and a salesman, Ted Morse.

None of the exhibitors has been approached by them so far as your correspondent learned, for one of them remarked in meeting that he had not been approached by any one yet, and then several others remarked that they were likewise left alone. Mr. Ochs was expected, I am certain, for several of the film salesmen were expecting to see him. There was very little discussion about the proposition in McPherson, however.

SAM GRANT BOOSTING EXPOSITION.

Samuel Grant, manager of the coming moving picture exposition in Boston, announces the Exhibitors' League of America has secured the lease of Mechanics Hall for the week of July 13-20, where the annual moving picture exposition is to be held.

Mr. Grant is now making daily trips to all New England states to make final arrangements for the different state days which each one of the New England states are to have. He is also busy gaining the necessary co-operation that he must have in order to secure the attendance of the nation's head at the convention. After these arrangements are completed he can devote his time to preparing Mechanics Hall and the exposition plans will be in full swing.

Montreal Exhibitors Prepare for Action

Expect Drive Against Sunday Shows and Are Stiffening Their Defenses.

THE Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Montreal has taken further steps to protect the interests of its members against the expected attack of the Lord's Day Alliance which will have for its objective the closing of all places of amusement on Sundays. When the Alliance got busy at Sherbrooke, Quebec, the Montreal association offered its support to the exhibitors of that city and the Montreal exhibitors may be able to make Sherbrooke the battle-ground in the struggle.

In the meantime, Secretary A. H. Beaulne, of the Montreal organization, has sent out the following letter to local exhibitors who have not yet joined:

"The fight is surely coming to Montreal. The Lord's Day Alliance has won in Quebec and Three Rivers and now it is Sherbrooke. Montreal is the next move. Can't you see the absolute necessity of all the theaters in this city getting together to fight for their very existence? There are sixty theaters in Montreal. Of this number, thirty-seven are fully paid-up members of the association. It's up to you now."

Manager Joseph Schwartzbine, of the United Picture Theaters Exchange, has announced that Lee A. Ochs will address exhibitors attending the convention.

OREGON FILM MEN HOLD ROUSING MEETING.

One of the most rousing meetings in the history of the motion picture business in Portland, Oregon, was held Friday, April 19, at the Multonomah Hotel. The meeting was attended by exhibitors and exchangemen and was called to discuss the problems of the industry that have recently arisen in Portland. Gus Metzger presided and Abraham Nelson acted as secretary.

Present were Messrs. Metzger, Ruffner, Parker, Myrick, Rosenberg, Bradt, Ekre, Hill, Pierce, Winstock, Ayre, Washtock, McCredie, Cleland, Ely, Jackson, Stille, Nelson, L. Rosenberg, Holtzclaw, Jennings, Graeper.

BLAMED IF YOU DO, BLAMED IF YOU DON'T.

The tardiness of the Treasury Department in sending the blanks to be filled out and sent in with the admission tax is causing the Washington exhibitors a great deal of worry and trouble. One man, not wishing to be late in turning over he money, sent it without the blank; but it was returned o him with instructions not to send it without the blank ccompanying it. Two others who waited for the blanks vere fined heavily for not sending in their money on time. Hearing about these two different actions of the Treasury Department exhibitors are at a loss what to do. The ques- ion will probably be brought up at the next meeting of the Vashington Theater Managers' Association and a state- nent of the situation sent in to the Treasury Department.

Film Division Perfects Organization

Director Hart Announces Personnel—"Pershing's Crusaders" Is First Feature Issue.

IN the course of a brief month since Charles S. Hart assumed his duties as director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, of which George Creel s chairman, he has perfected an organization that has already demonstrated an efficiency which bids fair to make his division not only of great value to the Government but ne that will loom large in the film world.

The first result of the work undertaken by the Division of Films is the completion of a seven-reel feature film entitled "Pershing's Crusaders." This is the first of a series of Official American War Films, and it will be shown for he first time at the Grand Opera House, Cincinnati, during he week beginning Monday, April 29. Arrangements have also been completed for engagements in the principal thea- ers of New York, Chicago and sixteen of the largest cities. Other big features are in advanced stages of production.

In the organization of this division Mr. Hart has selected as the heads of the various departments those who have had wide experience in their respective fields.

At the head of the production department is Herbert C. Hoagland, who was for years editor of the Pathe Weekly. He not only has charge of the feature films, but will also handle the Weekly War Review.

George Bowles, who is manager of the feature film department, has for years been a prominent figure in the theatrical world. For twelve years he was general manager for Wagenhals & Kemper. He managed D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" during its phenomenal year's run in Chicago and afterward handled the same picture for a year and a half in Australia, New Zealand, Polynesia and Hawaii.

Howard Herrick, publicity manager, has for the past three years handled publicity and advance work for "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" in the large cities.

Marcus A. Beeman, assistant director, formerly secretary of the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce and later secretary of the New Jersey Chamber of Commerce, is in charge of special propaganda work among patriotic and other societies.

G. A. Smith, manager of distribution, was formerly assistant general manager of Pathe.

Gardner W. Wood, advertising manager, has held important positions in the advertising departments of Paramount and Essanay.

Louis E. Loeb, formerly controller with Paramount, holds the same position in the Division of Films.

Hadley Picks Subject for Cinema-Symphony

Chooses Sullivan's "The Lost Chord" for First Demonstration of His Screen Novelty.

ANNOUNCING Arthur Sullivan's famous song, "The Lost Chord," as the subject of his first cinema-symphony, Hopp Hadley speaks of his work as "a new-idea-illustrated-symphony, made possible by the art of motion pictures." The feature is in five reels, and he claims that even without the symphony it is a powerful drama with a beautiful heart interest story, destined to be popular as a regulation photodrama with an ordinary "cue-sheet" accompaniment.

"The only difference that I can see when the picture is run without the symphony," said Hopp Hadley, "judging it from the standpoint of a new picture viewed in a studio projecting room, is that the titles are in verse and are written in the same metre as the song. This was necessary in order to better keep the audience in the atmosphere of the music while also living in the atmosphere of the drama. Of course the poem alone would not tell a complete story, as there are only eighty titles in the whole picture, each, by the way, exactly two lines in length, which gives you some idea of the necessary literary effect. But I intend later to make the poem complete in itself, writing in verse the parts of the story now told in pictures to take the place of a synopsis. There are also no letters, cards, etc., in the picture; verse taking their place in each instance. These facts allow the drama to move along smoothly without interruption and give the music every opportunity to tell the story at the same time as it is being told by the actors. Thus the eyes and ears of the audience are both made use of by the producer as direct roads to the mind and heart.

The symphony for "The Lost Chord" is the work of Sol Levy and M. Winkler, who have been collaborating in its composition for several weeks. Both have had several years' experience preparing musical scores for stage dramas and pictures.

Besides the symphony for a full orchestra special compositions are being arranged for both the organ and the piano to meet the requirements of all theaters.

Griffith Film to be State Righted

Elliott, Comstock & Gest Announce Territorial Distribution of "Hearts of the World."

SPECULATION as to the method of distribution of D. W. Griffith's big war spectacle, "Hearts of the World," is set at rest with the announcement from the William Elliott, F. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest Enterprises that this production will be released by the state rights plan immediately.

"Hearts of the World" is doing smashing business in the four big cities where it is already appearing—New York, Los Angeles, Boston and Chicago—where the initial dates have been booked and a speedy disposal of the different territories throughout the country is anticipated. At Clune's theater in Los Angeles the production did $6,893.75 more than the "Birth of a Nation" during the first six weeks of the presentation of each picture. In New York, Boston and Chicago it is a difficult matter to get seats unless ordered well in advance.

"No human organization is big enough to handle the simultaneous presentation of this gigantic triumph of the screen," says the statement from the Elliott, Comstock & Gest offices. "The psychological time for the exhibition of this wonderful cinema to the public is at hand. It is a screen message that should be seen by every person in the country, and its handling in different territories by individual organizations is felt to be the most effective method.

"In view of its particular timeliness and its great merit in point of cinema technique and general production it is readily expected that 'Hearts of the World' will far exceed the wonderful success of Mr. Griffith's first big spectacle or any of his succeeding efforts to date.

"We are now prepared to consider offers for territorial rights on this production for its presentation in the immediate future. All communications and wires should be addressed to Elliott, Comstock & Gest, at the Century Theater, New York City."

Josiah Pearce Dies in Cleveland

Pioneer Film Man and One of Leading Exhibitors of South Was Sixty-Seven Years Old.

ROUNDING out an active life devoted to making thousands of persons carefree and happy, Josiah Pearce died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. T. AuWerter, in Cleveland, at 11 o'clock Friday night, April 19. His demise was unexpected, for there was no positive evidence of organic disorder and Mr. Pearce maintained his characteristic cheerfulness and vivid interest in the affairs of those about him. His only complaint was that he was weary physically, despite his ability to enjoy sufficient nourishment.

Josiah Pearce was one of the most widely known and best beloved men who have adopted New Orleans as home, his residence being at 1019 Audubon street. He was born in Newport, Monmouthshire, England, 67 years ago, and came to this country while yet a boy, locating at Pittsburg, Pa. In the fall of 1903 he made his first amusement venture, opening a resort at Conneaut Lake, Pa. In the fall of 1905 he opened the first "nickle picture theater" south of Cincinnati at Memphis, Tenn., and later in the same year he was instrumental in opening the second and third ones south of the Ohio river, the first at 926 Canal street, the present site of the Grunewald Caterer's establishment, and the other in Birmingham. Identified with him in the various amusement enterprises were his two sons, J. Eugene and Fred W., under the firm name of Josiah Pearce & Sons. They have extensive amusement enterprises all over the country. Besides the sons, two daughters, Mrs. George H. Jackson of Lebanon, Pa., and Mrs. J. T. AuWerter of Cleveland, and the widow survive him. The latter was Emma Clapp of Pittsburg, who was also born in England.

"Careless America"

Thrilling Safety First Film Made by Universal to Be Used in Nation-Wide Campaign Backed by Police Authorities.

A ONE-REEL production entitled "Careless America" has been made by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at the request of H. S. Firestone. This film is not only most effective for the purpose for which it is to be used, but is at the same time entertaining to the extent of possessing more than one real thrill. No attempt has been made to hook the chain of illustrations to a story; on the contrary, the picture presents a series of plain truths illuminated by carefully worded sub-titles. As would be expected it deals entirely with the dangers of carelessness in driving automobiles and the carelessness of pedestrians. It introduces prominent individuals whose special mission has to do with the safety of the public, including New York's police commissioner and secretary of state. And, by the way, for the reason that this picture is to be exhibited under the wing of the police authorities in every state in the Union (2,687 towns) it has been arranged to use animated pictures of those in authority in each state in which the picture is shown.

We understand that through the influence of the police 18,500 bookings have already been made for the picture, and that 3,142 newspapers are backing it. The safety first campaign in which the film is being used is inspired by the fact that a stern necessity has arisen for the prevention of accidents and casualties as a result of carelessness.

Universal stars appearing in the picture are Mildred Harris, Francis Ford, Herbert Rawlinson, Kenneth Harlan, Betty Shade, Kingsley Benedict, Marie Walcamp, Lawrence Peyton and Albert Roscoe. These players have been called upon to perform all sorts of daring feats; for instance, Marie Walcamp drives an automobile off a pier into the water, and also over a broken roadway which calls for a dangerous leap. Others have to ride over embankments and into dangerous pitfalls, all in illustration of the carelessness of driving with brakes or steering gear out of order.

Another interesting point in the picture draws attention to the fact that $100,000,000 worth of waste is perpetrated each year by the drivers of automobiles through carelessness. Instances of carelessness in handling tires, hammering them with a sharp-edged instrument in readjusting them, backing against the sharp edges of pavements, or locking wheels which causes the tire to grate over the road and do more damage to it than six months' actual wear. Many accidents and near accidents through carelessness of both driver and pedestrian are also graphically illustrated. In the near future the picture will be shown in over a hundred theaters in New York City.

Jewel to Retitle Novel Adaptations

That Is, Where Story Has a Name That Does Not Catch the Eye.

THE executives of Jewel Productions, Inc., declare they have solved to their own satisfaction the debated problem as to whether a picture made from a widely-known novel should be titled as in the original or should be given a new title that will adequately describe the production.

"Give the picture a new title whenever necessary," is the answer of the Jewel officials, "and on all the paper issued have the title and the name of the book from which the story is adapted in equal display."

The Jewel executives selected "The Doctor and the Woman" with which to make a test case. They arranged for pre-releases in two cities where exhibiting conditions are similar. In one the picture was released as "K," which is the name of the Mary Roberts Rinehart story from which the production was made. In the second city the production was released as "The Doctor and the Woman," adapted from Mrs. Rinehart's story "K."

Bookings in both cities have been carefully checked and the result shows that the original title "K" was not a selling title insofar as the motion picture exhibiting interests were concerned. The exhibitors that booked "K" managed or controlled houses known as the "better class of neighborhood houses," the patrons of which are magazine readers. These patrons were acquainted with the writings of Mrs. Rinehart and there was no need to educate them as to the meaning of "K."

On the other hand, in the second test zone where the picture was released under the name of "The Doctor and the Woman," with the explanation that it was adapted from Mrs. Rinehart's "K," the exhibitors booked it for general consumption and also to obtain the admission money from the followers of the author.

"Our test appears to prove," says the report of H. M. Berman, Jewel Manager, "that it is better to select a new and better title for a picturized novel than to stick by the original title to the novel unless it is catchy and descriptive of the story."

Farnsworth Returns to California

F. EUGENE FARNSWORTH made a short visit to New York in the interests of the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation last week. He left for the Paralta studios Friday to supervise the production of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The One Woman," which will be staged there. Mr. Farnsworth had been in Los Angeles for several months planning the filming of the first Mastercraft picture, but in order to overcome certain difficulties regarding the story and the management which were causing indeterminate delays, he made a hurried trip East.

F. Eugene Farnsworth.

One of the objects accomplished during his stay in the metropolis was his election to the presidency of the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation of New York, a subsidiary organization to the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation of Massachusetts, of which Mr. Farnsworth was already president and director general. The fact that Mr. Farnsworth is now the active head of the New York organization, as well as of the parent corporation, makes possible the immediate production of "The One Woman," which had been held up previously due to the necessity of sending the scenarios back and forth between New York and Los Angeles for approval by both concerns and by Thomas Dixon, the author, who holds an authoritative position in the concern.

Absolute co-operation is now assured the Mastercraft company between New York and California, as Mr. Farnsworth is located at the Paralta studios, while the remaining executives of the New York company are situated in the Paralta offices in New York City.

EXHIBITOR COMPLAINS OF EXCHANGE ABUSES.

Gentlemen:—We will appreciate it if you will give the following complaints some publicity. Very frequently features reach us which have been abused by so-called operators who have cut off the reading matter describing the various parts, such as Part 1, etc. This abuse is very rarely corrected at the exchange, and as the exhibitor frequently receives his show at 12 or 1 o'clock it compels the operator more or less to guess in assembling the various reels, and frequently the guess is wrong. We feel all manufacturers should be required to specify on the sub-titles or scenes the part in numerals. It would enable the operator who is forced to contend with such abuse to put his feature together correctly. I have spoken to a number of exhibitors who have suffered through the same negligence and have had to contend with uncomplimentary comments from their patrons, as they of course are unable to make sense from a number of jumbled scenes.

At different times I have called the attention of the exchanges to this matter, some of which are constantly bragging about service to the exhibitor (which is nothing more than class "A" camouflage), and invariably these letters have been ignored.

Lasky Goes to West Coast Studios

Paramount-Artcraft Executive Will Supervise Plans for Presenting Additions to Playing Force.

JESSE L. LASKY, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of productions, left New York Sunday, April 21, for the West Coast studios, where he will begin preparations for the handling of pictures presenting various new stars to appear in Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

Prior to his departure Mr. Lasky made public the fact that his company had just signed Shirley Mason to appear in John Emerson and Anita Loos Productions for Paramount release. Miss Mason is one of the youngest stars connected with the motion picture stage and has become widely prominent among followers of the screen during the past three years as a result of her work before the camera. She has appeared before the public the greater part of her seventeen years, having played in the "legitimate" since early childhood prior to her becoming associated with the film studio. The John Emerson and Anita Loos Productions starring Miss Mason will be produced in the East commencing the early part of June. Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos are already engaged on the initial story following their work on a number of scripts for Paramount and Artcraft stars, some of which have already been shown to the trade.

"Among the new stars who will begin work at the West Coast studios," said Mr. Lasky, "are Fred Stone and Ethel Clayton, whose engagements with our organization were recently announced. By request from exhibitors Vivian Martin has been re-engaged to continue her appearance in Paramount Pictures. Other stars whose names cannot be announced at this time will also begin work in California for us early in June, their combined activities plus those of our present producing units comprising a gigantic summer drive which will considerably enlarge our stars series plan.

"Our contract with Lina Cavalieri has also been renewed. Madame Cavalieri's new Paramount vehicle now being completed at Fort Lee, 'Gismonda,' is the biggest production yet staged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the East and will mark another notable achievement for Paramount. Madame Cavalieri will continue to work in the East.

"Activities in our Eastern studios are running along at record pace and despite the unfavorable weather we have had here recently the New York and New Jersey companies are well ahead of their release schedule. Elsie Ferguson has just left for Montana, where she will appear in an Artcraft picture under the direction of Marshall Neilan, who has just finished the George M. Cohan picture for Artcraft release, 'Hit the Trail Holliday.' Pauline Frederick has just completed 'Fedora' and Marguerite Clark, after her triumphant Liberty Loan tour, has started on a picture taken from a famous subject.

"Although many of our stars have been working exclusively for the Government in connection with the Third Liberty Loan campaign their pictures are well in advance of release dates so that these engagements for Uncle Sam will not delay the usual presentation of their newest screen vehicles."

Mr. Lasky will remain in California until the early part of June.

Edison Studio and Film Plant Sold

Lincoln & Parker Film Company of Worcester Also Purchase Over a Million Feet of Negative.

THOMAS A. EDISON, INC., announces that the Edison Studio, at 2826 Decatur avenue, New York, its equipment and the equipment of the Edison positive film plant, formerly located at Orange, N. J., have been sold to the Lincoln and Parker Film Company, Worcester, Mass. By the terms of the deal, the Lincoln and Parker Film Company also comes into possession of over a million feet of Edison negatives released prior to the beginning of the arrangement by which Edison pictures were distributed through the George Kleine System.

The Lincoln and Parker Film Company also acquired the right to reproduce Edison feature subjects and Edison Conquest Pictures on their narrow-width and non-standard film, but all other rights in such subjects are retained for a period of years by the Edison Company and the George Kleine System, through which they will be available as before. All rights in the James Montgomery Flagg series "Girls You Know" are so retained.

Included in the Lincoln and Parker deal are the educational and scientific subjects upon which Mr. Edison was working a few years ago. It is announced that Mr. Edison will act in the capacity of a consulting editor to the new company, and that his son, Charles Edison, is to become a member of its board of directors.

The Edison Company promises a further announcement shortly as to its future activities in the motion picture field, but it is known that a number of new productions, including "The Wall Invisible," with Shirley Mason, and several stories by O. Henry, Richard Harding Davis, Ralph Henry Barbour and other authors of prominence, are being made ready for early release.

Josh Binney Makes a Find

It Is Laura De Cardi, a Leading Woman of Rare Personality.

JOSH BINNEY, the genial directing manager of the Florida Film Corporation, is wearing a smile that bespeaks contentment of mind and, incidentally it is saying a great deal, inasmuch as Josh is architecturally constructed upon lines of generous proportions and when he wears anything it must necessarily be a great deal. But then, Josh has every reason to smile, considering his present visit to New York has brought a realization of his every wish. After a strenuous several months of organizing his new producing company and the completion of the first three releases of a series of twelve two-reel comedies, Josh now may return to Jacksonville knowing that his efforts have received a recognition which insures success.

Laura De Cardi.

In two weeks of marketing this product, Josh returns to his field of operation with three bona fide contracts safely tucked away in his jeans and the assurance of his sales manager, Ernest Shipman, that the entire country will be disposed of in short order.

Mr. Binney is further pleased at having secured the services of a leading woman for his future productions whom he considers a positive "find," and so sanguine is he of her success on the screen that a contract has been executed whereby he controls her services for a term of years.

Miss Laura De Cardi is the young woman in question, and while she had no motion picture training, Mr. Binney's long experience as a director and producer qualifies him as a capable critic of screen possibilities, and he claims that Miss De Cardi possesses personality, charm and physical attractiveness that will quickly establish her as a prime favorite with the movie fans, and then, too, beyond all this, there is a hidden talent yet to be developed which, in his opinion, Miss De Cardi unquestionably possesses.

Miss De Cardi is of Italian birth and her early childhood was spent in Milan. Prominent in the attractive qualities which promise to carry her speedily to screen stardom are a pair of wondrously beautiful eyes, and Mr. Binney warns the many beauties of filmdom that they may now look well to their laurels.

SELECT JOINS N. A. M. P. I.

Select Pictures Corporation has just joined the National Association of the Motion Pictures Industry as a distributor member. This classification gives Select a double membership in the N. A. M. P. I., since the producer-membership originally taken out by Lewis J. Selznick, now president of Select Pictures, has been transferred to the corporation. This puts Select on a par with the other big companies in the moving picture field which are represented in both the producer and distributor divisions of the national group. Morris Kohn, treasurer of Select Pictures, has been designated to represent the corporation in the two branches of the N. A. M. P. I.

Laemmle to Push Short Subject

Not Eliminating Five-Part Pictures, but Believes There Is Drawing Power in Good Two and Three-Reelers.

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, left New York on Saturday, April 20, for Universal City, where he will hold numerous conferences with a view of the improvement, wherever possible, of the Universal output. The trip of Mr. Laemmle followed numerous sessions with the members of the executive force of the New York office during which production was discussed from every angle. At these sessions numerous suggestions for improvement were made.

Mr. Laemmle during his trip, which is scheduled to be rather extended, will take up with the technical production experts the advisability of putting the suggestions of the New York executives into effect.

It has been decided that for a time at least Universal will be a wide-open market for picture adaptation from best sellers. Any serial adaptable for picturization from the pages of any of the better class popular mazagines will be given serious consideration and will be purchased if it gives promise for a picture which will be sought by high-class motion picture theaters throughout the country.

The statement that Universal is in the market for magazine serial stories does not mean, according to Mr. Laemmle, that the scenario department of the company will be expected to wade through a mass of immaterial and less-than-par stories.

In order that no possible story may be overlooked members of the New York executive staff have been given assignments to carefully read magazine stories as they appear. A certain number of magazines have been assigned to each man and he has instructions to report in deail upon their contents.

When Mr. Laemmle reaches Universal City he will follow a similar procedure there by assigning several members of the West Coast force as concentrated magazine readers. The reports of the readers from the east coast and west coast will be tabulated and upon their combined recommendations stories will be purchased.

Another innovation Mr. Laemmle expects to put into effect is the making in two and three reels pictures that heretofore have been extended into five and six reels. In watching the market recently Mr. Laemmle has ascertained that exhibitors demand pictures with tremendous action and without a foot of wastage.

An ordinary five-reel picture, according to Mr. Laemmle, should be produced from a story in which there appears to be enough material to make ten reels. After the picture is made careful eliminations will cut it to not more than five or six thousand feet at the outside with the picture action smooth and continuous.

"I want to prove to our directors that it is possible to make a splendid two or three-reel picture that is so good the exhibitors throughout the country will advertise the short subject in preference to the longer subject on their program and upon which they look as their feature," said Mr. Laemmle. "In one or two isolated cases in the picture business it has been demonstrated that my idea is not wrong."

As a clincher to his argument that short subjects may be featured as against five-reel features, Mr. Laemmle said:

"Do you know of a single exhibitor who advertises a feature on the day on which he runs a Chaplin?"

"But under no circumstances," Mr. Laemmle explained, "should my advocacy of the short feature be construed as an opinion from me that I think the longer feature should be eliminated. I do not advocate any such thing. But I do say that two-reel subjects should not be padded to five reels. And I do predict that in the very near future the exhibitors will make their program of two, three or four short subjects unless the market affords enough regular, unpadded feature pictures. The day when a producer can flash two and three hundred feet of a flash back simply to produce footage is rapidly ending.

"Universal appreciates these changing conditions and is preparing to meet them."

On his way to the West Coast Mr. Laemmle visited several exchanges in the west.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of April 28 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE RIALTO.—Billie Burke in "Let's Get a Divorce," a film version of Sardou's "Divorcons," one of the best of his comedies, was the chief picture attraction at the Rialto the week of April 28. John Miltern and Armand Kalise have the chief supporting roles. Other features were the Animated Magazine, a Fox comedy and a scenic. Gladys Rice and Carlos Mejia were the soloists.

THE RIVOLI.—Circus life forms the background of "The Biggest Show on Earth," the Paramount picture in which Enid Bennett was seen at the Rivoli. The actress appears as a lion tamer in her father's circus. An animated Pictorial, a "Mutt and Jeff," a scenic feature and concert numbers were also on the program.

THE STRAND.—The film version of James W. Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," Winsor MacKay's "The Sinking of the Lusitania," and the Topical Review were shown at the Strand. A soldier's quartet rendered patriotic songs and the Symphony Orchestra played "Pomp and Circumstance."

"Make Your Own Movies"

THE possibilities for work of the most absorbing interest and greatest permanent value along motion picture lines are well known and fully appreciated by every photographic enthusiast, and we need but touch on them here. The most important question camera workers want answered is, "How can I take up this line of work with the minimum of cost for apparatus and materials?"

No larger than a Kodak and equally simple of operation, it weighs four and one-half pounds. It has a capacity of 50 feet standard, perforated motion picture film, obtainable anywhere.

No commercial photographer need refuse orders for motion films now that the Almo Camera is available, and his profits on a single job would pay for the camera many times over in many instances.

There are possibilities here for the home portraiture man that we need only hint at, as he is a "live wire" to begin with.

The Almo Camera is furnished with a rapid aplanat lens working at f-6, with a focal length of two inches, and at full aperture will render sharply all objects at distances of eight feet or more from the camera.

For experienced workers or those to whom the added simplicity of a fixed-focus lens would not appeal, the camera may be had with any of the standard anastigmat lenses designed for motion picture cameras, which are supplied in focusing mounts, such as the Zeiss Tessar, f-3.5 of two inch focus. Such lenses add superior facilities for interior work and for outdoor work under poor light.

The use of a camera of this kind would in many cases mean also the use of a suitable projector, especially in the hands of the amateur photographer who wishes to follow up his work to the final triumph of projection upon the screen.

The manufacturers of the Almo have provided for this in their Precision Portable Projector designed for home, school, or commercal use. It is a stanch, practical machine, embodying the most approved forms of film-moving mechanism and with simplifications in details which make its use a success in the most inexperienced hands.

Chaplin Sees Life in Atlanta

Entertains and Is Entertained by a Mammy, Sips Tea, Breaks Several Records and Sells Half Million in Bonds.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN came to Atlanta April 16, smashed all attendance records, including grand opera and political powers, by drawing eight thousand people to the auditorium; set a Liberty Bond sales record, locally, by coaxing $502,350 out of Atlantans' pockets and found time to hobnob with both the upper and lower crusts of Atlanta's social stratum.

From the Terminal station the comedian was being speeded by Forrest Adair to the Druid Hills Golf Club where St. Elmo Massengale was to entertain him at dinner. At Mr. Chaplin's request that he be given a look at the negroes, the motor swept into Decatur street and paused at a corner. A corpulent black mammy abruptly halted the act of cramming a fish sandwich down her throat.

"Dar he is!" she shouted. "Dar he is! Dat's Chollie!"

In no time at all Mr. Chaplin was beaming on a street black with negroes. The very big black mammy stood forth as leader.

"I seen you," she cried. "I seen you in dat picture! I seen yer walkin' lak dis."

She shuffled and wabbled across the sidewalk in first-class Chaplin style.

"I seen you wid dat gal, Mistah Chollie. Law me, you sho'ly wuz atter dat gal! You go 'way, but you kept on a-comin' back. Yessuh, you jus' kep' a-comin' back to whar she wuz!"

Charlie laughed almost until he cried.

"Shuffle for us again," he said, and she shuffled once more while the crowd howled.

At the Druid Hills Club Mr. Chaplin walked kerplunk into the midst of a tea party, and how the women did mob him!

At the dinner each speaker introduced himself, Rotary Club fashion. Mr. Chaplin's turn came.

"Charlie Chaplin," he said. "Supposed to be funny. We shall see!"

At the auditorium Mr. Chaplin bounded out in front of the eight thousand.

"I'm not here to be funny," he announced.

"Ha! Ha!" yelled the crowd.

"I was never more serious in my life!"

"Great!" shouted the audience. "He can't help being funny."

One thousand, twenty-five thousand, fifty-thousand-dollar subscriptions soon began falling thick and fast and, by the time the meeting was over, they had Charlie shuffling and even standing on his head.

STARR.

How Manager Forhan Builds Business

Canadian Showman Has Many Devices for Placing His Program Before His Neighbors.

GEORGE J. FORHAN, manager of two moving picture theaters in Belleville, Ontario, for the Griffin Amusement Company of Toronto, has made such good use of heralds and printed programs that he has been attracting the attention of managers of large theaters in the big cities. He declares that practically none of his heralds or programs is thrown away, partly because of their attractive make-up and partly because of the methods employed for distribution.

Mr. Forhan gives a double pass each week to the local librarian in exchange for which the librarian performs the service of slipping one of the theater programs into all outgoing books on Saturdays. People take the books home to be read on Sunday and they find the program when they are not busy.

Every Friday and Saturday slides are run at the two houses to announce that programs for the following week are available at the door. The ticket sellers at the box offices also have a supply to be given to those who apply at the wickets for them without coming into the theater. Manager Forhan also sends a quantity of the leaflets or folders to a nearby deaf and dumb institute each week and a large party from this institution always attends the regular Saturday matinee.

Manager Forhan writes his own copy for the programs and he does not solicit advertising for the folders, although he has been offered outside business several times. He does refer, frequently, to various local patriotic campaigns and he does so without waiting for requests from local organizations. On several occasions he has been able to show his interest in various movements before the organizers have had time to approach him and they have been pleased.

One evening a local alderman patronized his theater and was agreeably surprised to find that the exhibitor was boosting a loan campaign by the use of an appropriate slide. The civic official happened to be the chairman of the loan organization committee. By doing this work Mr. Forhan is on good terms with all the local officials and they listen to him when he has a request to make. He declares that the boosting also helps his business generally.

This exhibitor declares that he likes the printed program best of all for advertising purposes but that he also uses considerable space in both local newspapers for regular announcements from week to week.

Betty Compson in Pathe Serial

BETTY COMPSON, the blue-eyed heroine of many Christie Comedies, has been engaged for the leading role opposite George Larkin in "The Wolf-Faced Man," by W. A. S. Douglas and Lucien Hubbard, which Diando Film Corporation is producing in Los Angeles for Pathe.

"The Wolf-Faced Man" is a story of romance and adventure in the West, and the picture will be marked by the stunts of George Larkin whose daring has made him popular as a serial star, the beauty and horsemanship of Miss Compson, and the size of the cast selected to play with these principals.

Betty Compson.

Betty Compson has made a name for herself in little more than two years of screen experience. Little Miss Compson is a Salt Lake City girl who has had experience in vaudeville and on the legitimate stage.

Her first professional work was as a violin soloist in vaudeville and later with Mandeville Sketches. For some time she was a member of the William J. Kelly Stock Company in Salt Lake. Her first screen experience was under Al E. Christie. Some of the comedies under which she will be remembered are "His Baby," "A Brass Buttoned Romance," "Some Kid," "Out for Coin," "Her Friend, the Chauffeur," "Sauce for the Goose," "Sea Nymphs," "Working His Way," "Those Wedding Bells," "A Bold, Bad Knight," "Down by the Sea," "Father's Bright Idea," "Crazy by Proxy," "The Honeymooner," "As in Days of Old," "A Blessed Blunder" and "Their Seaside Tangle."

Betty Compson has golden hair, blue eyes, is 5 feet 2 inches in height, an expert horsewoman, a swimmer and a dancer.

WORLD PICTURES TO MAKE SOMERVILLE STORY.

Roy Somerville, famous for his vivid short stories and novels, has written for World Pictures a remarkable story, entitled "Hitting the Trail." The story is laid in the East Side of New York City and deals with the career and regeneration of one of the inhabitants of this region.

Mr. Somerville is a familiar name among magazine readers. He is equally well known among picturegoers as the author of "Reggie Mixes In," featuring Douglas Fairbanks. He also wrote "Children in the House" and "The Danger Game."

THE GENESIS OF THAT MERGER RUMOR.

James Weed, manager of Keith's theater, Dayton; Clay E. Brehn, manager of the Strand in that city; Mark Gates, manager of the new Dayton, as well as the World correspondent, were seen walking down one of Dayton's principal thoroughfares at one time. (Together.) The party met L. C. Pollack, Metro representative, who ventured the suggestion that a combine might be talked of, and it was then explained that the party had just been through the new Dayton—nothing more—nothing less.

Clemmer Advertising Brings 'Em In

Goldwyn Traveler Impressed by What He Saw in an Exploitation Way in Seattle.

AN interesting example of an exhibitor's skill in selling to the public the motion picture feature attraction playing his theater is to be found in the newspaper advertising campaign of James Q. Clemmer, proprietor of the Clemmer theater, Seattle, according to a Goldwyn executive just back from a tour of the West.

The Clemmer theater possesses two great assets which the Seattle public is ready to buy—its multi-reel feature films each week and its remarkable orchestra, in which the music-lovers of the city take great pride. And there is a third asset in Bart Burtleson, advertising man of the theater and right-hand assistant to Mr. Clemmer.

Both Mr. Clemmer and Mr. Burtleson believe in the power of "big copy" advertising in daily newspapers. The Clemmer advertisements of Goldwyn Pictures occupied four full columns in the Seattle Sunday Times, or a total of eighty-eight inches. The cost of a single insertion of one of these advertisements, inclusive of the cost of making the metal engraving or "plate" is around $175, which also gives indication of the rate co-operation offered to exhibitors by the Seattle Times. These advertisements were designed by Mr. Burtleson, and so strong are they in selling power that Goldwyn has arranged for the preparation of the "Seattle Style" of copy for its future exhibitor advertising electrotypes.

"I have been an exhibitor for a great many years," says Mr. Clemmer in explanation of his newspaper advertising copy. "During that time, like other exhibitors, I long ago exhausted superlatives in exploiting pictures opening in my theater. I began to find that superlatives no longer 'pulled.' The public did not believe them—and justly so.

"Nor was it sufficient for us to announce that this or that producer 'presented' this or that star in this or that story. Certain producers, Goldwyn close to the top, have established both production and star value. But I wanted something else to sell to the public; some unique angle to challenge attention. And I found it.

"In the Clemmer theater advertising we now sell the plot of our productions to the public, in addition to producer's name and star's name. We pull the public in past the box office and into the orchestra seats by building our advertising so that it reveals what the story is. We do not tease or pique them in with a single phrase or catch-line. We let them know in advance in bold display print the detailed theme—written and illustrated as cleverly as we possibly can.

"Personally, I think that the Seattle type of advertising is the most effective amusement copy created in the United States. I have studied the advertising of all other large cities and I have found none that I consider equal to it for challenge—and that is the first element to be considered."

Lawyer Protests Against Absurdities

Mr. Osborne Calls Attention to Story Founded Upon a Situation Impossible in Legal Procedure.

1862 Shelby Street, Seattle, April 11, 1918.

Editor Moving Picture World:

IN the name of the outraged majesty of the law let me register indignant protest. The other evening in one of the first-run motion picture houses I saw a film the story of which centered itself around the wedding trip of a youthful pair. The film was produced by one of the better class of manufacturers. The action took place in Niagara Falls, with occasional glimpses at New York. The action could not have covered more than one week at the outside, and, judging by the arrangement of the story, actually took only two or three days. Now let me tell you what happened on this honeymoon. First, the bridegroom innocently got himself entangled with some other woman. His bride suspected the worst, left him and procured another room in the same hotel, which was on the Canadian side of the falls. She immediately wired her lawyer to get her a divorce.

The lawyer—a relative I think—started the divorce, but was worried and immediately started for Niagara in his motor car to see what was the matter. He wired her she could go before the consul on the Canadian side who would take her evidence—on which presumably the decree for divorce would be based. The husband, about the same day, is served with a summons in divorce which gives him twenty days to answer the suit. Immediately in New York an officious clerk goes before a judge and gets the final decree signed and wires his chief, who has just arrived in Niagara, that he has put through the divorce in record time. Complications then arise because the couple have made it up meantime, and find themselves in a perilous position because they are likely to spend their honeymoon after being wholly divorced.

Now I wouldn't make any kick about the outrageous manner in which all technicalities were brushed aside were it not for the fact that the average man and woman who saw that picture actually do know something about legal procedure, particularly divorce procedure. Most all laymen—men or women—have some friend recently divorced, and they know the general rule now is in most States affecting divorces. They know that even after the rendition of the first decree a period of either three months or six months must elapse before the decree is made final and before the parties actually are free from the bonds of matrimony. A scenario writer would no more think of pretending that the human appendix was situated in the left ear—he won't take liberties with medical subjects because he thinks people know about those things. But he feels at full liberty to monkey with the law.

Now, in the case of this play, what he made the law do was the vital thing—the whole play depended upon it; and yet he presented an impossible situation and the audience knew it to be impossible. And the story wasn't a farce. It was a comedy and high comedy at that. Imagine all the evidence being taken in a case before the suit is brought! Imagine, further, a final decree being entered before the time of the defendant to answer the complaint has expired!

To observe the absolutely necessary forms of law, reducing the matter to its essentials, no kind of an order or decree could have been entered in the cause within the time or in the manner portrayed in that picture. To get even a preliminary decree would have required formalities running into months—to free the parties three or six months more.

This is only one of several plays that have made the same mistake. Another mistake that occurs with greater frequency arises in the utterance of husband or wife to the effect: "I will give you a divorce," or he consents to a divorce, etc., when it is apparent to any observer of conditions that there is no such thing as a divorce by consent. In fact, a divorce which is the result of previous arrangement is impossible to get, except by the use of fraud or perjury, or both.

Let me suggest a simple remedy: Cannot the head of scenario departments submit scenarios to some young lawyer in the firm of counsel who represent the manufacturer? This cannot run into much expense. Incidental mistakes, even, are bad, but where the whole action is built up on a legal error it is time to call a halt.

Des Moines' Rialto Opens to Public

Is Fireproof Structure Seating 1,100 Persons—Features "The Cinderella Man" in First Show.

THE new Rialto theater, Des Moines, the largest motion picture house in Iowa, has been formally opened to the public with some unusual ceremonies. Mae Marsh in "The Cincerella Man" was played at the Rialto during the opening week, the Goldwyn program being one of the first contracted for by Abe Frankle, managing director of the new house.

A two-page advertisement in the Des Moines Register goes far in emphasizing the progressiveness of the Rialto management. It was arranged by John L. Shipley, publicity representative for the Rialto, and almost a column of it was devoted to Goldwyn Pictures.

The Rialto, an entirely fireproof structure, seats 1,100 persons. The decorations on the front of the building, in the lobby and exterior are carried out in a color scheme which is a combination of art blue, rose, ivory and gold.

For the patrons' convenience a playroom for the children has been provided. This room is under supervision of a matron and is furnished with toys and games to amuse the youngsters.

The music is furnished by a symphonic orchestral organ, which is a pipe organ as well as a complete orchestral combination. F. Metzger, formerly in charge of the Casino, Des Moines, is the Rialto's house manager.

IDEAL THEATER CHANGES HANDS.

A deal has been completed whereby the management of the Ideal theater of Endicott, N. Y., formerly owned by John A. Laue, passed to the owners of the Lyric theater.

Mr. Dittrich, manager of the two theaters, says, while separate and distinctly different programs will occasionally be shown at each house, for the greater part of the time the same features will be shown on both screens.

Greater Facilities for Foreign Buyers

Inter-Ocean Now Boasts New York Building as Well as London One.

TWO important announcements come from president Paul H. Cromelin, of the Inter-ocean Film Corporation. The gist of one is that Inter-Ocean has acquired full possession of the building at 218 West 42nd street, New York City, and will open it May 1 as the first structure in America to be devoted exclusively to motion picture exporting. The concern has had its own building in London for over a year.

"There will be an innovation in connection with the new building," says president Cromelin, "in that it will be equipped to take care of foreign buyers visiting New York. Heretofore such men lost much valuable time through lack of familiarity with our language and customs, methods of doing business and facilities for 'short cuts' known to the American only. At Inter-Ocean Building the film visitor to our shores will find himself conducting his affairs with the same ease as at his desk in Buenos Aires or Manila. A place will be set aside for his exclusive use during the period of his stay and to that desk will be harnessed the co-operation of Inter-Ocean's staff from its president down.

"Nimble translators, stenographers skilled in the language of film export, shipping men who are experts in all matters relating to foreign shipment—all are at the visiting buyer's elbow and service. So will be special projecting rooms, now under construction."

The Inter-Ocean has been at 220 West 42nd street since September, 1916. The active heads are Paul H. Cromelin, president; Eugene H. Kaufman, office manager, and carbons and accessories; Louis Brock and Gus Schlesinger, foreign sales; Leon Schlesinger, contracts and domestic sales; Madge Maloney, auditor; Martin Cohn, technical, and Al. Hartleib, shipping. The concern acts as foreign distributor for World and Paralta films; "Inside the Lines," "Manx-Man," "Today," "Mad Lover," "Eight Bells," "Thirteenth Labor of Hercules" and other special features; and for Black Diamond, Vim and Bingo comedies and "Charley" cartoons. Speer Carbons are also exclusively handled in the foreign field by Inter-Ocean.

News from Foreign Markets.

As international trouble-makers, the "Rasputins," "Romanoffs" and other Russian photoplays made in this country easily take first place. It seems as if the anarchic condition of Russia had also overtaken these motion pictures. According to reports from Chile, the local agents for the North American Motion Pictures, Inc., who were carrying an intensive advertising campaign preliminary to the release of "Rasputin, the Black Monk," found to their surprise that another copy of the picture was being distributed by the Sociedad Cinematografica Chilena, a concern under the control of Pairoa & Herrera. Then the row started. Pairoa & Herrera managed to steal a march on the "North American" and were the first to release their copy, which had its premiere at the Alhambra theater of Valparaiso. The "North American" took the case before the Chilean courts and had the opposition copy embargoed, claiming the sole ownership of the rights and to have sold the print in question for exploitation only in Peru and Bolivia, and with the express understanding that it would not be exhibited in Chile. But Pairoa & Herrera are now making the counterclaim that the seized "Rasputin" is not the one sold by the "North American" at all, but another copy purchased by them direct in New York. And to make matters even more complicated, a mysterious third print of the same picture has just been released somewhere in Peru.

We notice from time to time in the sporting pages of some of the New York daily papers allusions to the hard fate of Jack Johnson and statements to the effect that he is "pining away in some foreign shore for that dear old Chicago." The fact is that Jack is leading a royal life in Spain. He has a physical culture studio in Barcelona, a city besides which Chicago and New York would look like Sunday schools, and has played the leading part in one of the most successful photodramas produced in Spain during the past year. By-the-way, the picture referred to, entitled "Strength and Nobility," is being advertised at present in some Latin American countries, but as his wife also plays one of the leading roles, it is doubtful whether it will be successful in territories like Cuba, Porto Rico and others where there is a strong race prejudice.

Paul Capellani, the French actor who left New York about four months ago to join the Platense Film Company of Buenos Aires, in the capacity of leading man and director, is on his way back to these shores. With the assistance of Marcel Morhange, who is already here, as technical director, and George Benoit, as cameraman, he produced a multiple-reel picture which will shortly be released on the Argentinian market.

J. Verdaguer, the well-known Barcelona importer and distributor, has opened a branch in Havana for the purpose of handling Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico and some of the Central American republics. We understand that the Havana office, in charge of Eudaldo Torres, works in a more or less independent fashion and, according to its advertisements in Cine-Mundial, is offering a series of Italian productions controlled by the Barcelona firm.

The official pictures depicting the social, commercial and industrial development of the United States, taken to Spain by Frank J. Marion, president of the Kalem Company, for propaganda purposes, were shown for the first time about a month ago at the Madrid College of Engineers. Reviews published by the daily and trade press indicate that the films made a very satisfactory impression.

Adolfo Roca, who has been handling Mutual pictures in Cuba, claims in an advertisement published in a Havana theatrical paper to be the owner of the Cuban rights on a photoplay entitled "Rasputin, the Black Monk, in the Fall of the Romanoffs." Now, this is rather confusing. Is Mr. Roca distributing the World or the Brenon production? Or has he purchased both of them? These "Rasputin" and "Romanoffs" are certainly the Bolsheviki of the cinematographic world.

A Buenos Aires trade paper reports that a number of European productions, mostly French, have lately been released in Argentina and Uruguay. They show considerable improvement over previous films of similar origin, and the trade paper referred to "has no hesitation in stating that the improvement is entirely due to the adoption by the producers of the school of technique that has earned such enviable reputation for North American cinematography."

The Empresa Cinematographica Alberto Sestini, which recently secured through Hiller & Wilk, Inc., the rights for Brazil on Ambassador Gerard's picture "My Four Years in Germany," is also distributing Triangle and Keystone productions in that territory on an exclusive arrangement with the Western Import Company, of New York.

Reports published in the South American press, which are confirmed by the opinions of Cine-Mundial's correspondents, point to "Damaged Goods," the Mutual production, as the most successful film shown in Chile during the year. The rights on this film were purchased by Pairoa & Herrera, of Santiago.

"Where Are My Children?" (Universal) made a decided hit with the Argentinian public. The box-office value of this picture was enhanced by the fact that the municipal authorities attempted to bar its exhibition on the ground of immorality.

Among the Exporters.

Arthur J. Lang, export manager of the Nicholas Power Company, writes from Havana that competition in the motion picture business in Cuba has reached an alarming state. "The cut-throat competition here," he states, "is nothing short of scandalous, and I cannot understand how any of the exchanges will make anything out of their business unless there is a change, and a radical one, in their methods." However, Mr. Lang makes the following encouraging remarks in the course of his letter: "Cuba is very prosperous and the attendance at the cinema shows is big and increasing all the time. As a matter of fact, all business here is booming and nothing seems too good for any one in spite of the high cost of living."

Jacobo Glucksmann, New York representative for Max Glucksmann, of Buenos Aires, is in possession of a cablegram advising that the head office of the firm has already subscribed $10,000 to the Third Liberty Loan. This is in addition to what will be taken by the New York branch and follows subscriptions to the First and Second Liberty Loans by the Buenos Aires office.

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., announces the sale of "The Garden of Allah" for Java and of the Metro specials "Lest We Forget" and "Blue Jeans" for Argentina. These last two pictures were secured by the North American Motion Pictures, Inc., of New York and Buenos Aires.

The Robertson-Cole Company, Times Building, New York, has started an aggressive advertising campaign in the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking markets. Its initial offering to the trade in those territories is comprised of about 23 special features, 4 multiple-reel "Four-Square" pictures, 2 "Crest" productions and the "Jester" comedies.

"The Struggle Everlasting" and "An Accidental Honeymoon," the two Harry Rapf's productions with Florence Reed and Robert Warwick respectively, were launched on the foreign market in the May issue of Cine-Mundial. Announcement is made by Jacobo Glucksmann that he is preparing the largest shipment of film ever made to Buenos Aires by the New York office of Max Glucksmann, 500,000 feet of positive now being ready for delivery to the steamship company. Of this lot, about 200,000 feet are Triangle productions.

Rob Wagner Between Covers

Saturday Evening Post Stories of Filmland Now Issued in Book Form by the Century Company.

UNDER the title of "Film Folk," the Century Company has issued in book form eight of the earliest of the Rob Wagner stories of motion pictures and their making, with thirty-one full-page illustrations from photographs.

It is a singular thing that we should have had to wait so long for a faithful narrator of the doings in picture-land, but it was six years after the motion picture became a craze that there was given to the reading public descriptive matter that was at once authentic and interesting. It was through no lack of endeavor, for the early years of the pictures were marked by a mass of material that was written either by those who could write interestingly, but who had but a superficial knowledge of their subjects or by those who knew their subject but who failed to interest. Mr. Wagner is about the only writer who combines the two essentials, and it is welcome news that the best of his work has been assembled in a more permanent and available form than its original in the pages of the Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Wagner knows film making and film makers from top to bottom, from the center to the circumference, and he has the most happy faculty of telling what he knows in a manner that is more than interesting. It is human, fascinating and, above all, absolutely correct. He is retailing no second-hand information, no knowledge picked up in a hurried trip through a single studio. He speaks of every phase of the business through intimate personal knowledge, and he gives a series of pictures of the studios and studio life that is worthy of classification as literature. In his foreword he speaks of a college professor who regreted that the birth of the Elizabethan drama was not as carefully chronicled for the benefit of future generations, and while he affects to think lightly of the compliment, his learned correspondent has expressed a great thought. The birth of the motion picture has been adequately recorded.

The chapters selected for this first volume (for it is to be hoped that others will follow), include the stories of the leading man, the leading woman, the cameraman, the director, the extra man, the studio "mother," the publicity man and the script editor. This broadly covers the ground, but there is room for at least another volume. The book contains 356 pages and is priced at $2.

MADGE KENNEDY SPEAKS AT STRAND.

The audience which packed the New York Strand theater to the doors on Sunday, April 21, was treated to an agreeable surprise in the appearance on the stage of Madge Kennedy, star of Goldwyn Pictures, who spoke briefly but stirringly in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan.

Miss Kennedy's appearance at the Strand followed her successful trip to Detroit, where she appeared at the Kunsky theaters, and to Philadelphia, where she spoke at the Stanley.

Plenty of Suitable Educational Pictures Now on the Market to Start School Programs.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

IT IS very interesting to read the views of the editors of many of the school publications with regard to the place of the moving pictures in the schools.

All agree that the pictures possess certain educational powers, but the views as to their adaptability are strangely at variance; some are commendably broad and encouraging, others are somewhat hesitating and halting, while a few, very few, are still in the painful state of a limited acquaintance of either the pictures or their powers; one, only one we are glad to say, passes over the immediate possibilities of the good of the pictures by a vain and foolish reaching out for the improbable and unnecessary, when he refuses to endorse or aid moving pictures in the schools through the medium of his paper "until the pictures synchronize with an explanatory talking machine" truly a pitiable state of mind, and a lamentable lack of comprehension of the nature and powers of the picture. There is, however, one idea running through the minds of all school authorities with whom we have come in touch, and that is that there are either not sufficient truly educational pictures to warrant them entering into the matter with enthusiasm, or that the producers are not sufficiently catering to the needs of the schools and that there is too much commercialism to contend with. It is easy to answer these doubting Thomases. There are not only plenty of suitable pictures ready at hand now, but positively more than can be used in making the required beginning of the uses of pictures in the schools; there are also producers who are giving a justifiable amount of attention to school pictures, their further productions are dependent upon the reception of their present efforts by the schools now; the "too much commercialism" is only that necessary business surrounding new enterprises and business relationships which will decrease as the use of the picture increases.

Lacking Pedagogical Principals.

There is a justifiable reason advanced that the pictures now before the schools are "lacking pedagogical principals." If this is meant to suggest that the pictures cannot be used in harmony with the text books perhaps for the present we must confess failure at this point, this does not, however, prevent us from saying that the criticism is a most unnecessary one, and one not affecting the main point as to the powerful auxiliary aid of the pictures.

Will it surprise some of our interested readers to know that for years an endeavor has been made to arrange with publishers of school text books, to harmonize the relationship of the books and the pictures; that these publishers have given the matter their consideration and have refused to proceed with the same for "commercial reasons." The writer has come in touch personally with one of the largest school text books publishers in the United States, only to learn that the change would be so great (no matter how good) that it would affect their business; it will here be seen that "commercial reasons" are more considered by school book publishers than by picture producers. This, however, should not be advanced by any one as a sufficient reason for not using the pictures as an aid to teaching; for the time being, the place for the pictures is the school auditorium and not the school classroom, it is self evident that the refusal to use pictures in the auditorium because they cannot be used in the classroom is an exceedingly prejudiced and ill-judged one. It is not for educators above all others to expect that completion and perfection should outrun development; they are denying for the moving pictures those very principles they are supposed to teach their scholars, if they were so to invert their expectations of their scholars' requirements in the same way that they are inverting their demands of moving pictures, they would expect a high school graduation from the kindergarten and brand as incompetent any pupil not fulfilling that requirement.

Proofs From Experience.

There are many schools and colleges where the moving pictures are in use, in some of these places they have had a thorough trial of several years; all with great profit. We have yet to hear the strange—and we admit unexpected—experience that they have failed in any way to reach the highest expectation demanded of them. It is, therefore, the more surprising that with so many witnesses testifying to their advantages that there are still so many reluctant followers; surely they have confidence in their colleagues, that which not one but a number have done, all can do. If any of our readers are still in the doubtful class we shall only be too glad to put them in touch with schools and colleges which have used the moving pictures with great profit in their work, and with great advantage to their scholars; so much so that the more we know of these things the more we are sorry for those who do not know them, and are still groping in that darkness which accompanies a lack of progressiveness and always is accompanied with a certain amount of prejudice; the abolition of prejudice will put the moving pictures in thousands of schools.

Interesting Educationals

"Following the Course of the Cayuse" (Educational).

THE joys of the open road viewed from the back of a western horse otherwise known as a cayuse are urged upon the spectator by Robert C. Bruce in this picture which takes us on a delightful trip through Glacier Park in Montana. On the "upper deck" of the cayuse we followed the trail over hazardous passes into the snow-filled valleys of the upper mountains. There are as everyone knows scenes of great beauty in Glacier Park, many of which we meet in a general way without being bothered with names. The center of interest is the pack train, the man and his dog and a few others who move against mountain and sky, past wonderful waterfalls and other lovely sights.

"Trinidad" (Pathe).

This second largest island of the British West Indies is here shown in intimate detail. The natives are seen in their towns and villages, at the corner grocery, building bamboo houses with thatched roofs, driving ox carts, fishing, doing the family washing, bathing and burying their dead. Glimpses of a Mohammedan mosque in course of construction are also shown. This gives a very comprehensive idea of life on this interesting island.

"Tacoma, Puget Sound and the San Juan Islands" (Ford).

This reel of film contains considerable that is interesting, although its last named subject is incomplete. Scenes in and about Tacoma and Olympia give a good idea of that part of the country. Tacoma 300 feet above sea level on Commencement Bay is presented as a commercial town with a busy water front, and prosperous looking business center. Olympia's residential section is nicely illustrated and also Wright Park and Point Defiance Park. Here also is shown that peculiarly modeled building called the Temple of Justice, and also the home of the Governor of Washington. The San Juan Islands, famous for their scenic beauty, number 172, we are told; but we are shut off from viewing their beauties after one or two brief glimpses of their shores. A Liberty Loan cartoon closes the reel.

"The Elixir of Life" (Paramount-Bray).

The 117th issue of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph presents an interesting illustration of the orange industry in California. The scenes of the picture were photographed in San Bernardino County and show the picking of the fruit in a large orchard. Attention is drawn to the fact that oranges are never torn from the branch by the hand, but are clipped at the stem. The fruit before being placed on the market is sorted to remove decayed specimens, after which it is placed in the grading machine. The final move is to wrap each orange by hand in the tissue paper in which it is handed out to us at the fruiterers, and pack them in boxes for the purpose, ready for the market.

"Simple Water Plants and Animals" (Paramount-Bray).

Some of the peculiar organisms of stagnant water magnified 200,000 times are shown in the 117th release of the Pictograph. This is a subject that has been filmed many times, and is therefore not new to the general public, but it is nevertheless intensely interesting. The studies shown, and which have been made under the lens of powerful microscope are a part of a series being offered by Dr. R. A. Spaeth, Professor of Biology at Yale University, and present quaint forms of life, each of which has been studied individually. Some of these forms resemble plants, but are found on close observation to possess the life and habits common to animal organisms.

"Wild Goats and Sheep" (Educational).

One of the most fascinating of the Ditmars animal series presents wild goats and sheep at the zoo, showing how they are given there as much of the atmosphere of their native haunts as possible. The rocky mountain goat, for instance, is given a runway to the roof of his special apartment as a recompense for the mountain heights which he has been forced to leave behind him. Then there are Barbary wild sheep, which are found on the African deserts, and the Himalayan tahr and other varieties of the sheep and goat family. Some scenes show these animals on snow-clad uplands; others show them being cornered and caught, and afterward placed in a crate for shipment. Wild dogs which are a menace to certain varieties in certain localities are also shown. An interesting number.

"Bread Making As They Did It a Thousand Years Ago" (Universal).

The 70th issue of the Screen Magazine illustrates primitive methods of making bread. In the picture we see the natives of the West Indies making bread in exactly the same way that their ancestors made it in centuries past, and baking it in an oven which has a fire built right inside of it. In St. Kitts, Leeward Islands, natives use flour made from the Cassava plant. The picture shows the making of the flour previous to its being converted into bread.

Cleveland Progresses

Sane Methods of Cinema Club Wins Goodwill of Exhibitors and Places Business on Firmer Basis.

AN interview with Miss Bertelle Lyttle, one of the directors of the Cleveland Cinema Club, disclosed a number of things in connection with the aspect of the moving picture game in that city which will be of interest to workers in the better film movement. This club, which is a member of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films is unique in the sense of its being composed of representatives from all of Cleveland's women's clubs, and has been working from the top down rather than pursuing the old-fashioned method of working from the bottom up. The moving picture situation in Cleveland was previously handled by the Women's Civic Club until it was recognized that it was an educational art rather than a civic matter.

In Cleveland there are in the neighborhood of 175 moving picture theaters, and it is interesting to note that of this number from 90 to 100 are now advertising daily in either one of the Cleveland papers. By pressure being brought to bear in the right direction, and suggestions accepted by exhibitors who recognized that the cooperation offered meant not interference but better business, these advertisements follow closely the pattern of the regular theater ads, stating not merely the name of the theater, but its whereabouts, the name of the feature which is to be presented, and when possible the names of other pictures, including educationals that are to be presented on the same program. With these advertisements appearing on a page devoted daily to moving picture news and reviews, it can be easily understood that the business in Cleveland with the women of the city backing it in a business like way rather than in the too frequent spirit of narrow-minded criticism, is in a flourishing condition.

Help has also been given the exhibitor by these women in various difficulties encountered in the exchanges. By keeping account of larger productions which have shown in their city they have even been able to intervene in cases of overcharge on second and third run pictures, thereby making it possible for neighborhood theaters to have the advantage of noted productions at nominal charges.

Another matter which the Cleveland Cinema Club intends to agitate for the benefit of the Cleveland exhibitors, exchanges, and the films themselves, is that of setting aside Monday as the exhibitor's poorest day, for the exhibition of films scheduled for release. The idea is to exhibit the films in one of the theaters, starting at nine o'clock on Monday morning, devoting the entire day to this purpose, thereby giving all an opportunity of viewing films which they intend to book at the same time, saving the wear and tear on films, which would be occasioned by frequent running for separate individuals.

The first year of the Cleveland Cinema Club's work has indeed born good fruit; and it would be well for other organizations with similar views to pursue with the same systematic earnestness the methods through which they have obtained such excellent results.

A Suggestion for the Producer

Cull Long Lived Subjects From Old News Reels for Use on Educational Programs in Schools and Colleges at Nominal Charges.

IT IS not infrequent for news reels to contain in their makeup what might be termed long lived subjects which are of unlimited educational interest; and a suggestion sent to the Motion Picture Educator with regard to the further use of these short bits of film may not come amiss to the producer. In educational institutions there is usually a limit to the funds supplied for purposes of animated illustration, and it is not always possible for them to take advantage of first-run material; therefore it has been suggested that for the benefit of such cases that interesting educational reels could be assembled from suitable material culled from old news reels, and rented out at a reasonable figure. In this way films considered past their usefulness could be made to net the producer a small income and at the same time satisfy a need which is much felt in educational circles.

Banking for Our Sea Fighters

Paramount-Bray Pictograph Gives Interesting Illustration of How Uncle Sam Manages Banking Business of Our Boys of the Navy.

IT WAS a happy thought that prompted the editor of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph to include among the subjects of the 117th issue "Banking for Our Sea Fighters." The task is a large one and the systematic manner in which it is accomplished is shown in detail. Here we see one of the boys signing an allotment paper which states the exact amount of his salary which he wishes to have sent at regular intervals to his family. To this allotment is attached a card with the name and address of the receiver, and of each a separate platinum plate is made. The checks as they are sent out are signed by the head of the department with ten fountain pens, one of which he handles personally while the other nine move in conjunction by means of a mechanical device. These checks are inspected a second time before being mailed to their owners. Secretary Daniels appears in the picture and also a message to the public in his own hand writing.

"Patrolling the Snow-Clad Alps"

Fifth of the Series of Official Italian War Pictures at the Rivoli.

ONE of the most interesting of the series of the Official Italian War Pictures, which is being exhibited at the Rivoli theater, illustrates the methods used by the Italians in patrolling the Alps. Here we see the brave Italian soldiers cutting tunnels through solid walls of ice, or laboriously digging their way through the heavy snows of the upper slopes of the mountains. In some places otherwise inaccessible, rope ladders have been slung, and frequently rope railings are to be seen by which the men steady themselves as they mount. These soldiers toughened from lengthy sojourns under like conditions, can actually run up the steep slopes, where the way is not too difficult. Some of the most fascinating scenes of all show us the army on skis, and also the scouts who are obliged to hover near the enemy's line skating about the snow-clad mountains in pure white uniforms to make them less easily discernible against the snowy background. One of the great searchlights reflecting in its lens the hills on which it is focused is a feature of this particular number which also shows the firing of big guns into the enemy's lines.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A Suggestion of Ethics.

JULIAN M. SOLOMON, of the Service Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, raises a nice point when he rises to object that the Hart advertisement of J. W. Allender, of the Lyric, Spokane, is cast from an Artcraft mat, the Artcraft trade-mark being cropped to let in the Triangle signature. This is the cut reproduced in this department in the issue of April 13. It raises a nice point of ethics. These mats are supplied free to exhibitors using the Paramount or Artcraft pictures. There is the implied, if not the express, understanding that they are to be employed only in the advertisement of the pictures of those brands. A remedy would seem to be to copyright each design and license the mats for use only for the play for which they are issued, but such a step should not be necessary. It is understood that these mats are issued for the use of the specified brands, and to cast and use them with other brands is not courteous business. With so many Fairbanks and Hart reissues there doubtless is a strong temptation to save the cost of art work through acquiring mats of these stars, but it is not a pretty practice. Some houses may even use both the Triangle and Artcraft Hart pictures, in which case the exhibitor may argue that he has a right to use what is given him in any way he elects; but even here the argument falls, since the mats are given him for a specific purpose and not for general use.

McCormick's.

Here are some interesting McCormick advertisements from the Circle theater, Indianapolis. The Mabel Normand advertisement carries rather more type than the average, but Miss Normand spent so many years making Mickey that on her reappearance she needs some sort of re-introduction. The cut mudded up badly in the forms, and it might be Miss Normand or anyone else; but the idea is better than the press work. The cut on the right gives a nice example of the use of black masses. Fairbanks' shadow and the doorway back of the girl are naturally brought in, yet perfectly serve their purpose of throwing the figures into relief, yet they do not obscure them. This is one of the best-planned black and white we have seen in some time. The example on the left depends upon the humor of the situation for its appeal and this gets over well. We do not think that the Normand advertisement is quite up to Mr. McCormick's standard. We do not recall having seen before one of his advertisements carrying so much small type. A much better advertisement along the same lines is found in this five-sevens in which there is only 35 column inches against 39 for the three thirteens, and yet the story is more clearly told. It is strange, however, that none of those who are now engaged in recalling Miss Normand seem to remember the hit she made in the Vitagraph's Betty series before she went to the Biograph. One thing that marks the McCormick advertisements is the lack, as a rule, of much lettering in the blacks. It will be noted that he takes the white spaces for the announcement and leaves the black for the picture. This is excellent practise. The black on white is always easier read, it stands out better and leaves a deeper impression. This four-nines is reproduced from a proof, which gives a better result than the straight newspaper impression, but it comes out well on the newspaper page, for both were sent. To letter in too much announcement in the drawing is simply to throw space away. It is better to mortise the cut and set in the type in the white space thus created. This particularly applies to small letters. Anything smaller than a quarter-inch letter is almost certain to be lost, and even the quarter-inch is rather small for clear reading, and if the ink is not running well, or the paper soaks up too much of it, or if any one of a dozen other things happen, the cut goes off and the whole result is lost. It does not pay to trust too much to black grounds and white lettering. If you lost your cut, you at least have your type to work with, but if you put your lettering into the cut and then it goes bad, you lose your entire advertisement. If you employ an artist, require him to study the handling of blacks and whites, and keep after him until he can now and then get an effect such as is shown in the Fairbanks on the ladder in this paragraph. That is the sort of work that is most effective and that is least apt to be hurt by poor press work or bad stereotyping. The next example shows how Mr. McCormick shifts his cuts. The smaller cut shows the upper right-hand portion of the cut to the right. It was simply sawed along the angle to the edge. If you have an obliging printing office they will cast up the advertisement from the mat for you and saw off the discarded portions. The full drawing is made for the larger cut and then such portions of this are taken as may be required. The lower portion of the cut might have been put to similar use had it been desired. The last example shows the triple use of a design.

The two outside examples are pretty much alike and are interesting only as showing how two compositors may vary in setting almost precisely the same copy. That in the middle shows the use of only the top part of the cut. You can do about the same sort of stunts with the mats supplied by the manufacturers. If you do not like the entire cut, take such parts as you do want and have the rest sawed off. If you cut off ornamental lettering because it is too large or too small or not just what you want, have the cut notched so that the type with which you replace the lettering can set squarely against the surface and you will have no trouble at all. Even in a small-town printing office much can be done to a cut cast from a mat. It is not like taking chances with an original cut. If you make a mistake you can cast another and try all over again. A lot of those Paramount mats could be used to better advantage if trimmed up to be practical, and it is a simple thing to do it.

Ruff Stuff.

Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty and Columbia, Portland, Oregon, has a new labor-saver. Instead of sending letters with his samples, he pins one of these cuts to the batch. We can gather that it is an inquiry as to whether we are going to pan it, can it, or hang the laurel wreath upon it, but that blot is a very subtle pun. It has sand glued to it to make it rough and so serve as a signature for Ruff (laughter and applause). We regret to note a tendency on his part to indulge in white letters on a background. Now and then he gets an excellent effect, but almost as often he gets something not particularly good. This advertisement for The Flames of Chance turned out well, though it is hard to read at first glance. Note the house signature in the top bar of the F and the description of the film in the middle bar of the E. The two letters just below the bomb are the Go, which is the Liberty slogan. Most of the Ruff ads are now signed by the Apostles of Originality, whoever they may be, but there is such a thing as getting too original, and even apostles of originality should not monkey too much with reverse cuts until they learn how they will work. This works well, as does an example previously shown, but there is too much of a tendency to run the letters together in some of the examples. Lately we spoke of Ruff's use of filler titles, but he caps the climax when he puts the one-reel at the top of the feature, as shown at the right in this next example. As we have explained, the Finley pictures are a local production and stand more booming. The left-hand example shows the same advertisement pulled in from eight to five and a half inches. Note in this latter Ruff's

2 day
2 morrow
2 days in all
That's all.

It is those little touches that the people come to look for, just as they look for more or less freaky advertising now and then anyhow. That is one of the secrets of Ruff's success. He gets far enough from the beaten path to make the people look for his advertising instead of waiting until the advertising comes along and speaks to them. We think Ruff gets something really new when he works the star portrait as supporters to the house signature. The Dorothy Dalton advertisement carries twin pictures of her leaning against the flower box one-sheet frames that Ruff first used in Spokane. He promises a photograph of these new and improved boxes soon, and will be held to his promise. The other example of this pair is pretty because of its simplicity. There is nothing in particular to be said for the story, so Ruff does not try to overboom it and get in bad with his audience; instead, he tries to get the atmosphere with the pine trees and lets it go at that.

Should Be Reversed.

Loew's Boulevard theater, New York, sends in a well laid postcard in red and black, but makes the mistake of using the red for the body type and the black for the display. This is a reversal of the proper scheme. The reader is used to reading black impression. He will have trouble getting through a lot of six point red, unleaded. On the other hand the black does not give the emphasis that the red offers. Another little thing is that the front of the card carries no red, evidently being a second impression. Had the cards been cut double size they could have been printed in red and black on both sides with no greater number of impressions, being cut apart after the run. Red Galt, Ont., gave two children's matinees. The first was in the morning, and the admission was five cents. Ten cents was charged at the afternoon show, but in each instance the house paid the war tax and made it a flat rate.

Here's a Really New One.

Every little while P. E. Coe, of the Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, La., gets an Idea that should be spelled with a capital initial. His latest is a variation on the old idea of giving a free matinee admission on Friday to the person who presented the weekly program. The idea then was to train the public to keep the program for consultation. This is not necessary these days, since the public is now used to the program. Mr. Coe's idea is different. He wants the people to read and remember, so he prints this offer on his program:

A FREE ADMISSION.

Will be given to any person who presents at the box office a copy of the inside of this program. Copy must be original long hand or typewritten—no carbon copies will be accepted.

Writing out an item gives ten times the mental impression that the mere reading would. It fastens the items in the memory. Mr. Coe not only has the best example of the condensed program of any exhibitor in the country, but he has one of the most attractively phrased announcements as well. If a person starts to copy off that program he is certain to want to see more than one day's attraction. He can't help it. Mr. Coe makes him. He gets one free admission, but he pays for two or more nights, and he seldom goes alone, so there is money even on that first free admission. And just as a side line, Mr. Coe offered the courtesies of the house to all red headed girls during the first day's showing of "Empty Pockets," in which, it will be remembered, five carmine blondes largely figure.

How's This?

If you want to help the sale of War Savings Stamps, why not lay in a stock of the big four dollar stamps and give a free admission to every person who trades in a card for one of the four dollar stamps, and paying the bonus? That should work better than many of the other schemes mentioned.

Well Planned.

The Strand, Milwaukee, sends in two good examples of paneled advertisements in which the rule work does not destroy the value of the advertisement, but rather gives emphasis to the announcement. This is because the rules are used to hold the advertisement together and not to break into unrelated sections what should be read as a whole.

In the Walthall advertisement, the use of the player's portrait will attract more attention than the heavy featuring of his name, and the choice of a large type (an 18-point) makes the text readable. About the only objection to the phrasing is that "opening at the Strand today for an engagement of four days." Of course the newspaper carries the date, and if The Whip is coming the 21st then the run presumably stops on the 20th, but it would have been easy and much more clear to have said "opening today (March 17th) for an engagement of four days." Much better is the "Today-Monday-Tuesday-Wednesday" of the Normand advertisement. Both advertisements stand out from the page on which they appear and are the first to catch the eye in spite of special drawings and reverse cuts used by other amusement enterprises. White space and direct statement will always rise superior to a crowded space, whether that space be drawing or type. It is a lesson few seem to have learned as yet, but this is all the better for the few who do have the good sense to plan their advertisements to be read by everyone instead of merely by the confirmed fan who is willing to worm through a Chinese puzzle if it concerns the pictures.

All but the Cornet.

The Lafayette, Newport, R. I., uses a plain four-pager about 6x9, plain white paper, giving the two changes for the week. The heading announces that the house features its orchestra; not the Lafayette orchestra, but Jerome H. Stewartson's. This is not a very good policy. If the leader elects to quit or to go over to another house, it leaves the Lafayette in a rather poor position. And we don't think much of a leader, no matter how heavily he may be featured, who puts a cornet solo in front of the feature. No matter how good the cornetist may be, the instrument is too loud and harsh in tone to serve as prelude to a quiet feature. It is a good plan to feature the music, but select a musician who has some sense of showmanship to lay the program or else take the job from him.

A Matter of Judgment.

Arhur P. Kelly, who does the advertising for the Regent, Piccadilly and Gordon theaters, Rochester, N. Y., probably voices the thoughts of many others when he writes:

> We only run two ads a week, usually, on Saturday or Sunday, and again on Wednesday or Thursday so it is always necessary for us to carry a notice of the coming shows, although some film advertising experts are against it on the ground that it detracts from the current attraction—an argument with which I do not agree—unless the coming attraction is made too conspicuous.
> For the Fairbanks' ads I have coined the phrase, "The man who made the smile famous," which I always use. If there is anything in any of these worth passing on to some other exhibitor, do it; if not, throw them away.

Mr. Kelly advertises each change of bill—the program changing twice a week. The examples shown are from the Sunday paper and drop 4½ inches across two columns. One underline drops four lines of six-point and the other only one. It is not the use of the underline that is declared to be poor form. If the matter is more carefully studied, it will be found that the objection is not against underlining, but against the effort to make one Sunday space serve two or more changes of program, giving to each change an equal display, or, perhaps, putting a later and more prominent feature into the position of honor. There can be no objection to the use of a brief underline, and much may be said in defense of its use. In another example, Mr. Kelly gives Mrs. Castle almost as much publicity as the current attraction, and here he violates the rule. He neither advertises Mabel Normand well nor yet gives Mrs. Castle a proper display. In most localities it would pay to give Miss Normand practically all of a two-threes; yet he tries to pack his advertisement like a trunk and gets practically no result worth while. Either he judges his values badly or he is handicapped by a fluctuating appropriation. The Normand advertisement is distinctly bad. It scatters its fire too much. The Auction Block and Thais advertisements are good because they concentrate on the film next to be seen and to not seem to yield place to a more important film to come, and which, therefore, is presumably better worth waiting for. Mr. Kelly is wrong on Fairbanks, however. He is getting to be the man who made the smile nauseating.

Kind of Late.

Not along ago the Elmwood, Buffalo, in an insert to its program, ran a card from a patron, who suggested that the times of showing the feature be printed on the program. On the other side the house announced its willingness to do so. And yet they have read this department regularly, we know, and have seen all sorts of time tables discussed time and again. It takes more than a hint, apparently, to move some people.

A Three-in-One.

The Nixon News, Philadelphia, is a novelty in that it covers three houses, all on the same street and not very far apart. One is a vaudeville and the other two picture houses, and each gets a page a week with the front page given to the picture played at the vaudeville house. Philadelphia seems strong for doubling up on its programs, but this three-in-one works very nicely, about the only suggestion being that in the case of the picture houses a dash or full rule separate the two changes of program.

Plots and Plays.

EVIDENTLY the synopsis only mania is confusing the writers of photoplays, for some one, writing in evident good faith, puts up a proposition that may interest others when he says:

> I notice in your Technique of the Photoplay that you say that the plot should concern itself with three points, the protagonist, the antagonist and the objective, and that every action should have a direct bearing upon the fortunes of the protagonist. And yet I would point out that Dickens, who, you must grant, was a great novelist, often uses two or more persons of equal interest to the reader. Don't you think that your rule is sometimes too rigid in the light of the precedent cited?

In the first place Dickens was not a great novelist. But two of his works are generally admitted to approach the novel form—The Tale of Two Cities and Bleak House. He was a great writer of caricature—perhaps the greatest who has ever lived—but he was not a novelist, and even were he such the early Victorian form would scarcely be upheld as the model for the writer of today.

But the writer misses the main point. Photoplay more nearly approaches the stage than the fiction field in its form, and it is play construction and not the novel that must be followed. Dickens, with a hundred thousand words and more, might, if he desired, introduce several sets of characters and make them equally interesting; but these are merely multiple stories rather than a compact narrative, and sometimes he overworks coincidence like a novice in bringing about an interrelation of characters. Many of his books have supplied material for more than one play, and even Bleak House, perhaps the work most clearly approaching the true novel form, has been made to yield plays, in which Joe, Lady Deadlock and Hortense have been made the protagonists.

But it is not so much a question as to whether Dickens is a proper model as to whether the fiction form as such is to be followed, and the reply is no. Fiction is too diffuse. It depends too often upon words rather than action for its value. Literature cannot be transferred to the screen in the form of words. There are a few directors who can get over in picture some of the psychology of an author, and when this still rare class shall be increased, replacing the old-timers, we shall more nearly approach the true photoplay. But psychology cannot replace action; it must supplement the action story.

The demand for the synopsis only—the running story of the plot—has to some extent misled the untrained writer into the belief that the fiction form being used for the relation of the plot the technique of fiction may be employed. Perhaps a more fruitful source of error is the very general use of adaptations from works of fiction. Fiction is not used because it is the best form, but because it is the most available form at the present time. Not enough authors are writing photoplay plots of the same grade to make it safe to trust to the authors for a supply, and it is deemed safer to use novels for inspiration, even though some novels lend themselves but poorly to translation to the screen.

Photoplay really occupies a place between fiction and drama. It has the flexibility of movement of the novel. It does not require to be played in a given number of scenes, but may offer as many locations within reason as the author may call for. On the other hand, it calls for the swift movement and concentrated action of the play rather than the more leisurely progress of the written story. It calls for fewer leading characters that interest may not be too widely distributed. We believe that in time the story tensely told in two or three reels will be more general than the five to eight reel plays; that the value of a plot will be judged by its quality to entertain or thrill rather than the number of feet into which it has been made. This by no means dismisses the five-reel story or longer lengths, but, like the average magazine of today, the balance will lie in favor of the short, crisp tale in film rather than in the heavy, padded production that goes to five or six reels partly because the average exhibitor is accustomed to having a five-reel feature to go with his shorts and partly because a five-reel story will bring in more money than one in three reels.

From its very form photoplay seems best adapted to the short plot rather than the extended play. It is seldom possible to present a story in twelve reels that will not require so much interpolated explanatory matter as to kill the real interest. Now and then a story will seem to run to more than the limits of an evening's entertainment, but this is merely because the cutters lack skill or because the story was badly done in the first place. It must be short, sharp and dramatic or highly amusing to be true entertainment, and to be this it must follow the drama form rather than the fiction—even the fiction of the shorter lengths. There must be a clearly defined objective, and constant effort to reach that objective in the face of obstacle. Many short stories have no objective, perhaps not even an antagonist; they are merely light character sketches, pleasing and entertaining only because they are so well told, and this telling will not get over to the screen.

Literature, like art, has many forms and mediums. Each medium has its disadvantages as well as its advantages. No artist would dream of painting a heroic battle scene in water colors. The medium would not suit. He might, however, with slightly different treatment, paint a quiet landscape in both water colors and oils. In the same way some plots may be suited to both the printed page and the stage and capable of being translated to the screen, while many fiction stories are suited neither to the stage nor screen, and others may do fairly well on both stage and screen. Still others might be screened and yet not be capable of being made into stage plays.

At the present stage of production we have few editors, fewer directors and a pitifully limited number of manufacturers who are competent to judge the limitations of fiction. If a book is sold through several editions then the story must be good, and it is purchased for photoplay with no greater recommendation. The story specially written for the screen and conforming to its every requirement may be passed over, unread, merely because so many previously read stories have been impossible for screen production because the fiction form has been followed.

Merely because stories are bought in what seems to be a form of fiction does not mean that the technique of fiction should be followed. It should be planned as a photoplay with all the technique of the photoplay and then, and not until then, should be turned into synopsis form for the benefit of the editor who knows no better and the director who wants no better. Because continuities are not required, it does not follow that you no longer need to knew the technique of the screen. To the contrary you should be even more proficient than ever in photoplay technique that you may avoid the traps and pitfalls of the synopsis only.

The motion picture is too valuable an addition to the entertainment field to be permitted to drop. It will never lapse into obscurity. It has brought good acting and good plays to the smallest hamlets and has sounded the knell of the cheap fly-by-night stage productions. There are no "number two" companies in pictures; no cheapened, shoddy parodies of an original. When pictures come into their own, producers will be more liberal with new copies, will no longer grind a film until it is in rags, but even the "sixty-day" man will be able to project a reasonably fresh print. In that day, too, we shall have more directors of mentality and fewer members of the I-knew-him-when club holding their positions by virtue of their past intimacy with the men at the head of things. We shall have real producers who will demand real photoplays written directly for the screen, and when that time comes it will be well to be prepared.

Sincerity.

Allan Dwan, in an article in the Picture Play Magazine for May, writes that a director cannot get inspiration from the choppy sentences of the continuity, adding "the author expects the director or reader to catch the thrill that he experienced when writing, but he fails to express on paper." It is the first time we ever knew that the director looked to the continuity for inspiration. We always supposed that he got that from the synopsis and then looked to the plotted action to see how the story was told. If he did that he could get the inspiration; not from the matters of little moment, as in the example cited by Mr. Dwan, but from his own ability to reconstruct situations when fully told. Mr. Dwan makes out a singularly weak case for himself—which is more than is to be expected, but he does emphasize the necessity for presenting to the director and the editorial reader ALL of the idea in the synopsis, and present it in such a manner than even the director—who too often is too stupid to see fine points—cannot overlook its merits. You must write so good a story that you can fire the limited imagination of a self-satisfied, self-centred, somewhat ignorant third-rate actor who got into the directing end in the old days when they were careless. If you can do that, then you can sell your script, if there is a market, to the few competent men as well.

No Polisher.

We are obliged to several who have sent in suggestions for a new brain polisher, but there will be no more polishers for a time. Handling one of these polishers involves between 40 and 50 hours of extra work, and we have not the time to spare for this extra work at present now that illness has put a time limit on the number of hours we are permitted to work each day.

Avoid Your Friends.

Your worst enemy is the friend who tells you how good your synopses are. He or she knows nothing whatever about it, and merely confuses your own judgment. The picture theater manager is least of all apt to know about picture making, and actors are as bad if not worse. Rely on your own judgment, and upon that alone. It will be better even that your friends do not see the stories unless they appear upon the screen.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

From Mr. Rothapfel.

Samuel L. Rothapfel, managing director Rialto and Rivoli theaters, New York City, writes the following letter concerning my account of the trip to Pennsylvania, published in a recent issue of the paper:

> Dear Mr. Richardson: I have read your account of the Pennsylvania trip with interest and with pride. Such a tribute coming from you is, to say the least, a tribute indeed, and I am surely grateful and appreciative of your broadness and manliness in the matter. With regard to your misunderstanding of me and my work in the past, I believe your error was partly due to statements attributed to me, which really emanated elsewhere.
> My work is my life. I try hard to do the right thing, as I see it. It is my earnest desire to be a friend to the exhibitor, but some of them do not understand or interpret my attitude correctly. It may be that if they would pause and for a moment consider things as they are they would form a more correct judgment. What has any exhibitor ever given me? What have I to gain from the exhibitor? And if the exhibitor can do nothing for me, what other possible motive can or could I have in seeking to aid him, other than pure good will and the desire to benefit, as best I may, the industry to which we all owe so very much? I have but one hope and one ambition, and that is to make the motion picture an object of respect and admiration—to make the motion picture a form of entertainment which will reach the highest pinnacle of possible attainment and finally take its place among the other arts. My constant endeavor is to get a maximum of efficiency in high class entertainment from the material supplied by our producers.
> So strenuous is my work that if the pace I have set is maintained I will never live to enjoy an old age. Should I be spared, however, to see the exhibitor, the producer and the exchange men linked together as a unit, presenting a solid front of endeavor for the betterment and idealization of the industry; if I live to see the motion picture in that unassailable position in which I would like to see it, then I will be perfectly content to withdraw and will feel that my effort has not been in vain.
> Believe me, Mr. Richardson, your words of commendation were an inspiration. I trust the future will bring an even beter understanding of the work I am trying to do, and that that work will continue to merit your approval.
> With every best wish I am, very sincerely yours,

I believe there is nothing to add, except to say that Mr. Rothapfel is not exaggerating when he says he works hard. It is an absolute fact that he personally supervises the staging of his programmes, often working all night in the endeavor to get everything exactly right. He selects much of the music himself, plans the effects and most of the conceptions which have made the Rialto and Rivoli famous, packing them to capacity several times a day, and attends to many other details. He is gifted with a fine sense of the spectacular and things spectacular (that term may be applied in many ways, mind you) always "make a hit" in the show business. His theater lighting is beautifully spectacular, the music is spectacular (and beautiful), and his staging of the silent drama is charming.

Sensible Exchange Manager.

Recently I received several complaints from projectionists with regard to condition of films sent out from a certain branch exchange of one of the big producing corporations. One projectionist finally sent in what seemed to be an example of inspection carelessness beyond all forbearance. I at once referred the matter to the home office of the corporation and shortly thereafter received a letter from the branch exchange reading, in part, as follows:

> * * * "The Welsh Singer," featuring Florence Turner, was shipped to the ——— theater without inspection, due to the fact that the film scheduled for the exhibitor at this theater was not returned by the theater using it previously, and we were forced to go down to the express office and get "The Welsh Singer," it being the only one available. * * * The patches absolutely were not made by any inspector in this exchange; also they could not have been made by any one who knows anything at all about film. They were made by an operator, and we might say that if we took time to criticise the manhandling of films by operators in many theaters we would very soon have an endless line of complaints to register against them. * * * We appreciate the spirit in which your letter is written and assure you we have a most excellent inspection department. * * * We feel just as you do about matters of this kind, and assure you of our co-operation along these lines, for the interest of our customers and of the business in general.

This exchange manager may have been, and I still think he was, a little careless in some of the instances brought to my attention; also he should have put a slip in the shipment of reels stating that the films have not been inspected and why they had not been inspected. The projectionist who received them, and who was certainly not to blame for the manhandling they had had from a previous projectionist, would have understood and would have felt very much better about it. But anyhow, instead of biting holes in the corner of his desk because of my criticism, this exchange manager wrote a sensible, calmly worded letter, frankly admitting the wrong and explaining it. Whatever his occasional errors may be, this man talks like a real manager and I do not expect to have any more complaints concerning his office. I thoroughly agree with him as to the butchery of films by projectionists, but what do you expect? You, Mr. Exchange Manager, turn over to a theater a programme of films worth from $200 to $800 every day, without knowing one single thing about the conditions under which they will be used, nor do you check up damage in any even half-way efficient manner. You expect a cheap inspector to "inspect" and report upon an $800 programme of films which were as likely as not run by a cheap projectionist, on a projector in utterly wretched shape as to repair and in a more or less out-of-adjustment condition, and as likely as not run at race horse speed. You expect this cheap inspector to "inspect" this $800 programme at race horse speed, with net result that the report you get as to damage done is not worth one single little tinker's dam, except as to damage so very bad that more or less film is utterly ruined. But ten feet of cracked sprocket holes, due to speeding and excessive tension or to excessive take-up tension, will only be found by the sheerest accident. When you take on a theater as customer do you take any steps to ascertain the competency of the projectionist in that theater? Do you take any steps to ascertain the condition of the projectors in that theater? Do you find out whether or not the projectionist really attends to his projection, or projects a picture while doing other chores? Do you seek to ascertain whether or no the operator projects at normal speed, having his tension set FOR normal speed, or whether your films are shot through like a comet gone mad, with three times the gate tension there should be, all of which must, does and will raise the mischief with your films. Dear me, no! Of course you don't. You just ask "how much will you pay," settle that point and * * * kick about the butchery which inevitably follows.

This complaint came from a large film center. If the exchanges of that center exercised ordinary common sense, plus good business judgment, and combined to put out enough competent inspectors (competency to be considered before cheapness—heresy, I know, but essential) to cover every theater served by that city once every fifteen days. the exchanges of that city to each one deposit a substantial cash forfeit obligating them to refuse service to any theater in which conditions are condemned by an inspector prevailed until such time as conditions were remedied, allowing the theater ten days to comply, with right of appeal to a committee of exchange managers representing the whole, manhandling of films would STOP. Of course the foregoing is a rough plan, but in some form it is practical. A lot of expense and bother? Sure it is! But look at the monetary value of the goods involved. If properly carried out it would PAY. Suppose there are six exchanges in the city, each serving only ten theaters, the average programme being six reels. That makes 60 reels per exchange, or 360 reels all told. Total value, when new, say $40,000. That amount of highly fragile property is worth some attention, is it not? I would imagine that two inspectors ought to get around once every fifteen days, and really good men should be had at $50 per week, paying their own expenses, except carfare. That would make $150 per week and carfare? Say $150 per week all told, or $25 per exchange. Don't you think it would save you more than that sum in damage? Of course there would be a fight. The inspectors should be a bit diplomatic. Exhibitors would swell up and sputter about "interfering with MY business," and some of the more unreasonable ones would try to get service from some other point for awhile. But if done carefully and backed up by an iron-clad agrement, made to be KEPT, not broken, it would win, and to the huge benefit of all concerned. Maybe two inspectors, or even one, could do it all. I do not know.

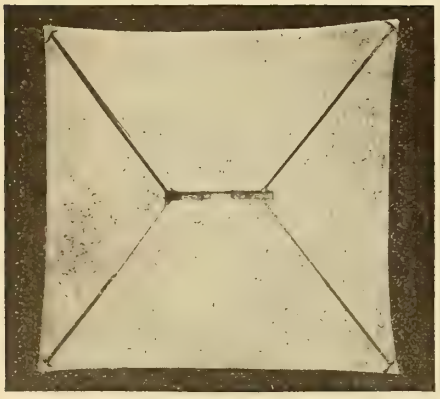
Texas Made.

Perry J. Sherman, Corpus Christi, Texas, writes as follows:

> Attached picture will give an idea of the screen we are putting out down here in the land of the long-horn and cactus. These screens are giving excellent service. If you have any certain person or corporation whom you would like to have test the screen you have but to supply name and address. Am not looking for free advertising, but want you to know just what we have. The screen requires no screws, nails, rope or strings for mounting. It is stretched sufficiently tight to pull out all wrinkles and present a perfectly flat surface. Seems to me the army and the Y. M. C. A. would find it a very practical device for mounting of screens for field work. When folded the screen and stretcher form a neat and very compact bundle, but little longer and not so deep as an ordinary suitcase. Could I secure a copy of the address delivered before the Illuminating Engineers' Society, and, if so, how? Am a bug for absorbing dope of this sort.



Friend Sherman also sent sketch of an invention of his own, designed to give warning of ending of film in time to prepare for change-over. I cannot approve of it, however, since it might cause a spark, and as it is attached to the upper magazine a spark would be objectionable. Might never do any harm, but— You can secure copy of address by addressing Secretary Illuminating Engineering Society, 25 West 39th street, New York City. Don't know what its price will be, but probably about 25 cents. It is not yet ready for distribution. As to the screen and stretcher—why, your information is too meager for me to make intelligent comment.

So Do We.

Henry P. Vogt, Olympia theater, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, orders question booklets, and says:

> Just a word with regard to the Projection Department you are conducting in the Moving Picture World. In my judgment it is very much the best of them all, and I always am looking for the next World to arrive. The credit is all yours for the good work, and I am with you, Brother Richardson, until the place where the Pastor says Bob Ingersoll went freezes over. Have been operating for five years, but still have much to learn, and am willing to learn it.

Isn't it queer how truly great minds run in the same channel. I, too, have the idea that this particular department occupies the front pew; also, so long as your Uncle Dudley is on the job he intends renewing its lease on that pew each year; also, again, there is no room between our pew and the pulpit for any other pew and—there you are! Righto, Brother Vogt! It is the solid ivory top who either honestly thinks he has accomplished the impossible and learned all there is to learn, or who knows he still has much he ought to learn, but is too lazy, ornery, or stupid, to make the necessary effort necessary to advance his knowledge, who never gets ahead. Also, he is, nine times in ten, a non-progressive as applied to others. He ridicules, sneers at and even curses (under his breath, usually) those who do study, work hard and forge ahead. My compliments to you, friend Vogt, and may your tribe increase. The booklets have gone forward.

Film Waxer.

Again let me recommend to exchanges and producers the film waxer manufactured by the Projection Supply Company of Cleveland. It is a corking good machine and well worth its price to either producer or exchange. It will last for years and its use will decrease damage to film from emulsion deposit on tension springs.

Separate Local.

L. A. Young, Hartford, Connecticut, says:

> Just a few lines from the Nutmeg State to let you know we are still on deck. Since you visited us we have decided an all-projectionist local is better for us than a "mixed" local. So we are now Local Union 486, at your service. What do you think of it? Note in your—pardon, "our" department (That's better, brother. Your apology is accepted.—Ed.) recent issue that Joseph E. Bliven, New London, inquires for the Wm. Rhodes Film Cleaning Fluid. Mr. Rhodes was located in Hartford the last I knew of him. If I see him will sic him onto friend Bliven. I have a can of his cleaner now. Suspect it is carbon tetrachlorid. It works very well, but rapidly, evaporating more quickly than either. Local 486 has every member working, and most of us are pretty well satisfied. I am, as you may remember, at the Strand. Projection is, on the whole, very good. Most of the faults therein may be traced to friend manager, a few of whom are still innoculated with the "speed-'em-up" virus. This type of manager usually is pretty shy on the purchase of repair parts. This does not, praise be, apply to the Strand. Here we are allowed to get anything we want, within reason. Know you are busy, so will cease from troubling, with the remark that if you ever drive that one-lung Harley (Slander, pure and simple. It's a twice-lunger.—Ed.) in this direction don't forget to include Hartford. Local 486 will do the rest.

Letters from live wires are never a trouble. On the contrary, they are always welcome. And most of my correspondents are live wires. If they are not they don't correspond very long. Life is too short to bother with dead ones. I'm liable to drop in on you next summer most any time. I am a believer in all-projectionist locals. Mixed bodies seldom work well. Glad to know you have concluded to gang your own gait. Success to 486. May she live long and prosper.

Wants to Shake Hands.

Herman Taven, Manganese, Minn., says:

> Would like to shake hands with you, but am much too far away. If ever we meet I'll "buy." For I like people who can tell straight out what they think. And this you certainly can and do. Am in a country town. Bought an old projector, which was almost the first one I had ever seen. Have a big stone (weight 100 lbs.) hanging from the machine to steady it, and about 1,000 feet of hay wire to keep it from wiggling. Have no one to show me anything. Have never seen a first-class operating room, but thought I knew a whole lot about my own outfit until I started reading the Projection Department, and discovered I didn't know one cussed thing. Enclosed find four dollars for last edition of the Handbook. Maybe I might learn something, too!

Wel, Brother Taven, you sure gave me one good laugh anyhow. If you need more hay wire, or some more stones just—but probably you have enough. Golly! that's some considerable combination all right. Anyhow you're supplying that little community with amusement which it would not otherwise have, and your work therefore is of value. Remember, however, that the work of real artists depend upon that non-wiggling, weighted-down outfit, and the skill of the man who handles it, hence it is up to you to do the best you can. Anything less would be an injustice in many directions. Will be very glad to aid you at any time and in any possible way.

Information Wanted.

Mayo Foster, Nashville, Tenn., writes:

> Intend projecting 8-foot picture at 40 feet, nearly. What is least a. c. amperage with which I may expect a good picture on muslin screen in dark room? Will 25 be sufficient? Using Power's 5 head, with inside two-wing shutter. Both wings have same area, made that way by having a wide blade soldered to the narrow. Why was this done? Can I get more light at screen if I cut down shutter blade to its original dimensions.

Certainly you will get more light. Please don't ask me why some ingrowing bonehead pulled a stunt like that. Reduce narrow (flicker) blade to its original dimensions. I never tried projecting a picture with 25 amperes a. c. Maybe it could be done, using three-eighth or half-inch carbons—cored, of course. Here is a case where the Mazda lamp would be just the trick. I doubt your getting a very good result with less than 30 or 35 amperes a. c. I would not myself try less than 35. 25 would supply light enough to illuminate the 8-foot picture in a dark room all right, but the crater would be so very small that I don't believe you could maintain a clear field. Did any of our readers ever actually try 25 amperes a. c. on M. P. projection?

Up to Date Operating Room.

Guy Hill, Yakima, Washington, is going to try a Mazda outfit soon. He describes his projection plant as follows:

> Last time I wrote was working at the Empire, but am now at the Majestic, both houses being under same management. Have a most up-to-date operating room (One man who hasn't a "booth" anyhow.—Ed.), two Power's 6A's, a 50 ampere Wagner Converter, with duplex control, two American Auto Arc Controllers, Volt and Ammeter, dissolving stereopticon and spot lamp. Frederick Mercy owns all the theaters in this city. The Liberty, a new house, is almost ready to open. Expect to be working there by the time you get this letter. Will tell you about it later. Expect to try a Mazda outfit in this house

(Majestic) soon. Will let you know how it pans out. Will try a 13 foot picture at 85 feet. Have 30 ampere outfit coming. Do you think it will equal my 35 ampere d. c. arc? Have all the books on projection I have been able to procure, and am enclosing 40 cents for the question booklets. Best wishes to yourself and department.

Booklets have been sent. Would rather let you decide for yourself as between the Mazda and your present 35 ampere arc. Glad to have the report; also the photo you mentioned. You certainly have a very complete outfit. Evidently Mr. Mercy is not one of those who build a picture palace, get it all complete and then remember that, after all, an operating room is necessary. That too-numerous type of "exhibitor" usually builds a $50,000 theater and skirmishes around looking for two cheap, second-hand projectors.

He Horns In.

Fred H. Wood, chief operator and electrican Theatrette theater, Fort Scott, Kansas, whom I had the pleasure of meeting while in that city last spring, writes:

That it is some time since I last horned into the department is no evidence of somnambulence. Since your visit there have been a number of changes, and all for the better. First: Both the Pictureland and Theatrette have been remodeled and redecorated. Second: Equipment in the two named theators has been improved. Am now running two late model Motiographs (Theatrette), which are doing the work wonderfully well. And now for my real purpose of this letter: Will you supply me with address of some of the users of the Mazda lamp for projection; also please let me have your view as to their practicability and advisability. We have many letters from firms handling them, but their testimony cannot be regarded as unbiased. We have reports that life of lamps is so short that any saving in current is offset by excessive lamp renewal. We are getting a brilliant picture, using 110 volt a. c., but the local plant is so uncertain and the current so unsteady that we seek some method of improving conditions. I wish the best of luck to the department.

The editor has already set forth his views as to what the Mazda will and wont do at its present stage of development; also there are other articles to follow dealing with the same subject. Your incandescent projection lamps will cost you $7 each, and they will last their estimated life of 100 hours, provided they be not worked above capacity. But unless you have an absolutely rock-steady line voltage it will be imperative that you purchase, together with the outfit, an AUTOMATIC voltage regulator, which must be guaranteed to regulate within .5 of an ampere either way from normal and do it automatically. Unless this be done you may look out for trouble, with lamp renewals galore. The filament of the 750 watt lamp is calculated to reach a temperature which will burn out the filament in 100 hours when 20 amperes of current flows. Anything less dims your light, and even one ampere more will lessen the life of the lamp even though it be allowed to flow but for one minute; two amperes in excess for one or two minutes is a very serious matter indeed. There are now, however, automatic voltage regulators which work perfectly. With them the lamp should last its full life of 100 hours. I don't quite see, however, what you expect to gain by changing to incandescent if your current supply is too poor for even an arc. The Mazda is a very much more delicate proposition from any and every point of view than is the carbon arc. Have you tried the new Speer Alterno or the National White a. c. special? They are both a large improvement over the ordinary for a. c. To sum up: You are a competent operator, and if you can use 60 amperes a. c. I would advise you to proceed with caution in making a change to Mazda. I very much doubt that the Mazda will give satisfaction in your particular case. Will users of the Mazda correspond with Friend Wood and give their experience?

Has Repaid Its Cost.

B. A. Aughinbaugh, Mingo, Ohio, recently purchased a handbook, concerning which he says:

I have just finished reading your very valuable handbook. I certainly have learned enough merely in its reading to repay its cost many, many times over. I am now proceeding to study it carefully and exhaustively. I wish a few others of our many text book writers would imitate your wonderful thoroughness, clearness and practicability. You certainly are an operator in the truest sense of that term; also a most unusual author.

This tribute to my poor efforts is particularly valuable because Friend Aughinbaugh is principal of the Mingo High Schools, hence quite capable of passing judgment upon the merit of such a book as the one in question, which is essentially a text book of projection. I, therefore, feel highly gratified by his commendation of my work.

Keeps Up to Date.

W. M. Wells, Scottsburg, Indiana, says:

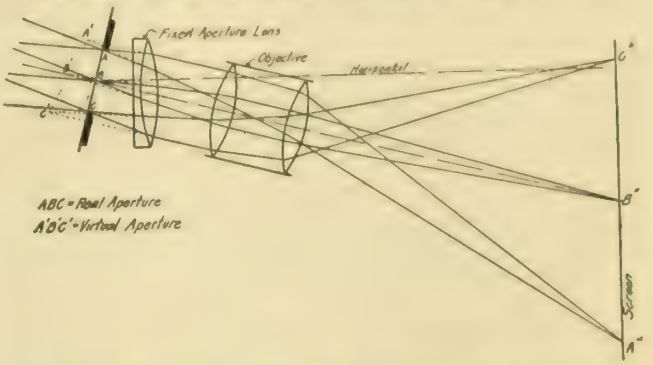
Enclosed find $7.00 to cover subscription to the World for a year and for one of the famous Richardson Handbooks, preferably autographed by its author. Have been in the business for several years, but have sold out and am now running two shows each night for the new owner, as he is not an operator. Have the old Handbook, but want to keep up to date, hence I read the projection department and am ordering the new book. I use a motor driven Motiograph and 14-inch reels; current 40 amperes d. c. from motor-generator set. Good light for small town, as picture is only 12 feet wide.

Even though you have sold out, Neighbor Wells, you'll be back in the good old motion picture swimming hole with the rest of us again soon. You are wise to keep up to date. To autograph your Handbook was a pleasure.

Scheme for Correcting Definition in Steep Projection.

Ralph Martin, Los Angeles, California, suggests the following interesting plan for sharpening definition all over the screen when projection pitch is steep:

In issue of February 16 is an article: "High Grade Lenses Not Available," which has set my typewriter working as follows:



It may be possible to entirely eliminate the out-of-focus trouble due to pitch in projection by the use of the fixed aperture lens. The drawing shows the idea clearly. The aperture lens is arranged so as to be tilted at any desired angle. the direct effect of which is to cause the virtual image (A′ B′ C′) of the aperture to also become tilted. In fine, the operation permits the plane of the aperture to be optically moved about to any desired position in angle, thus enabling the true focal plane of the screen image (A″ B″ C″) to fully coincide with the screen surface, thus insuring sharp focus at all points. I do not believe that the tilting of the aperture lens (provided it to be placed as close as ½ inch from the aperture) would introduce any other defects in definition besides the usual distortion and keystone effect which always accompanies pitch in projection. In view of the impossibility of obtaining anastigmat objectives I take the opportunity to refer to my article of Dec. 23, 1916, where I suggested a method for obtaining a flat field with the petzval type. I still believe that idea is good. What in the Sam Hill has become of the aperture lens anyhow?

Say, man! don't talk to me about additional lenses now. Why we're lucky to have any lenses at all. Speak to a lens maker about extra ones and he'd froth at the mouth. Your plan is unique. Maybe it could be made to work, but I'm skeptical about its being a commercially practical thing. It certainly would have to be adjusted to each individual case, and there would, I should imagine, be the rub. But anyhow it is interesting.

How Long?

A Michigan operator who wishes his blushes hidden wants to know how long before I will reprint the questions. Says he has tried to get into the I. A., but Menominee, Mich., refuses to accept his application. Wants to know what a man so situated is to do.. Wants to know if a manager has to sign some sort of a paper when he employs a union operator. Says he has used National A. C. Special on a. c. and they are a long way ahead of ordinary cored stock. Says they do not work well with the d. c. set, but that a modified jack knife set works fine. Says they are noiseless, and that he recommends them for a. c. users. He also recommends the Silver Tip negative for d. c., though they pit the condensers.

As to reprinting the questions, why I am swamped with matter for the space I have now. What would I do with nearly a page used up on the questions and answers? It's a matter of space, Michigan. As to the Menominee local, why, if you are within its jurisdiction that local is doing you a very great injustice in refusing you membership, provided you can prove your fitness for membership in the I. A. A local assumes a moral obligation to accept into membership every competent operator within its jurisdiction, provided he be otherwise a decent man whom there is no good reason to believe will bring discredit upon the organization. You are within the jurisdiction of the local situated the least number of miles from your city. In cities where the union has contracts with theaters the exhibitor ordinarily must sign a contract with the union covering wages and working conditions before he can get a union operator. This most likely would not hold good in your case.

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are inclosed. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in this department, $1.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Calculating Exposure.

With a little calculation almost any reliable exposure tables may be used for the motion picture camera. As the shutter revolves sixteen times per second it requires one-sixteenth second for the shutter to turn once; if it has an opening which is one-half of the circumference the exposure given is one-half of one-sixteenth, or one-thirty-second; a one-third opening one-forty-eighth, etc. Now the diaphragm numbers on a lens, whether they be U. S. or F system, are arranged so that each number gives just half the exposure of the one below it. Also, U. S. 16 and F .16 are equal. Now let us figure; suppose our table of exposure says that under the conditions that obtain where we wish to work the normal exposure is one-fourth second at U. S. thirty-two. The next lower stop is U. S. 16, which is twice as fast, therefore at U. S. 16 we can expose in one-eighth second. Now our cinematograph lens is perhaps marked in the F system. F 11 is next below F 16 with an exposure of one-sixteenth second. The most we can give is one-thirty-two second with our shutter as far open as we can use it, we must open our diaphragm still further in order to get enough light through our lens to make the picture in one-thirty-two second. F 8 is the next diaphragm number giving an exposure in half the time as F 11; one-half of one-sixteenth is one-thirty-two, therefore if we set the diaphragm at F 8 and turn at normal speed we will have a correctly exposed negative.

Exposure meters are simpler yet as when they are set to satisfy the conditions under which you are working, the correct diaphragm number will always be found opposite a mark which you can make in the exposure column at the spot corresponding to your estimated shutter time.

The Watkins Kinematograph Exposure Meter, invented by Alfred Watkins, is a scientifically accurate exposure meter, which shows in a few seconds the correct lens aperture to use under any condition of light, at any time and in any place, or if the lens aperture is constant, it determines the correct shutter opening. Every operator should have one of these perfect little meters. No larger than a lady's watch. Carried in the vest pocket.

Besides being an accurate meter, this instrument is supplied with a chain and ball, which can be used as a half-second pendulum, thus making a watch unnecessary for timing. It is also of value in timing the crank revolutions, one revolution per half second being considered standard. Weight with chain and pendulum, 2½ ounces. Nickel plated and polished. Each, complete with instructions, $3.00. These exposure meters are for sale by Burke & James, Chicago.

Title Making Direct on Positive Stock.

W. W. B., Cleveland, Ohio, writes:

> I am a new hand in the camera department of a new producing concern in this city, and I am having difficulty in making captions by the following method: We have a typewriter which prints as per sample through carbon paper (no ribbon used), and my idea is to take these and photograph them direct in the camera after reversing the film (emulsion away from lens) and have them ready to run at once without and further printing, etc., but the trouble is I cannot seem to get black enough blacks and white enough whites, although I am using positive film in the camera and straight hydroquinon for development. At first, halation seemed to be the trouble, but after reducing my white surface to this size, the result seems to be but little better. No doubt you know of a much better system than this, but I do not, and any information you can give me will be greatly appreciated.

He sends a sample of a neat little cut out border about two by three inches in which he inserts his typewritten caption together with a sample piece of title film made by this method. A number of the large film concerns use this method for making titles, except that the captions are printed with printers' ink on a press instead of on a typewriter. A dark red carbon tissue would probably give better results than the black, but the real trouble is probably with the developer used. Try the following formula:

Hydroquinon	½ oz.
Sodium sulphite	10 "
Formaldehyde	½ "
Water	1 quart

Temperature of this developer not to be less than 70°.

Slight under exposure and long development, but not too long to clog the letters, will give the best results.

If you could have your captions set up on a linotype machine and have a good black proof pulled, using a paper with a very slight glaze, to insert in your cut out frame, you would have still better results.

Companies which use this method for making titles do not insert these direct titles in their films except when they have only a copy or two in which they have to insert foreign captions. A dupe or print is made and developed in the same contrast developer which gives added density, and this dupe or negative is then inserted in the negative and printed continuous with the scenes. Other companies first make a lantern slide negative from which the title negatives is made either in the camera or in a projecting printer, and at least one company uses a printer in which the title is projected from a lantern slide positive between the scenes where it belongs; the scene negative being automatically disengaged while the title is being printed.

The favorite size for the caption copy in the factories, however, is about six by eight inches, or slightly smaller.

There is, of course, a certain loss of definition in photographing through the film, and if you have sufficient work of this character to warrant the expenditure it might be wise to purchase a reversing prism for your lens such as photoengravers use—this will permit of the captions being photographed direct on the emulsion side with the characters in the proper order to be read correctly on the screen.

I notice that your caption does not seem to be in absolute contact with the cut out borders, for it seems to throw a wavy shadow upon the caption paper.

This may be avoided by placing them in a printing frame beneath a clear glass. The glass will make no difference in the definition if care is taken that the illuminating lights, two high power nitrogen globes with reflectors being very good, do not reflect from the glass into the lens.

Wants to Become a Cameraman.

S. O. S., Columbus, Ohio, writes:

> I am very anxious to enter the film manufacturing business and wish to learn the photographic end of it, for I think that is the best place in which to start. I have not had a great deal of experience but flatter myself by saying that I have sufficient of the gray matter that by close study and concentration could "get by." If you could give me the names of any of the large studios who would be willing to take on an apprentice I would appreciate it immensely.

I do not know of any studios who take apprentices in the accepted sense of the word. There are many ambitious young men in different studios who have obtained positions in the film factories in order to work their way up to some good position in the industry, and where they have shown intelligence and aptitude have succeeded in attaining the position they coveted by hard work and steady application. I can recall a number of young men who have worked their way up from dark room boys at seven or eight dollars a week to cameramen and factory foremen at various salaries up to a hundred dollars a week. The last named salary being, of course, exceptional, and requiring five years of very hard work to attain.

You have not stated what your qualifications are nor where you are willing to start. Decide what you think you are capable of doing and then write letters of application to all of the large firms whose advertisements appear in the World, stating your qualifications, past experiences and references as briefly as possible. If you are personally acquainted with any of the exchange men in your city, get letters from them regarding your ability to some of the firms whom they represent. Use plain paper and do not write upon someone's else stationery when making such application.

If you have perseverance and the right stuff in you, you will land a job where you can work up to the position you wish.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be answered in this column $1.00.

Music of the Future.

IT IS hardly necessary to go back to the piano and drums period of picture presentation for comparison. Just as the picture industry has advanced step by step, so music has kept pace, providing a higher form of entertainment with each upward move. Its mission has been identical with that of better pictures: to draw a better class of patrons. In the infant days of photoplays the class that patronized the "movies" cared little for music, but appreciated the noise. The banging improvisations of a piano player, augmented by the cymbal-crashing drummer, delighted their ears and provided opportunity for loud chatter or louder guffaws.

The exhibitor noted the excellence of the "movie" novelty, saw its wonderful possibilities and wondered why the better class of his neighborhood stayed away. By special publicity he got them to come—once, but they would not return. He thought that the poor ventilation or rough interior of his storeroom were to blame and moved into better quarters. The desired clientele came again, but his new theater knew them no more. He cudgelled his brain for the reason. He felt that his pictures were good. His projection was exceptionally fine. The new home of the silent drama was the last word in "movie" theaters. His interior lighting and lobby lights were strictly up to date, yet there was something lacking somewhere.

He was not in the remotest sense a musician nor even a devotee of the art. He could not whistle a tune to save his bank roll for his vocation was business, not art. His music sounded all right to him and many of his regular patrons expressed themselves delightedly upon the subject. Therefore, although he had changed everything else of the old regime, his piano and drums still kept up the clattering accompaniment to his pictures.

One day he attended an exhibitors' convention in a large city and was surprised to learn that some theaters were spending as high as three hundred dollars a week for musicians. From his practical standpoint it looked like bad business, for he could not see where he could add anything to his overhead expenses and make a living. He admitted subconsciously that a larger body of men looked better, and the music seemed softer and sweeter, but the additional cost could not be compensated for by sweeter sound.

A few days later he was told by a film salesman that in a neighboring town a fellow exhibitor had installed a pipe organ at an expense of $15,000. With gaping mouth and bulging eyes he declared that exhibitors in general had gone crazy over music. He was also informed that the day of the five-cent picture house was gone and that the ruling charge for admission to those houses where the music had been improved was ten and fifteen cents.

Though slow to act he was a good gambler, and forthwith dispensed with his marathon pianist and frolicsome drummer. A five-piece orchestra took their place and his audience missed the noise, but liked the music. At first many of them fell asleep. The rumor went abroad that a "symphony" orchestra was the feature of his theater. The better class of people came again—and stayed. To-day he has another house, bigger, more up to date, changing pictures only twice a week and featuring an orchestra of eighteen pieces and a huge pipe organ played by a capable artist. His box office receipts prove the sound investment made in good music.

To-day we have probably a dozen theaters in America with orchestras of thirty men or more devoted to pictures. Hundreds of houses have large organs, and thousands small orchestral combinations. All this, in spite of the expense incidental to gathering together a good orchestra, the difficulty in procuring proper musical service from producers and the loss of seating capacity by staging the orchestra or placing the organ.

What does the future hold?

Judging from the rapid strides already made we fear to even guess lest our prediction fall far short of the ultimate mark. A review of a few pertinent facts may give some inkling.

To-day every producer realizes the worth of a proper musical setting to his picture and to the best of his ability strives to meet the needs of the exhibitor. Many are providing cue-sheets, while some go to great expense in arranging orchestra scores. No longer is there any apathy shown in the executive offices of the big film magnates when the subject of music is broached. Their house organs are giving music wide publicity. Music service departments are becoming a large factor in the selling of pictures and what the other fellow is doing in this line is closely watched lest he forge ahead of them.

In the theaters the audience is more conversant with the dual art of pictures and music and continually demands a better musical performance. The exhibitor keeps in close touch with his orchestral leader. What was good enough a year ago is distinctly poor to-day. The work of fitting pictures has become more exacting in its detail than ever before. Frequent repetitions of a number are frowned on and woe betide the leader that in a moment of carelessness uses inappropriate music. It is nothing unusual to have people request the musician to give them the name of a particular selection played during a specified scene. This demonstrates the musical educational value of picture music.

In the field of composers, arrangers of scores, and compilers of cue-sheets, we find a well-marked advance of ideas. Those who stuck to the old lines are "falling out" and the gap is filled by more competent artists. Never before has there been such efforts along the line of research work for the arranger. Composers of recognized ability have entered the picture field and find therein wide opportunity for displaying their talent. New music is the continual cry of musicians playing to pictures and that demand must be satisfied only by selections of merit. Any "old thing" is no longer good enough. Music for the pictures must have atmosphere, and be of a form, practical for picture purposes. Shoddy stuff is rejected, but thematic treatment receives instant approbation.

Musical scores are receiving more and more consideration from the producers. The advantages derived from this form of musical accompaniment are manifold. The use of themes for the different characters arranged in varied forms has proved to be the highest form of setting, but has suffered somewhat at the hands of poor arrangers. This form is in its infancy stages and no doubt will be developed to Wagnerian proportions as time goes on. The fitting of features by the process of suiting the dominant emotional scenes is also good and has reached artistic heights. Flash-backs are no longer regarded musically unless their bearing on the plot is consequential.

We feel that the music of the future will be a score that combines both forms of treatment. Each scene will be fitted for its atmosphere, dominant feeling, and tempo, synchronized and properly key-blended, while interwoven will be found the themes significant of the characters in the foreground. Close attention will be paid to orchestral coloring, light and shade, depth and shallowness. Above all, variety will be the keynote of the entire composition. Orchestras everywhere will be enlarged, better organs and more capable organists will be used. The fifth largest industry will become the fourth and hold in its fold the greatest composers, musical directors and virtuoso players of the day.

Though great has been the progress of the silent drama, greater yet has been the advance in its music, and the future holds a promise so stupendous in its magnitude that picture music will rank favorably with grand opera and symphony.

American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers Gain Decision.

In a test case instituted by The St. Nicholas Avenue Amusement Co., asking that the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers be restrained from demanding from them or others similarly situated any license fee as a condition precedent to the playing of any of the musical compositions of the defendants, and from performing any act or acts whatsoever in concert which would prevent the playing by the plaintiff of any of the desired musical compositions of the defendant, Justice Goff denied the motion and gave the following opinion.

"After considering the argument of counsel and their briefs I am of the opinion that the defendant association is exercising only its lawful rights. It existed before the incorporation of the plaintiff and was engaged in the same general work before the plaintiff's existence. The association is formed for lawful purpose, and I find no exercise of any coercion. The institution of legal actions by indvidual members of the association for violation of copyright is justified for the protection of income from their music. Plaintiff wishes to use the product of the author's labor, ignoring copyright, free of any charge whatever, except the actual purchase price of the printed musical score. There is no restraint of trade through any act of the association. Plaintiff may use any music not the property of the members of the association without objection by the association. The only restraint on plaintiff is the possible right of the authors or owners of such music to prevent its use. The moving picture exhibitors have spent thousands of dollars advertising music which may be used by orchestras irrespective of the wishes of the defendant association or its individual members. The fact that the music of the authors who are members of the association is popular in demand presents just so much more reason why it should be protected and its unauthorized use at public entertainment given for profit, prevented. Practically the exhibitors of moving pictures seek to obtain by injunction the right to publicly perform copyrighted musical compositions for profit without a consent of the holder of copyright and without compensation to him."

Nobody wishes to deprive the author and composer of their royalties. The gift of giving music to the world cannot be estimated in dollars and cents, and no monetary consideration is adequate compensation for musical genius and inspiration. Heretofore, in America, the composers have been at the mercy of the publishers who by the very conditions instant to commercializing an art have been unable to adequately pay him. It is only fair that those who profit by the beautiful melodies, catchy airs, deeply thought and wisely wrought musical epics, should pay for them.

The objection comes in the manner of collecting the playing fee. There seems to be no well defined or set license fee for the playing of any particular number, but each theater must pay a lump sum, which permits the playing of any number from the catalogue controlled by the Society of Authors and Composers. The musician is not charged any additional sum, but the owner of the theater must pay to allow his musicians to play selections by which they obtain their positions and through which they hold them. In other words, the theater manager must pay for music that belongs to the orchestral leader or organist and which goes with the latter when he leaves for pastures new. It would seem that the musician is really the one who profits by the use of the copyrighted numbers, so why charge the theater. There should be found some more equitable method of collecting the playing fee which rightly belongs to the composer.

Music for "The Unchastened Woman."

At the Morosco theater, Sunday, April 21, there was presented the Rialto de Luxe picture, "The Unchastened Woman," adapted and directed by Wm. Humphreys. It was an invitation affair and all the film magnates were present. The play from which the picture was evolved was a New York sensation, and like all the Morosco productions enjoyed a long run on Broadway. As evinced by the enthusiasm the picture evoked "The Unchastened Woman" will continue in popularity and grow in the hearts of the picture fans everywhere.

Preceded by the Overture "Il Guarany," by Gomez, the picture was ushered in by the strains of that well known melody, "Serenade," by Schubert. This number was used as the theme of the drama and fitted Miss Valentine's good acting. During the scene showing a drawing room where a few select friends were gathered to listen to a big singer the strains of "Pagliacci" were heard most appropriately. When we were carried to Switzerland the changed atmostphere was carried out in the music and we heard the reminiscences of Alpine yodeling.

The little touches of Auld Lang Syne and Home, Sweet Home, touched the heart with their kindliness and brought out the true simplicity of the home life shown. Besides they provided a distinct contrast to such numbers used, like "Unfinished Symphony," by Schubert, the "Prelude" to King Manfred, and the "Pilgrim's Song," by Tschaikowsky.

Synchrony is not possible in a musical setting, yet the breaks were hardly noticeable because of the careful conducting of Mr. Beynon. One thing stood out most noticeably during the presentation of the picture. At no time did the music predominate. The entire accompaniment was played almost pianissimo. As there are no big fight scenes or battle situations this was possible and its soothing effect was only excelled by its good taste.

Producers Deeply Interested in Music.

A recent issue of the Progress-Advance, the house organ of Paramount, tore down all precedent and prejudice and gleefully announced itself as a music number. Musical articles appeared from various capable musicians treating the different phases of picture playing. Nothing has pleased us so well since our last raise in salary.

Truly, music is coming to its own. And why not? What would pictures be without music? Why spend thousands of dollars to entertain people in silence when good music so enhances the presentation of the picture? This recognition of music as a big factor in picture selling is but a forerunner, and as its importance permeates the industry greater stress will be laid on proper musical service to the exhibitor. Music is a limitless art and affords an opportunity for sound selling arguments that cannot be estimated till tried.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

BLINDNESS OF DIVORCE (Fox—Six Reels)—Theme not necessary.

Note the wedding march in the first reel, followed by slow music of the heavier type. We need the wedding march again in the third reel, along with a fox-trot, Oriental dance and agitato. The last three reels are very dramatic and call for big stuff. There are two court room scenes which could be fitted with the same music to associate the ideas. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

BRIDE OF FEAR, THE (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme not necessary.

This is a melodrama requiring agitatos, hurrys and misteriosos. The first and second reels are intensely dramatic, the third can be fitted with light allegretto stuff, the fourth needs slower music with the exception of the chase, when an agitato will fit. The last wants agitatos, misteriosos and dramatic tensions. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

DANGER GAME, THE (Goldwyn—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Allegretto. Suggest "Sweet Jasmine"—Bendix, "Moonlight Dance"—Finck, or "Prelude"—Aletter.

Serenades, caprices and light intermezzos fit this humorous melodrama. A few agitatos and light hurrys are needed while a couple of semi-misteriosos will fit nicely into the burglary scenes. Catch the fight in the third reel. Cue-sheet can be obtained from the Goldwyn exchange.

FACE IN THE DARK, The (Goldwyn—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Andante. Suggest "Clair de Lune"—Thome, "Dialogue"—Helmund-Meyer, or "Pleading"—Wood.

The picture opens brightly and a bit grotesquely. Note the sleigh ride and use "Petersburg Sleighride"—Eilenberg, if possible. Catch the piano solo in the fourth reel and the need of a misterioso a little further along. Close with the theme. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the Goldwyn exchange.

FLOOR BELOW, THE (Goldwyn—Six Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Andantino. Suggest "Heloise"—Langey, "Astarte"—Meldenberg, or "Melodie"—Lederer.

With but few moments, this picture can be treated lightly. Intermezzos, mazurkas, waltzes and gavottes will meet most of your requirements. There is a harmonica solo which can be imitated on the organ, if you are fortunate in having one; otherwise disregard it. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the Goldwyn exchange.

GIRL FROM BEYOND, THE (Vitagraph—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Andante. Suggest "Romance"—Grunfeld, "Souvenir"—Geehl, or "Romance"—Rubenstein.

There is a change from eastern to western atmosphere that should be sharply brought out in contrast, to be effective. Dramatic music is required with a touch of the pastorals. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

HEART OF THE SUNSET (Goldwyn—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Andante. Suggest "Love Theme"—Lee, or "Extase"—Ganne.

This is a romantic melodrama filled with adventure and deeds of daring. You will require big stuff for this feature. The atmosphere is somewhat Mexican and the free use of Spanish numbers will add to the picture presentation. Catch shots in first and fourth reel. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the Goldwyn exchange.

LEAP TO FAME (World—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Valse Lento. Suggest "Adele Waltzes"—Finn, "Dodola"—Frey, or "Golden Hearted Daisies"—Williams.

A comedy drama, American atmosphere, and requiring light treatment orchestrally. Note Egyptian dance needed in the first reel. A few agitatos and hurrys will also come in handy as the picture draws to its close. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the World exchange.

PURPLE LILY, THE (World—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Andante Sostenuto. Suggests "Arabian Nights"—Mildenberg, "On Wings of Love"—Bendix, or "Inspiration"—Edwards.

Bright stuff till the last reel, in which comes a direct cue for "Home, Sweet Home," to be played by violin only. Note shots and sleigh bells. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the World exchange.

RICH MAN, POOR MAN (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Allegretto. Suggest "Rainbow Girl"—Hirsch, "Love in Arcady"—Wood, or "Serenade"—Pierne.

Nothing but bright stuff is needed for this vivacious picture. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

RIDERS OF THE NIGHT (Metro—Five Reels)—Theme—Adagio. Suggest "The Broken Melody"—Van Biene, "The Stars are Calling"—Robert, or "Where Blooms the Rose"—Johns.

The entire picture is very dramatic and would ordinarily require many agitatos, hurrys and furiosos. It would be better to use standard overtures that have length to them so that choppiness be avoided. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

WESTERN BLOOD (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Reverie"—Vieuxtemp, "Dawn of Hope"—Cassella, or "Elysium"—Speaks.

Another of those woolly western stories. Bright stuff with a Mexican flavor is what you need. Many fox-trots and agitatos are required. Note the Virginia reel needed in the fourth part when they begin to dance. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

WITH NEATNESS AND DESPATCH (Metro—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Moderato. Suggest "Delicia"—Frantzen, "Serenade"—Widor, or "Romance"—Merricanto.

This is a comedy drama and should receive light treatment in the main. Note the piano solo to action and the agitatos and misteriosos needed in the last reel. Cue-sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

UNCHASTENED WOMAN, THE (Rialto de Luxe—Eight Reels)—See review in another column of this department.

Leaders Service Bureau.

Questions Answered. Suggestions Offered.

Q. "Why should my leader persist in alternating his playing with the piano? First he plays a number, then the pianist plays a number and they keep this up throughout the show. Why?"

A. "There seems to be no reason that we can see unless it is his desire to assure himself that he only works half as hard as the pianist. Music of that kind will kill your business. Better make a change in your orchestra pit."

Q. "While attending a picture house in New York City where they were playing "The Girl Beyond" I was surprised to hear the orchestra start the "Selections from the Mikado" by Sullivan. My disappointment was keen when I found no trace of Japanese atmosphere in the picture. Your articles continually harp on atmospherical fittings. Why don't you do it in New York?"

A. "One 'black eye' for New York. It is too bad you attended a theater which is so far behind the times, to get your impression of New York movies. No doubt this house caters to a portion of the submerged tenth who have no likes or dislikes in the matter of music. The next time you are in New York attend some other theater and tell us what your impressions are."

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

ADAM started it—this business of press agenting. The late Charley Stowe, greatest of all word-conjurers, kept it up, and the late Theodore ("Tody") Hamilton, coming later, got the credit for it. In the foregoing sentences there is a commingling of fact and fiction, the rightful ingredients of accepted press agenting. Fiction goes farthest and fares worst, so it were better to dispose of Adam's share in the oldest of all professions—other authorities to the contrary notwithstanding.

With the juice of a poke berry Adam mimeographed upon a choice specimen of palm leaf and held the earliest work of art before THE woman. She read:

"Eve is the most beautiful woman in the world."

Reading she believed and blushed in joy appreciation from the tips of her toes to the line where her face was separated from the top of her head by the vanguard of her breeze-tossed tresses.

Press agenting, thus founded upon fact, has since developed into fact diluted, more or less, with fiction.

Adam, first press agent for pictures, wrote of his star the truth. Press agents for moving pictures in these later and, believably, better times use the same adroit method of holding their jobs that Adam employed as press agent for living pictures. Very possibly the determination of censors to keep moving pictures from taking on the visible signs of living pictures has largely influenced press agents to cleave less closely to fact than did Adam. Truth about living pictures needs no telling; fiction may be necessary in writing about the movies.

It is easily believable that Adam made a great hit with his star. In fact (knowing as much about the affair as anyone else) The Rambler begs to submit that so earnestly was Eve in accord with Adam's opinion of her that she "fairly ate it up"—and then took the taste out of her mouth with an apple.

If Adam were now press agenting moving pictures, judging from his early and past performances, we might expect him to stick strictly to the truth. Indeed we have heard some complaint that more truth might well be applied to the modernized art. So many persons have come to doubt the veracity of publicists that press work for the Third Liberty Loan and War Savings Stamps is the one and only real big "campaign" that has "gone over" in its entirety, accepted as gospel truth, in the memory of John R. Rogers, the "Yours Merrily" of Oldest Inhabitants.

That truth may be applied to moving picture publicity is patent. Still, there is no patent on the truth. To prove it, and to work out a theory tenaciously adhered to by some people, we submit a few paragraphs along accepted lines—a press sheet telling the truth. We credit Terry Ramsaye with originating the firm name of the distributors—E Pluribus Fillum Co. Here's copy for the press sheet:

Front Page: E Pluribus Fillum Co., a corporation trying to pick up a few dollars profit, has rented to the manager of the Blank Theater, five reels of film originally purchased from Eastman Kodak Co., Rochester, N. Y. On this film is printed thousands of separate scenes that represent a company of actors going through the performance of playing "Kerry Gow," an Irish drama in which the late Joseph Murphy starred upon the American stage for many years. The play helped toward Joe Murphy's great riches. E. Pluribus Fillum Co. has hopes. William Henry Higginthorp plays the principal character. If W. H. H. was a regular actor he would change his name but he isn't.

Advance Notice No. 1.—Wick Tilton, who runs the movie show on Main Street, has rented a shipment of film representing "Kerry Gow." Wick says he remembers seeing Joe Murphy play the piece in the Opera House, before movies drove all the talking actors out of town. He thinks the folks that like Irish plays will like William Henry Higginthorp. Mr. Tilton says Higginthorp's pictures don't remind him very much of Joe Murphy, except that he wears the same kind of Irish uniform Murphy did. Anyhow, Tilton is going to risk it.

Advance Notice No. 2.—Manager Wick Tilton says he has received the fancy pictures to hang up in windows (if store keepers will let him) that show what "Kerry Gow" will be like when the E Pluribus Fillum Co. ships him the film. Wick says he's not so sure this piece will be like the one Joe Murphy had at the Opera House years ago. He says Murphy didn't have motor boats on the Lakes of Killarney—but William Henry Higginthorp has.

Advance Notice No. 3.—William Henry Higginthorp and the films of "Kerry Gow" will arrive by Wells-Fargo Express tomorrow in time to be run through Wick Tilton's picture grinding machine from noon till midnight. The show will leave town by Adams Express on the midnight train tomorrow so the manager of the movie in Shackletown can have it to use. It's today grinding in Skilletstown. Other films of the same show are grinding in Astoria, Ore.; Shelbyville, Ind.; Dover, Del., and Napanee, Can. Wick Tilton says the E Pluribus Fillum Co. is trying hard to get movie managers to rent the film in any town that will have it.

Editor's Notice of the Show.—Not very many people saw "Kerry Gow" at Wick Tilton's theater yesterday. After he ground it out once Wick told everybody who asked him if William Henry Higginthorp was as good as Joe Murphy. Being a truthful man, Wick told 'em "not on your life." Unfortunately Wick don't know about the motor boats on the Lakes of Killarney, because the tin that held part of the film was missing when the express company brought it in from Skilletstown. Anyhow he said the picture he saw on the sheet in his theater was not so good looking as the window pictures the E Pluribus Fillum Co. shipped him in advance.

Doesn't truth read rotten? . . . We thought so too. That chorus makes it unanimous.

New Inventions of the Enemy.

Some enthusiastic press agent, to give "screech" to their effusions, have formed the habit of UPPER CASE in their copy when mentioning stars and plays, switching to the red ribbon for added emphasis. It makes beautiful copy.

High Visibility in Early Action.

Louise Huff wants to have it thoroughly understood that although she wears very short skirts in "Sandy" it was not that she desired to do so.

"Thank goodness," she says, "I am supposed to grow up as the film is unwound, and am permitted to wear regular clothes before the finish."

Exhibitor Joins Jester Forces.

"It looks very much," says Johnnie Semler, "as if Ben Title, the well known exhibitor and exchange man, has a longing to become a movie actor. He has already appeared in a few odd bits in Jester comedies, and has proven that he is much better as an exhibitor."

Let the Waiting World Know That—

Mary Garden's real name is—Mary Garden.

As a child she aspired to be a violinist. Her family looked upon grand opera as advanced iniquity.

She hated acting in pictures at first; now she loves it.

Rather than appear on the dramatic stage she would retire forever.

Mary Garden is not tall. The long lines of her gowns make her seem so.

She is beautiful.

Her hair is red.

By intelligent dieting she has reduced her weight fifty pounds.

Her eyes are bright blue.

At one time a franc—20 cents—meant much to her.

Once a newspaper woman asked her the time. Mary unclasped her bracelet watch. "Keep this," she said. It was platinum, diamond sprinkled.

Roulette is a constant temptation. She is very lucky.

She never wears a pair of gloves more than once.

Her luncheon, when she lunches at all, consists of an apple and some dried figs.

On seeing the "Thais" film a critic said that opera might well spare her voice to give to the cinema her eloquent body.

It pleased her more than anything she has ever been told about her art.

(Evidently she does not read.)

Diamond and platinum cuff links were her parting gifts to electricians and carpenters at the film studio.

She gave the property man a wrist watch.

She calls her mother "momma."

She always speaks the truth.

Women interviewers annoy her, but she receives them when she can't help it. One cost her a watch.

The enmity of a woman prevents Mary Garden from singing at the Metropolitan.

Chicago is the prima donna's favorite city in America.

Philadelphia amuses her.

New York appalls her.

She talks "baby talk" to her dog.

She laughs at the "Teutonic hips" of an American singer in opera.

The foregoing and many other thrilling episodes concerning this rara avis come to us under the captain: "Flashes from the Facets of a Jeweled Personality as Recorded by the Shadow of Mary Garden."

Then occurs the thought that if she keeps on reducing fifty pounds at a clip she'll eventually soon lose her shadow. His address, up to yet, is Care of Goldwyn.

Davenport, Ia.—During the performance here last night of "The Beast of Berlin" at the American theater, which was crowded to the fire exits, a man who gave his name as E. J. Kelly, and his occupation a traveling salesman, fired two shots from a revolver at the screen when the title, "There was another man who lived in the Palace in Berlin," was followed by the appearance of the Kaiser on the screen.

"Take that, you beast," he shouted as an usher seizes him before he could empty the other chambers at the impersonation of the German emperor.

Putting Over a Ramble.

Sometimes it is hard to convince even the printer that this department is a sad and serious affair. When we want things wrong the printer makes 'em right, and when we want 'em right the printer makes 'em righter. Having, last issue, tried to put across a "wheeze" about Margarita Fisher taking the "c" out of her name, thereby reversing the usual order by taking the sea out of the fish, we have found it necessary to illustrate the operation.—Courtesy American Film Co., Publicity Department.

Very interestingly Elizabeth Sears writes of the matter thus, sending at the same time the stills from which the accompanying illustrations were made. Incidentally fans will be interested in geting a line on Miss Fisher's age, with Miss Sears accepted as an authority. Listen to Miss Sears:

"Margarita Fischer kicked the "c" bodily out of her name last week by means of a little ceremony that indicated how much in earnest she was. She picked the offending, Germanish letter from the center of her last name and tossed it lightly onto the clay map of Germany that had been fashioned on a table for her ceremony.

" 'From Germany thou came seventy-five years ago,' she said, watching the letter fall ker-splunk into Germany, 'back to Germany thou may go—and welcome. I was born in the good old United States, and every fibre of my body is boosting for America—the best country in the world'."

"This little ceremony took place just before Miss Fisher went out to view the ball game between the Navy Baseball Team and the Grizzlies. The Navy's just adopted Miss Fisher as their official godmother, and they proceeded to whale in and lick the Grizzlies by an eight to seven score." P. S.—It was a small whale.

Optimism in Bald Head Row.

During the trip from which he has just returned Joe Brandt was amazed at the optimism displayed by exhibitors especially in the territories served by the Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha and Des Moines, over the prospects of summer business.

"This optimism," said Mr. Brandt, "was especially noticeable regarding the short reel subjects including the news weeklies and the better class of comedies. One exhibitor informed me that the comedies similar to the L-Ko's in which pretty and shapely women are picturized are having a tendency of establishing a bald-headed row in two of his houses. Sharks Invade W-K Industry.

Jumping into a shark-infested sea for the purpose of making a motion picture realistic is the latest experience of Juanita Hansen, who, with Jack Mulhall and a company of actors, made a voyage to Catalina Island and Balboa Beach to film water scenes for "The Brass Bullet." The plucky litle actress was told by Director Wilson that during the voyage of the vessel the story demanded she jump overboard.

When miles from land, and in a choppy sea, it was discovered that several large sharks were following the yacht. Wilson immediately countermanded the order for Miss Hansen's jump, but when the latter was told that the day would be wasted, and that another trip to sea was necessary owing to the presence of the sharks the intrepid little actress insisted that the scene be taken immediately.

With the vessel traveling at high speed, Miss Hansen leaped from the side of the yacht, and was in the water several minutes until rescued by her frightened director and comrades, who saw the fins of several immense sharks hovering about the swimming girl.

The Ministerial Alliance of Owensboro, Ky., hopes that the next time "Doug" Fairbanks, or any shadow specialty artist hits their burgh that he will come in the middle of some week day, and not interfere with church services. Owensboro is a closed town on Sunday, and no pictures are shown, but there is no way in which to keep the public from looking at a screen actor in the flesh, when he drops from a train and delivers a public address. While the ministers were glad to see Fairbanks aiding in the Liberty Loan campaign, it played hobb with church services. At about fifteen minutes to twelve on Sunday, April 14, throngs started leaving the churches in order to meet the noon train. Advance notice had been received, and bulletin boards at the theaters, newspaper offices, etc., carried the news. When the train pulled in thousands were on hand to cheer the actor, who appeared on the observation platform. However, he was so hoarse after his talks in Louisville the previous evening that "Liberty Loan" was about all that he could manage to get out; but everyone understood the hard effort he was making to aid a good cause.—Kentucky Correspondence.

Richardson Off on Another Trip

Projection Man Visits Utica, Syracuse, Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo—Looks Over Theaters and Talks to Picture Men

MIDNIGHT, Friday, April 5, saw the writer safely tucked away in one of Mr. Pullman's sleepers, bound upon a trip which is to include Utica, Syracuse, Toronto, Hamilton, Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, Chicago, St. Louis, Fort Wayne and other points in the Middle West. We were accompanied on the first part of the trip by Will C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, and hope later to pick up E. S. Porter of the Precision Machine Company and A. C. Roebuck of the Enterprise Optical Company.

The trip was undertaken primarily through necessity for examining into the merit of certain devices being manufactured in Cleveland and Toledo, the inspection of the new Motiograph de Luxe and other Chicago productions and an inspection into the merits of the latest Wagner motor generator equipment.

At Utica we crawled out of the hay to find the station platform as bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboard, in so far as a prominently displayed welcome may be concerned. It later developed that the president of Local Union No. 337, Brother C. A. Skinner, really was on the job, though we failed to connect. Also Secretary G. H. Humphrey had missed connections on the arrangement committee meeting the night before, thus pieing all the type and badly mussing up the forms.

However, we made connections a little later and all was lovely. While in Utica I inspected the De Luxe theater, a semi-suburban house seating 1,200, managed by H. G. Lux, Jr. Mr. Lux himself was, unfortunately, ill, but I had the pleasure of meeting Henry G. Lux, his father, who is one of the owners of the De Luxe and Alhambra theaters; also Frederick Hathaway, advertising manager for these two houses, both courteous men who, aside from being good business men, are in the "good fellow" class.

The De Luxe charges 5, 10, 15 and 25 cents plus war tax, the 5 cents being for children. Its black walled 10 by 15 foot operating room contains three Simplex projectors, supplied by a Wotton double-arc single 60-ampere motor generator which, incidentally, the operator says he likes very well. There are two speed controllers and wide glass-covered observation parts. A 17-foot picture is projected at 100 feet, using 50 amperes D. C.

Advertising Manager Hathaway has ideas of his own, as has also Manager Lux, who is one of the real live wires. Here is one of the stunts they pull off: As I said before, the De Luxe is a semi-suburban house. Patrons are invited to register the names of their children, together with the date and year of their birth, at the theater office. Each week invitations are sent to each child under the age of 14 whose birthday occurs during that week, the invitation containing five tickets to a matinee, so that the child is enabled to give a little box party comprising himself and four other children. The De Luxe has a number of loges in the balcony and each one of these little parties occupies one of the loges. It struck me as a mighty clever stunt and one which would create a world of good feeling for the theater among its patrons. C. H. Skinner, president local Union 337, is chief operator at the De Luxe.

The Hippodrome, a downtown house, seats 750. I had the pleasure of meeting W. H. Linton, its owner, who also is a live wire and the owner of several theaters in surrounding towns, as well as his local house manager, Joseph Ball, who by the way is the oldest showman in northern New York. J. H. Wallace is chief operator. Mr. Wallace is treasurer of Local 337 and an inventor of considerable note. I found Brother Lennon counting his "ill-gotten" gains, the broad roll-top desk all cluttered up with 5s, 10s, 20s, etc. He stepped out for a few moments, leaving me alone with that mess. I hope he doesn't miss anything.

Friend Smith and myself took dinner with Mr. Lennon and had a very pleasant chat concerning local conditions. The Hippodrome projecting equipment consists of two Power's 6-As, projecting a 16-foot picture at 70 feet. A Wotton Rexolux supplies current. A foot candle reading of his screen showed a little less than 1 C. P. with the machine running and 3 C. P. with it standing still

There was one thing remarkable about the Hippodrome. Standing on the stage within 10 feet of the screen and at a sharp angle thereto the picture was well illuminated and the definition good. Seated in the front row of seats within 15 feet of the screen the picture was distinctly sharp. It was the most remarkable picture in this respect I ever remember having viewed. Projection at the Hippodrome is excellent, but on the front walls of the auditorium is an atrocity in the shape of two illuminated signs about 4 feet wide, extending from floor to ceiling, one on each side of the screen and about halfway between the proscenium opening and the side wall of the theater. The illumination is dark green, but it is nevertheless very bad. I won't say any more because Owner Linton agrees with me and says it will be cut out as soon as the contract has expired. The Hippodrome uses two Power's 6-A machines. Admission is 10 cents to all parts of the house.

At the Alhambra theater, managed by Harry and Ford Lux, projection is supplied by two Simplex machines taking current through a Wotton Rexolux. The house seats 800. Charles Miller is chief operator. The picture is excellent, considering the very steep slope of projection. The lighting of the auditorium was in some respects not the best. I pointed out to the managers how this bad lighting condition could be remedied. They agreed it was bad and promised the remedy would be applied. Admission is 15, 20 and 35 cents.

At the Avon it was my privilege to meet William Fait, Jr., manager. The operating room is in charge of C. Christensen, chief operator; Herman Gergold, assistant. There are two Baird projectors, to which a third will soon be added. There are arc controllers and a Fort Wayne motor generator. The distance of projection is 94 feet and the picture 18 feet. The operating room is unique in that it is 83 feet wide by 10 feet front to back with a 15-foot ceiling. The rewinder was geared down, though not enough.

After the shows closed at night there was a banquet attended by all the operators and most of the Utica exhibitors and theater managers. After demolishing the good things the writer repaid the hospitality of the Utica men by promenading around on their corns for something like an hour and a half. But the Utica men are good sports and accepted such criticism as applied to them in good part.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

THERE was a queer mix-up which came very near putting the everlasting blink on our visit to Syracuse. Through an error I thought I was "billed" in Syracuse Sunday night, whereas the Syracuse men had me down for Saturday night. I immediately got busy, located the home of Secretary Boyd, only to find that worthy brother out. We were somewhat "surprised" to be informed a banquet had been held in our honor the night before. Notwithstanding the misunderstanding, when Secretary Boyd finally was located, he promptly offered to get the men together again that evening, which he did. Not only did he do that, but to show the Syracuse men are the real goods, they gave another banquet, and a good one, too. After which we preached the gospel of better projection to them until 3 a. m.

Syracuse has some most excellent examples of the photoplay theater. The Savoy seats 800, has a 6-cent and a 11-cent admission and a four-piece orchestra, to which other pieces are added Saturday and Sunday. There are one Simplex and one Power 6-A and an excellent operating room, except that the walls are too light in color, particularly in view of the fact that the front wall is flooded with daylight during matinees, which comes through a skylight opening upon the roof. I was given the pleasure of meeting Manager J. M. Griswold. Floyd Lewis is chief operator and Louis Boyd assistant.

There is a Fort Wayne motor generator set. The observation ports are excellent. The auditorium lighting is bad. There are ten white sidelights and a clock and two exit lights near the screen. I called Mr. Griswold's attention to the injury done by the errors in his lighting system and by the clock and exit lights. He agreed the system was bad. I showed him how it could be remedied and it is up to him to apply the remedy.

The Strand is a large and very pretty house seating 2,000. It is under the same management as the Strand of New York City and has one of the stage sets formerly used in the Strand theater.

Thomas Shannahan, stage manager of the Strand, is a progressive man who has most excellent ideas with regard to auditorium lighting in moving picture theaters. The Strand lighting is all very satisfactory from the projection point of view, except as to the music lights for the piano. Edgar Woild is manager. The distance of projection is 112 feet and there is a heavy drop in the projection. The picture is 16 feet wide. Harry Burgess is chief operator and Robert Woodford assistant. There are two Baird machines, a Fort Wayne 100 ampere motor generator set, two arc controllers and a dissolver. The walls of the operating room are dark and the ports are of goodly dimension, though they contain no glass. There is an excellent vent flue.

At the Eckles theater, B. E. Cornell general manager, the picture had excellent illumination and light tone. The orchestra lights are well shielded, but the white clock dial is illuminated with white light and that is bad, inasmuch as the clock is near the screen. To the right and left of the screen is an illuminated scenic effect which is kept on while the picture runs. This is very bad in that it is in direct competition with the picture. Otherwise the auditorium lighting is excellent. W. L. Dows, vce-president Local 376, is chief operator. W. J. Caron, president Local 376, is assistant. There are three Power 6-A machines, taking current through a transverter The picture is 18 feet and the throw 120 feet. The operating room is small, but has good ports, though with no glass in them.

At the Hippodrome, F. J. Sardino manager, I found absolutely the worst example of clock illumination I have ever seen. Right up against the bottom of the picture was a clock with a large white dial, upon which glared the blaze of what apparently was a 60 watt nitrogen lamp. General Manager Smith was with me. We paid our way in in order to get the real condition before any one knew of our presence. Smith at once remarked: "Well, did we pay to see a show or to see what time it is?" I called Mr. Sardino's attention to the damage of a thing of this kind, both on his own patrons' eyes and upon the moving picture industry and showed him how to fix it.

J. L. Cecil, chief operator, with that utterly impossible clock out of the way would be delivering an excellent screen result.

At midnight a considerable number of Syracuse operators and a few of the exhibitors foregathered to hear our message. It was then the boys proved they were good sports, for they duplicated, as well as they could on such short notice, the banquet of the night before, but with the chief exhibit present. Syracuse impressed me as a charming city, having some excellent theaters and some live-wire exhibitors and operators; but there is I think, great need for a good shaking up.

TORONTO, CANADA.

SOME considerable village, that Toronto thing, my boy, some considerable village. A mere half million people are congregated within its boundaries and call it home. If the rest of the population matches the moving picture element in liveliness, then is Toronto indeed a high voltage live wire. My recollection of Toronto is just one automobile after another, a blur of moving scenery consisting of lofty buildings, beautiful residences and charming parks. Incidentally they showed me the house in which my friend the immortal Mary Pickford first saw the light of day. Also incidentally they showed me one arsenal of huge size, something like eleven hospitals and a graveyard, presumably as a hint that unless I was careful what I said that night something might happen to Richardson.

I was met and entertained by the Executive Board of Local Union 173, consisting of Charles A. Dentlebeck, president; S. I. Wells, vice president; William P. Covert, business agent; Charles Duhig and two other brothers whose names I don't seem able at the moment to dig up. And right here let me remark that by and large the afore-named executive board is as fine a bunch of fellows as one would meet in a year's travel. President Dentlebeck is a wideawake, brainy, progressive man, and an operator of large ability. He is about taking a new position as chief operator at the Strand theater (I think it was the Strand) which will pay him an advance of $10 a week over the union scale, proof positive that careful work, brains and ability in the operating room do pay.

Toronto has between 80 and 100 theaters. I wouldn't swear that I saw them all, but I did view temples of the photoplay until I lost all track and ceased to even make a note of the name. What I saw was, in the main, good; also some of it was excellent indeed. Certainly all the projection I viewed while in the city was a credit to the operators of Toronto. In at least one or two instances I looked at a very fair screen result, produced under extremely difficult conditions. But of that I will speak more in detail later.

General Manager Smith had accompanied us thus far on the journey, but the pace had become too hot. On arrival in Toronto he sized up the strenuous looking committee of reception, threw both hands in the air and said, "I'm done, I am not a steam engine, or even one of the gasoline variety. I've got to have some rest," and Smith faded away in the distance. I didn't see him again until the banquet at midnight. He has had a taste of what I endured for five long months last year, and it don't look good to him. I had tried to induce A. C. Roebuck, president of the Enterprise Optical Company, Chicago, to accompany us to Toronto, but he was too busy, as I suppose also was E. S. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, New York City.

The notice I had given Toronto had been a short one, hence I did not expect anything very large in the way of a turnout, though experience has taught me that when our Canadian brothers start out to do something they usually do the job up brown. It was an agreeable surprise, however, to be conducted into a banquet hall at midnight and to find there congregated fully one hundred operators and fifty exhibitors, theater managers and exchange men. I was assured that had the notice of my coming been more ample the turnout would have been larger. The programme arranged for the banquet was most excellent.

And now for a few words concerning the theaters of Toronto. His Majesty has a clock beside the screen, illuminated with white light thrown upon it by a small projector located on the side wall of the theater. Not only is the clock face itself objectionable, but the projector throws white light back into the eyes of the audience which can see the unprotected lower end of its incandescent lamp. This is very crude, very foolish and altogether inexcusable. If the exhibitor does not want to take the trouble to kill the light on the clock face by means of a black paper dial with white figures and white hands, at least he could at a minimum expenditure of energy put up a shield to cover the white light from the projector itself. The exit signs in this theater were good.

The Rialto is getting a fairly good fifteen-foot picture, which is to the credit of the operator, because the distance of projection is only thirty-five feet. The operating room was of goodly dimensions, painted a dark color and clean as a new pin. On the wall was an oddity in the shape of a large oval mirror, in which friend operator may admire the classic lines of his own individual beauty when weary with rubbering at the screen. It was my privilege to meet the owner and manager of the Rialto, Mr. Cohen, with whom I enjoyed a pleasant chat.

The Allen theater seats 1,700, has a beautiful foyer and excellent auditorium interior. It sports an eleven-piece orchestra. The auditorium is lighted by means of a cone system. Incandescent lamps are dropped down from a high ceiling on cord and inclosed in individual cones having translucent bottoms. It is a modification of the lighting system proposed by the writer some years ago, and described and illustrated in the first edition of the Hand Book. A mistake has been made, however, in that around the bottom edge of the cone is a row of small green bull's-eyes. This green light escaping is distracting to the eye, and more or less annoying to those seated in the balcony. Aside from that the system works out excellently.

The front of the Allen is altogether too light when the orchestra is playing. I would recommend to Ben Cronk, manager, that the orchestra light be reduced, or so arranged that the front of the theater will not be lighted up to such an extent. President C. A. Dintlebeck, of Local 173, and A. Cohn are operators. The operating room is large, has slate-black walls, good ports, hot and cold running water, telephone, pyrene gun, two Power 6B projectors and a dissolver. There is an excellent kit of tools, all neatly arranged, a framing light and a Fulco inclosed rewinder geared down. The lens ports are stopped down to confine vagrant light and the reel bands extra tailpieces, leaders, etc., are hung up neatly and in order on the wall. There is no speeding of the films in this theater.

At the Regent I met Mr. Nathason, managing director for the Regent Theaters, Ltd. The Regent has an excellent 16½-foot picture at 166 feet using two Simplex projectors. There is a lighting effect used in the arch of the front wall over the screen. This looks very well from the lower floor, but from the large balcony, in my opinion, it distinctly detracts from the screen results. The color of the illumination is light blue. Charles Brick is chief operator and T. Marsden assistant. The theater seats 1,650. The film "Lest We Forget" was on, and at 8 P. M. the theater lobby and foyer was jammed full, with a line three and four abreast extending along the sidewalk for one solid block. To the everlasting credit of the management of the Regent even under this condition there was no speeding of the films.

Loew's theater presents an excellent picture and a very odd arrangement, in that there are two distinct, complete theaters, one above the other, having a combined seating capacity of 3,500. The upper theater is called the Winter Garden and is prettily decorated. The programme is combined motion pictures and vaudeville. I had the privilege of meeting Mr. Burnstein, who showed me around the two theaters with evident and pardonable pride.

At the Crown I found an excellent operating room and an excellent picture, but the operating room walls were white, which is setting up a wrong optical condition from the viewpoint of projection. S. I. Wells, vice president of Local 173, is operator.

The Model theater I found to be anything under heaven but a model insofar as the auditorium lighting be concerned. It is literally flooded with light which is allowed to strike the screen without let or hindrance, killing the high lights of the picture and rendering it a sort of sickly gray, entirely devoid of any true photographic values. The operating rom is a goodly size, and is black-walled. A. S. Smith, a returned soldier, is operator.

At the York I saw a remarkably steady and in every way excellent picture. Its depth or perspective was quite remarkable. The auditorium is well lighted. Simplex machines are used.

I visited a great many more theaters, but the movement was so rapid that I lost track. I can, however, truly say that in all the theaters visited I did not see anything but good work on the part of the operators. If what I saw is a fair sample of Toronto's screen results, as produced from day to day, then the work of the Toronto men is good.

During my wanderings I called at the office of the Perkins Electric Company and met George F. Perkins, president and manager, a most affable, pleasant man.

Local 173 is a progressive body which is working in harmony with the exhibitors under very able and efficient leadership. My compliments to President Dintlebeck and his corps of assistants. They are the real goods.

HAMILTON, ONTARIO.

FROM Toronto south to Hamilton I found (April 12) the ground covered with approximately three inches of snow. The reception committee of Local Union 303, consisting of George Adams, president; Howard Beddle, treasurer; Fred Baldassari, secretary, and Hugh Usher, met me at the depot with a big gasoline buggy, and soon we were in a hotel.

The motion picture theater business in Hamilton can hardly be called progressive. There is need for a good, strong shaking up. Such theaters as I saw, with the exception of Loew's new house, which is a combination vaudeville and motion picture, leave considerable to be desired. The Hamilton men treated me splendidly and I don't like to say this, but the truth is the truth. Operating rooms can only be called such through courtesy. With the exception of Loew's all of them I saw were even smaller than small, had very low ceilings and come pretty near justifying the name "booth" or "coop."

Loew's theater is a new house, seating 2,400. F. H. Turner is manager. The operating room is of fairly good dimensions, and is in every way excellent, except for the color of its walls, which are rather light. George Adams, president Local 303, is chief operator. Two Power 6Bs take current through two Martin converters. Two converters are installed by reason of the fact that there are two sources of power, both from Niagara Falls, one 25 cycle and one 66 cycle. One of the converters has 142 amperes capacity and the other 76. Friend Adams is projecting a 17½-foot picture 140 feet. He gets a beautiful picture, although the pitch in projection is rather steep. I must criticize Brother Adams in one respect. He has an excellent method for suspending the port fire shutters, but the fuse links in the master cord are located so far away from any possible source of fire that they would be, to all intents and purposes, useless.

And now comes a serious matter.

There was plenty of room to place the converters in an accessible location, but they have been jammed into a little triangular room in such position that it will be utterly impossible to give at least one of the motors any adequate attention. When I was there the brushes were sparking considerably. In order to adjust them and clean the commutator Neighbor Adams would have to lay down on his back and work his way in under a panel board like an angle worm, or else sling himself from the ceiling by the heels and swing head downward. In view of the fact that there was ample room to install these converters properly their location is nothing short of an outrage.

Adams has arranged an apparatus to dissolve his motion picture in such a way that the shutting off of the picture on one machine and starting of projection with the other machine automatically swings framing light into position and lights it.

At the Imperial, F. S. Morrison, manager, I found two Simplex machines in a small room opposite the screen. The room had good ports and black wall. The house is of the "storeroom" type and it may be said in excuse that a larger room would be impracticable without remodeling the theater, and this, in its turn, is impracticable, because Mr. Morrison cannot secure a proper lease. The house is a small one and Mr. Morrison lights it after the plan I proposed and described in the department some time ago. It works splendidly. No light reaches the side walls or the screen, but the entire audience can be flooded with light.

The Temple, H. H. Morgan, manager, seats 1,700 and uses a program consisting of two feature pictures and one act of vaudeville. The theater is located off the main street behind another building. It has an operating room something more than 6 feet square, situated immediately under whatever acts as a substitute for shingles. If Brother Morgan had gone any higher his operator would have been exposed to the rays of the stars. There are two Simplex projectors. The "room" has black walls and good ports. In it, too, was a novelty in the shape of an automatic sprinkler. Victor Lambrecht is chief operator. The auditorium lighting was not at all bad, except that there were lights smeared all over about everything in the orchestra pit.

Granting that the pianist needed to read her notes, I am unable to understand why she should also need to read the front wall of the stage and the feet of the piano. The same was true of all the other musicians. Mr. Morgan agreed that this was wrong and promised it would be righted.

At the Red Mill theater I found a picture with excellent color values. The blacks were very black and the whites very pure in tone. The theater is up one flight of stairs and seats 540. The operating room is little more than a cubbyhole. It contains one Power 6A and one Power 6B. L. Usher is chief operator. There is a T. & H. motor generator set, the walls of the room are black. D. Stewart is manager.

I did not visit the Princess theater, but here is a pretty classy joke concerning that temple of amusement. "They have built up a screen between the orchestra pit and the audience," said my informant, "so that the light from the music is all hidden and you would have no fault to find in that respect with regard to the Princess." "Yes," cut in another good brother, "but that screen was not built to confine the lights, but to keep the musicians from flirting with the girls in the audience." It is to laugh!

At midnight all the Hamilton operators, both union and non-union, congregated in the banquet room of the Connaught, where they listened to the gospel of better projection for something like two hours. The managers had, for the most part, promised to be present, and it is not at all to their credit that only three of them showed up. After the address the union operators gave a necessarily small but very classy banquet. The union has only twelve members, and two or three of these were out of the city. The criticism I have made of Hamilton's theaters is unfortunately justified by the facts. It is unfair and rather absurd to expect an operator to do justice to a photoplay when working in an oversized crackerbox, particularly when the crackerbox is at the top of a hot balcony and the operator breathing second-hand atmosphere being pulled in through the ports from the very hottest part of the auditorium instead of being taken in through air ducts leading from outside the building.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

I ONLY stopped in Buffalo a matter of three hours, but during that time visited the Strand and Palace theaters. The Strand, 11, 17 and 28 cents admission, has a pretty lobby, uniformed attendants and girl ushers who seem to be more interested in leaning up against the wall than in seating patrons. The auditorium lighting is excellent, except for six green sidelights, which serve no purpose that could not be served in better ways, and the orchestra light, which it smears over not only one but several sheets of music at each stand, and several stands which were set sidewise to the audience had no guard on the audience side, which is, to say the least, highly inefficient and rather foolish.

It is an easy matter to surround the top of the music stand at each of its two sides and its top with a guard from 6 to 8 inches high, so that if the stand is placed sidewise to the audience no light can reach either the eye of the audience or the screen. The inside of this guard should be painted dead black. The exit signs in the Buffalo theaters I visited are excellent, having red letters blocked out in black, so that nothing but the red letters show. At the left of the orchestra in the Strand the light from the music on the rack of the bass violinist is reflected on the proscenium arch, covering a considerable portion of its area. The picture light was good and the speed of projection was approximately correct. In the balcony two posts with green lamps set up a bad condition for those seated behind them. The operating room lens ports are not stopped down, hence the vagrant light surrounding the light beam escapes into the auditorium, injuring the definition of the picture and otherwise doing damage.

The Palace charges 6 and 11 cents admission. The picture is set in a black border about 10 feet wide, and is not brilliantly illuminated. The auditorium lighting is good, except for one of the most foolish tricks I have seen in a long time, viz: At the time of my visit there was no orchestra. An automatic organ was grinding away all by its lonesome, yet above the music on the front of the organ or piano a light burned bravely, its reflected rays glaring back from the sheet music into the eyes of the audience. I had never before known that an automatic organ had to have illuminated sheet music to play by. I watched the projection here for quite some time and, except for the rather weak illumination, there was no fault to find. The operating room is small, located at the top of the balcony, has light-green walls and good ports. Its two Power 6A machines looked to be pretty old. The interior of the room was flooded with light. I am told there is considerable poor projection in Buffalo, but that is only hearsay. The two houses I saw are downtown theaters and presumably among Buffalo's best.

RICHARDSON.

Keystone Owner of "Dough and Dynamite"

So Declares Judge Hough in District Court, Who Issues Perpetual Injunction Against New Apollo.

THE Keystone Film Company, with the co-operation of W. H. Productions Company, through their attorney, Walter N. Seligsburg, has won a court victory that should be of benefit in eliminating duping and infringement upon copyrights.

Judge Hough, in the District Court of the United States, Southern District of New York, has ordered adjudged and decreed as follows:

That the Keystone Film Company is and has been at all times the owner of a good and valid copyright to Charlie Chaplin in "Dough and Dynamite" and other Keystone subjects.

That the New Apollo Feature Film Company, Inc., and Hugo Mayenthau have infringed upon the said copyright and upon the exclusive right of the Keystone Film Company by purchasing, distributing and vending, exhibiting or causing to be exhibited, copied or causing to be copied, printing or causing to be printed the said copyrighted motion picture photoplay entitled "Dough and Dynamite" and other Keystone subjects.

That the defendants and each and every one of them have settled with the complainant by agreement for all damages and profits done by the said motion picture photoplay and in infringement of the said copyrighted photoplay, entitled "Dough and Dynamite."

That a perpetual injunction has been granted directed to the said defendants, the New Apollo Feature Film Company, Inc., and others from directly or indirectly handling any work containing any and all portions of complainants' said copyrighted motion picture photoplay entitled, "Dough and Dynamite," and other Keystone subjects that have been copyrighted, each before referred to.

In lieu of the fact that Hugo Frank Mayenthau has given valuable information to the Keystone Film Company and W. H. Productions Company concerning the duping and infringing upon copyrighted Keystone subjects which are now legally being distributed by W. H. Productions Company, this action has been discontinued against the defendant.

San Franciscans Give Dinner to Allen

Film Men Say Good-Bye to Exchangeman Who Comes East as Special Representative.

A TESTIMONIAL dinner was tendered J. W. Allen, of the Famous-Lasky Corporation, in the Italian room of the St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, on the evening of April 16, by his "reel" friends. The gathering was in the nature of a farewell affair, as three days later Mr. Allen left for New York, by way of the Northwest, to become special representative for the concern with which he has been associated for the past three years as manager of the local branch of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, which distributes Paramount and Artcraft productions in the Pacific coast territory. Several country exhibitors came to the city to attend the event, and local theaters and film exchanges were well represented in the list of those present.

Louis Reichert, president of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California, acted as toastmaster, and during the course of the evening called upon many of the film men for remarks, among those responding being Joe C. Cohen, president of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Honolulu; Louis R. Greenfield, of the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit; James Beatty, of the Liberty Theaters of San Jose and Fresno; E. B. Johnson, of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit; E. O. Child, of the Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Sol L. Lesser, of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc..; Ralph Quive, of the Greater Vitagraph; Howard J. Sheehan, of the Rialto theater; William J. Citron, of the Fox Film Corporation, and A. H. Moore, of Berkeley, Cal. On behalf of members of the film trade M. J. Cohen, of the George Kleine System, presented Mr. Allen with a handsome walrus traveling case and a brief case to match. Previous to this Mr. Allen's business associates had presented him with a traveling set.

Those who spoke at the gathering recounted Mr. Allen's rise in the film world and expressed confidence that he would meet with similar success in his new and enlarged field. They commented upon the selection of a western man for the position and declared that this was a fitting recognition of the initiative and aggressiveness of the Pacific coast in the film distributing business. Mr. Allen, to whom the gathering was in the nature of a surprise, spoke feelingly of the severing of local ties.

Others who attended the dinner were C. J. Goddard, Louis Reichert, Marion H. Kohn, C. W. Midgley, Newton E. Levi, Louis Hyman, R. Abraham, Ben F. Simpson, Louis Lurie, M. L. Markowitz, H F. Moore, Reuben F. Cohen, H. W. Schmidt, J. C. Cohen, A. B. Attkisson, A. Karski, S. H. Levin, Edgar T. Lowman, D. K. Shanks, Vernon R. Moore, H. H. Hicks, M. H. Lewis, Herman Wobber, Joseph A. Huff, J. A. Partington, Lester Fountain, E. C. Gainsborg, G. B. Sargent, Thomas Nunan, W. Harold Wilson, C. D. Swint and T. A. Church.

Franklin Brings Good Reports of Provinces

Halifax and St. John Exhibitor Says Men in Industry Are Prosperous—Convention in September.

J. M. FRANKLIN of the Strand Theater, of Halifax, N. S., and the Opera House, St. John, N. B., visiting New York last week, reported everything in the Maritime Provinces is booming. Notwithstanding the high rate of war taxes imposed on the theaters and films, the industry is exceedingly prosperous and everybody is in excellent spirits, he declares.

In reply to a question whether Halifax was still feeling the effects of the terrible explosion which occurred there on December 6 last, he said: "With the exception of a few windows still boarded up and of persons who were blinded by the explosion you would never know that the city had ever passed through such a catastrophe. It is wonderful how cheerful the people are all through the provinces. The war has made great demands for men, but all who remain at home try to preserve a calm exterior and make life as pleasant as possible by patronizing the pictures. They are their chief means of entertainment and pleasure."

Asked if the Maritime provinces expected to have a convention this year, Mr. Franklin replied emphatically in the affirmative. "We are going to hold it in Halifax, sometime in September," he said. "Do you know that our association, the Maritime Exhibitors' Association, has been of great benefit to us. It is so well organized and the personnel is of such standing that there isn't a member in it who is asked to make an advance deposit. His word is his bond and his credit is unquestioned. Never before as during the war has the power of organization and co-operation been so fully realized. Not only in our direct business matters, but in securing redress and consideration in legislative affairs. Don't forget to tell those who may come to Halifax in September that they will meet a bunch of real exhibitors, who will make their visit there a red letter one."

PUT FUNKHOUSER UP TO PRESIDENT.

Morris Gest Writes to Mr. Wilson Complaining of Eliminations in "Hearts of the World."

MORRIS GEST, writing on behalf of Elliott, Comstock & Gest, distributors of the Griffith film "Hearts of the World," has complained to President Wilson of the action of Major Funkhouser, Chicago censor, in eliminating two important scenes from that subject.

"One shows a German soldier stabbing a wounded Frenchman with a bayonet on the battlefield," writes Mr. Gest, "an actual incident described to Mr. Griffith by a colonel of the British army. The other scene shows German officers in a dugout forcing their unwelcome attentions upon French girls, who are condemned to virtual slavery, based upon actual facts in possession of the British government."

Mr. Gest appeals to the President to authorize the United States District Attorney in Chicago to investigate the matter.

CAPITAL PLANNING TO BEGIN WORK MAY 15.

The Capital Film Company, a $2,500,000 concern incorporated under the laws of Indiana, financed by Indiana bankers and business men, with its executive offices in Indianapolis, will begin active production by the middle of May. Announcement to this effect has been made by Ike Schlank, president and general manager of the new company. Mr. Schlank is now concluding negotiations for the company's new studio site, which is to be on the outskirts of Indianapolis, on a tract of thirty acres, through a portion of which runs Indiana's picturesque waterway, White River.

Construction material for the studio and laboratories and other buildings to be erected is ready to be sent to the company's new location as soon as the deeds to the property have been signed. At the same time, Mr. Schlank is concluding negotiations with various players, directors, cameramen, etc., all of whom are instructed to report for actual work by May 15.

HOWARD HICKMAN TO BECOME DIRECTOR.

Howard Hickman, who has been prominent for a number of years as an actor on both the stage and the screen, is about to enter a new career, that of a director of motion pictures. Mr. Hickman has been appearing for some time past as a player in Paralta productions. His first picture will be "The Rainbow," in which Miss Bessie Barriscale, who in private life is Mr. Hickman's wife, will be the star.

Mr. Hickman will continue as a delineator of screen characters, although it is improbable that he will be included in the cast of "The Rainbow," as it is his desire to concentrate upon the staging of the production.

FRANK MAYO SIGNS CONTRACT WITH WORLD.

Frank Mayo, who has appeared with success in many World Pictures as leading man for Ethel Clayton, Kitty Gordon and others, has just signed a long-time contract with the World Film Corporation. He will be featured in several important forthcoming World productions.

Mr. Mayo has every reason to be the accomplished actor that he is. His grandfather was one of the leading players of the American stage.

BERST PRESIDENT OF U. P. T.

J. A. Berst makes the announcement that he has accepted the presidency of the United Picture Theatres of America. This is the job that was originally held by Mr. Ochs.

Essanay Busy on "Young America"

President George K. Spoor Outlines His Present Policy—Interesting Items Concerning the New Production.

FOR some time past, now and then, idle rumors have cropped up that Essanay had retired temporarily from the producing field. Nothing, however, has been farther from President George K. Spoor's purpose, as Essanay is now busily engaged in the preparation of its next big feature production, "Young America," the rights for which were purchased from Cohan and Harris. The scenario has been put in shape and Director Berthelet has completed his plans for interior settings and picked his exterior locations.

Sets have been erected at the Essanay studios and everything is in readiness to start work on the floor. The cast is being picked from New York and Chicago and has practically been completed. This is in line with President Spoor's present policy of picking a cast specifically to fit the picture, instead of relying on stock company players.

"I believe that in picking the cast in this way we will be able to get players more exactly suitable for the various roles than by picking them from a stock company," says Mr. Spoor. "One has a much wider field to choose from.

"With a stock company you pick the play to fit the cast while, by the other method, you pick the cast to suit the picture. We are now practically working on the same basis as in the theatrical profession.

"We have several other plays on hand and will produce them as soon as 'Young America' has been completed. 'Hawthorne of the U. S. A.' probably will follow 'Young America,' although this has not yet been definitely decided."

"Young America" was taken from the Broadway success written by Fred Ballard. One of the interesting features of the production will be the juvenile court scenes. The court itself is a replica of the famous court of Judge Ben Lindsay, of Denver. Director Berthelet personally visited the court and has already constructed the sets. Judge Lindsay also advised him as to his own conduct of the court, and this system will be strictly followed, in detail, in the production.

Arrangements have been made with several of the wealthy families of Highland Park for outdoor sets on their lawns and for interiors in their homes.

"The Unbeliever" at the Auditorium.

"The Unbeliever," Thomas A. Edison's compelling war photodrama, which has been scoring triumphs all over the country, was given its Chicago premiere at the Auditorium Sunday evening, April 21, under the management of George Kleine, owner of the George Kleine System, through which it is being released.

The immense gathering which assembled to view the presentation included many Chicago notables, the boxes being thronged and the vast auditorium and balcony packed. It was estimated that 1,500 people were turned away, an unusual happening for the Auditorium.

Great pains had been taken to give the presentation realistic and appropriate settings. As the production was made by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., in co-operation with the United States marine corps, two scenes were shown by way of prelude to the picture—one a camp of marines, somewhere in America, and the other an eastern port, from which United States troops are seen leaving for France. Both these scenes, which were artistic, appropriate and impressive, were staged under the supervision of Lieut. F. Kensel, retired, of the United States marine corps.

The music was a big feature of the entertainment, fifty pieces of the Chicago Opera Company's organization, under the able leadership of Arthur Dunham, being engaged for the run of seventeen days. The woman organist's accompaniment to the action of the picture was also very enjoyable.

Monday night was society night, and the attendance far exceeded the capacity, many hundreds being disappointed. On this occasion Elsie Ferguson, who was passing through the city with her company, on the way to Cody, Wyo., was impressed into service by officials of the Third Liberty Loan Committee. The charming and popular Lasky star found that it required only a little coaxing to secure $119,000 for the Loan during the intermission. Arthur Reynolds, of the Continental-Commercial National Bank, started with $25,000, and this was followed closely by $5,000 each from Thomas A. Edison, George Kleine and ex-Governor Edward Dunne, with a like amount, and still larger sums, from many others.

A notable feature of the first two presentations was the constant applause given the scenes of the picture. A review of the production appears in the issue of March 2, of this paper.

Elsie Ferguson and Company Off to Cody, Wyo.

One of the companies of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, headed by Elsie Ferguson, Tom Meighan, her leading man; Matt Moore and Escimaldo Fernandez, stopped over in the city Monday, April 22, on their way from New York to Cody, Wyo., where the outdoor scenes of "Jean of the Triple Chevron" will be made. This photoplay is founded on Sir Gilbert Parker's story of the same title, which has also been dramatized under the title "Pierre of the Plains," by Edgar Selwyn. The company was in charge of Marshall Neilan, director, who was accompanied by his assistants, Lucito Squires and Al Green, and his cameramen, Walter Stradling and R. Wagner. Sixteen others in the cast were also in the party.

This is the first picture in which Miss Ferguson has ever appeared outside of New York City. While in the city the officials of the Third Liberty Loan drive utilized her services in selling bonds. She visited the Auditorium on Society night, during the presentation of "The Unbeliever," and sold bonds to the amount of $119,000 during an intermission. The reception given Miss Ferguson on this occasion showed that she has a warm place in the hearts of moving picture lovers.

The feature will be in five reels and will be released on the Artcraft program.

"Little Mary" Captures Chicago and $2,000,000.

Mary Pickford, accompanied by her mother, Dennis O'Brien, her lawyer, and Alfred A. Cohn, representative, came into the city Saturday morning, April 20, from Pittsburgh. Notwithstanding the heavy downpour of rain that greeted her, she left the Blackstone Hotel and joined the Union Labor Liberty Loan parade. She was received with loud acclaim along the route by all who recognized her in her muffled-up appearance. Her Saturday labors netted over a million dollars for the Third Liberty Loan before she left on the night train for St. Louis, where she was engaged all day Sunday in Liberty Loan work.

Miss Pickford returned to Chicago Monday morning and after breakfast was escorted to the Board of Trade by a section of the marine corps. There she raised $500,000 in twenty minutes, and before the day's work was over she had increased that sum to nearly a million, making about two million in all during her visits to Chicago. Mary's own personal contribution to the Third Liberty Loan is $360,000.

She and her party left for California Monday night, April 22.

Theodore W. Wharton Visits Chicago.

Theodore W. Wharton, of Wharton, Inc., Ithaca, N. Y., came into the city Monday, April 22, to visit the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, which prints all positives for his company. He brought with him Episodes 11 and 12 of "The Eagle's Eye" in order to insure quick delivery, and to discuss other business at the Rothacker plant. Owing to the uncertainty of train arrivals at the present time these episodes must be delivered by special messenger.

Mr. Wharton, during a brief conversation, informed me that "The Eagle's Eye" has caught the public fancy strongly, and that the revelations made in it have created widespread surprise and comment. Letters from all over the country have come into the Ithaca plant and to the New York office, complimenting the production and the manner in which the subject is treated. Even from far-off Japan letters have been received, complimenting the producers on their manner of handling the subject and on its graphic realism. The general tone of these complimentary letters applies to the actuality of the happenings of the story and their compelling interest.

Mr. Wharton was accompanied by his wife on his visit and they returned to the east Tuesday night.

"With Luman C. Mann at Camp Logan."

Luman C. Mann writes from Houston, Texas, where he is engaged in taking certain moving pictures of Illinois troops at Camp Logan, that the boys are working from sunrise to sunset, being on the drill field eight hours a day, in addition to attending school four nights a week. Among these husky soldiers are the members of his old company (H, 131st), whom he helped to recruit in June and July last year. He writes that he had taken a most impressive and beautiful scene, one day recently, of three Illinois regiments doing setting-up exercises, and that as far as the eye could reach one could see nothing but olive drab-clad figures. There will be eighty feet of this scene.

Mr. Mann expects to get three scenes a week of the boys of Illinois until he finishes, if the weather keeps fair. It is his intention to release these films in down-state theaters so that the relatives of the boys may have an opportunity to see them at drill and in other movements. The improved change in the appearance of these boys is marvelous, Mr. Mann writes, and they will be a big surprise for the home folks.

Mr. Mann will run the films under the title "With Luman C. Mann at Camp Logan."

An Octogenarian Photoplaywright.

M. Rayon, a subscriber of the Moving Picture World since about its first issue, made a call at this office last week. Mr. Rayon is a scenario writer, at present writing exclusively for George K. Spoor. Among his plays are "The Masked Wrestler" and "God's End by the Sea." Although eighty years old, Mr. Rayon is hale and hearty, and expects to make a tour of the country in the near future, lecturing on psychology, which he has made a pet study for thirty years.

Manager of Automatic to Visit New York.

A. N. Braun, manager of the middle western offices of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, will leave for New York Monday, April 29, where he expects to remain about ten days, combining business with pleasure. Mr. Braun has been working very hard lately, satisfying his customers in his usual way, and is in need of a change and rest.

DAN LEDERMAN TRAVELING FOR UNIVERSAL.

Dan Lederman, of Des Moines, has been appointed traveling representative of the exchange department of the Universal Film Company and has started on his first tour over the entire country. The appointment was made by Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer of the company, on his recent trip through the central west. Lederman, who has worked for President Laemmle for several years, was appointed at the combined suggestion of Messrs. Laemmle and Brandt, who have followed his work and noted his success in the sales end with which he will be directly associated.

ANITA STEWART AGAIN AT WORK.

Anita Stewart has started work at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn on the first of a special series of features. Her first production will be under the direction of Wilfrid North. It will be "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," Sir Arthur W. Pinero's drama.

President Smith announces that several other famous plays have been purchased for Miss Stewart.

DUFFY RECOVERING FROM ACCIDENT.

E. H. Duffy, manager of the Chicago exchange of the Mutual Film Corporation, has sufficiently recovered from the accident in which he was recently injured to be able to be at his office again. Mr. Duffy was for five weeks in a hospital with a fractured thigh and broken collarbone. He will be compelled to walk with crutch and cane for some time.

To Advertise Chaplin with Cartoons

First National Engages Brinkerhoff to Accentuate Humor of Comedian's Interpretations.

A PLEASING variation upon the ordinary commercial advertising layout has been put into effect by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in exploiting the merits of Charlie Chaplin's new comedy series. R. M. Brinkerhoff, one of the best known of American cartoonists, has been engaged to cover every angle of Chaplin's work with characteristic drawings designed to accentuate the humor of the films. Brinkerhoff's cartoons are not only utilized for trade paper advertising, but are being published in the form of heralds and as colored lobby displays.

There seems to be a sound psychological basis for the use of cartoons in advertising the Chaplin comedies, although the First National is the only distributing organization to apply the principle up to date. The comments that have already been received upon the Brinkerhoff drawings prove conclusively that it is good business to hand exhibitors a laugh as well as a booking contract when seeking to sign them up for "A Dog's Life" and its successors.

R. M. Brinkerhoff's daily comic series in the New York Evening World, entitled "Little Mary Mix-Up," has been widely syndicated and has made him a general favorite among the younger generation of newspaper artists. A native of the middle west, "Brink" did his first cartoon work for the Toledo Blade. He also served on the staffs of the Cleveland Leader and the Cincinnati Post before coming to New York to take a course in advanced draughtsmanship at the Art Students' League. Determined to see something of art in its foreign aspects, he went to Paris after completing his studies in New York, and making the French capital his headquarters, took extended sketching trips through England, France, Switzerland and Italy. In the old medieval library at Venice the cartoonist says he came across a series of pictures of a famous harlequin of the days of Goldoni, who was said to have been the greatest clown of his race and age. Brinkerhoff copied some of the pictures of this old-time buffoon, and it is remarkable to note that his costume is strikingly similar to that affected by the greatest comic artist of the present century, the billowy trousers, tightly buttoned jacket, elongated sabots and jaunty sport-stick differing only in minor essentials from those associated with Charlie Chaplin's rise to fame. Goldoni's contemporary even wore a small mustache, and in lieu of a derby hat, crowned himself with a kind of cross between a modern alpine and an Oriental fez.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. HARLEMAN

Goldstein Is Found Guilty

Producer of "The Spirit of '76" Is Convicted by Jury on Two Counts—May Ask New Trial.

ROBERT GOLDSTEIN, producer and exhibitor of "The Spirit of '76," was found guilty April 15 on the first and second counts of the grand jury indictment charging him with violation of the Espionage act. The verdict was returned by a jury in the United States District Court and was received by District Judge Robert S. Bean.

Goldstein will not be sentenced until the return of Judge Bledsoe from San Francisco. Under the law Goldstein may receive a minimum sentence of a year and a day in the Federal penitentiary on each count or a maximum of twenty-two years and a fine of $11,000 on both counts. He will probably ask a new trial and, failing this, will appeal.

The first count on which Goldstein was convicted charges that he attempted to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny and refusal to do duty in the military and naval forces of the United States while the country was engaged in war, and the second count that he had in his possession property tending to cause such disloyalty, mutiny and insubordination.

Almost the entire day was taken up with the arguments of counsel and the charge of Judge Bledsoe. On the part of the Government it was charged that the prohibited scenes in "The Spirit of '76" were clearly under the Espionage act and calculated to give encouragement to the enemies of the Allies; that the bad faith of Goldstein had been shown by his act of returning the scenes to the film after the picture had been shown without them; that the whole course of the preparation was pro-German.

On the part of the defense historical truths were appealed to to establish the correctness of the scenes, and stress was laid on the fact that the judgment of Judge Kavanaugh of Chicago was against the immoral effect of the picture, not its unpatriotic tenor.

Robert Goldstein was born and raised in San Francisco, is thirty-five years of age, and has been a resident of Los Angeles since 1913. For some years he was head of a firm of theatrical costumers.

Something over a year ago he enlisted the services of George L. Hutchin, a promoter of the Portland Rose Festival, and the two wrote the scenario of "The Spirit of '76." A company was organized, known as the Continental Producing Company, and large blocks of the stock were sold. The record shows that while the alleged cost of "The Spirit of '76" was about $200,000, that only about $120,000 was collected from the stock subscriptions. The majority of the stockholders were Germans, it was charged.

The picture was completed at the local studio of the Continental Producing Company early last summer, and the film was taken to Chicago for its premier. It ran afoul of Major Funkhouser, the film censor there, as soon as it had been shown a few times at Orchestra Hall, and was denied a permit. The matter was taken into the Chicago courts, and Judge Kavanaugh renderd an opinion placing the ban on the picture on account of certain scenes in the film.

The production went on the financial rocks in Chicago, but after the elimination of the prohibited scenes, another attempt was made to present it by the stockholders, who had in the meantime taken possession of the picture, but the engagement in Chicago was limited and the picture was brought back to Los Angeles, where it was turned over to Goldstein, who later on got it from the creditors of the corporation.

A contract was signed to have the picture presented at Clune's Auditorium, and it was presented there to a small business, for an engagement beginning Tuesday, November 27, 1917. It ran that afternoon and night, Wednesday afternoon and night, and Thursday matiness, but it was seized Thursday night, under a complaint alleging that it was a violation of the Espionage act. Goldstein was taken in custody and placed in the County Jail, where he remained, being unable to raise the bond of $10,000 required by Judge Bledsoe.

The scenes to which exception was taken, not only by the courts, but by Federal officials, purport to represent the famous massacre of the settlers in Cherry Valley, Pa., before the Revolutionary War, by English and Hessian soldiers.

These scenes represented an English soldier stabbing a baby with a bayonet; the stabbing of an inoffensive old Quaker in the pioneer settlement by a Hessian; the dragging of women by the hair by English soldiers, and what is known as the "bedroom" scene, representing an English officer carrying a young woman into his chamber.

On the stand Goldstein admitted that he had restored these scenes to the picture, but offered as an excuse that they were necessary to put "pep" in the show. There is an involuntary proceeding in bankruptcy against the film now pending in the local Federal court, with debts of more than $50,000.

William S. Hart on Liberty Loan Tour.

William S. Hart, whose subscription of $105,000 for the third Liberty Loan is said to be the largest thus far received from any representative of the motion picture industry, started at the request of Secretary McAdoo on a tour of the principal cities of the Pacific coast on behalf of the third Liberty Loan, his first appearance being at San Diego, California, April 12. He also has spoken in Los Angeles, Salt Lake, Ogden, Butte, Spokane, Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, Oakland and San Francisco.

Film Promoter Faces Charge of Swindling.

Clarence C. Barr, director general of the Wonderlamp Pictures Corporation, a local film producing enterprise, was ordered held for trial in the superior court on a charge of defrauding Mrs. L. Verne Major, 418 North Chicago street, Los Angeles, of $160.

Evidence was offered in the case indicating some of the organizers of the corporation had induced several women, who aspired to become motion picture stars, to invest funds in the company with the promise that they would be given special training, and made "headliners" in big productons.

From Barr's statements on the witness stand, the company had a turbulent existence. He said that it incorporated under the laws of Arizona, but decided it would be much better to reincorporate under the laws of Montana.

To tide over the period of financial distress, Barr said he had accepted contributions from actresses and that he had given five weeks of his services without compensation. Barr named C. A. Bentley as the manager of the company, to whom the funds had been intrusted.

Mrs. Catherine Aucott, a brunette living at 427 South Figueroa street, was alleged to have invested in the concern and was promised a leading part in the productions of the company.

Barr asserted he was successful as a director and could prove it to the court. He said they had arranged to conduct a studio at Glendale and held five rehearsals there. He also said he had offered the investors $500 worth of the company stock when it appeared that the company might not be able to meet the demands.

The court upheld the motion of George A. Glover, deputy district attorney, to bind Barr over for trial and fixed bail at $2,000. Barr was released on bonds.

Mr. Lytell was caught in the act of looking over the Moving Picture World for the review of his recent picture.

Miller's Theater to Open September 15.

The new Miller theater, now being erected at Eighth and Main streets for Fred Miller and associates, is being rushed to completion in record time. Work was started on the theater on February 11. All the walls are in up to the mezzanine floor and the great concrete slab covering the entire mezzanine floor has been poured; also the two grand stairways on either side of the main entrance, which lead up to a gentle incline known as a "ramp" and the main ramp leading to the balcony are a mass of solid concrete reinforced by steel bars.

To get ready for this operation and to bring the work up to its present condition, it has taken over 250,000 feet of lumber, 70 tons of steel bars, 800 tons of rock, 450 yards of sand, 4,000 sacks of cement, 100 kegs of nails, three and a half tons of wire and about fifty tons of miscellaneous materials. The new theater will be ready September 15.

A Visit to the Metro Studios.

A reporter for the Moving Picture World, under the guidance of Ralph Robinson, inspected the busy studio of the Metro in Hollywood this week, in which are produced the features starring Edith Storey, Bert Lytell, Viola Dana and Harold Lockwood. On this particular day Mr. Lytell was just ready to start on a picture under the direction of Will S. Davis, while on another stage Harold Lockwood was before the camera under the direction of Fred Balshofer. Miss Storey was out on location, as was also Miss Dana.

Alfred Le Vino, who has been sent out from the Eastern Metro studios to head the scenario department, was engaged in framing a story with manager of productions George D. Baker. Griffith returned to Los Angeles on Thursday, April 18, after three weeks in New York and Boston completing business arrangements attendant upon the opening of "Hearts of the World" in these two cities. Mr. Griffith will start work immediately on his second war picture, which he is going to produce for Artcraft.

George W. Chase Seriously Ill.

George W. Chase, for several years a member of the Triangle playing forces, is seriously ill at Dr. Barlow's Sanitarium in Hollywood, California. He contracted a heavy cold several months ago. He continued at his work until two weeks ago when serious symptoms developed and his immediate removal to the sanitarium was ordered.

Taylor to Direct Miss Pickford.

William D. Taylor will direct Mary Pickford's Artcraft feature, "Captain Kidd, Jr.," taken from the stage success of that name. Taylor is now working on the scenario, and will start in to film the picture as soon as Miss Pickford returns from her Liberty Loan tour.

Overholt to Write Titles for Triangle.

Miles Overholt, well known in local newspaper circles and who conducted the motion picture department of the Los Angeles Examiner, has been added to the title department of the Culver City studios of the Triangle Film Corporation and will try his hand on both comedies and dramas.

After leaving his position as dramatic editor with the Los Angeles Examiner Mr. Overholt accepted a position as managing editor of the Salt Lake Telegram, from which he has now resigned to join the Triangle.

Christie Acquires More Land.

An addition of a six and a half acre tract of land diagonally across from the Christie Film studio has been added to the possessions of that company. Right now this land is covered with lemon trees and Mr. Christie is selling the fruit at a small cost to the various Hoover grocerterias in Hollywood.

The new tract will be used as the site for special sets. The companies at the Christie plant have increased so rapidly that, with the building of one more stage there will be no more room for out-of-door sets. It was particularly for this variety of set that the new tract was procured. The Christie studio already occupies the block on Sunset Boulevard from Gower to El Centro streets. Its new land possession gives it two blocks of studio frontage.

Yorke-Metro Returns to Gordon Street.

The Yorke-Metro company, of which Fred J. Balshofer is the president and Harold Lockwood the star, will reoccupy its former studio at 1329 Gordon street in Hollywood after May 1. Since their return here they have been occupying space at Metro's plant. At this writing their efforts are being directed in the production of Mr. Lockwood's next Metro release, "Lend Me Your Name."

Arbuckle Subscribing Heavily to Loan.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, the motion picture comedian, this week subscribed $50,000 to the third Liberty Loan. This amount is credited to the First National Bank of Long Beach, California, of which team Mr. Arbuckle is a member. This subscription is the comedian's third one, his total in bonds representing a splendid amount. Mr. Arbuckle and his team associates are planning a series of events in Long Beach, boosting the sale of the bonds.

Cleo Madison Back on the Screen.

Cleo Madison is to return to the screen after a year of intermittent vaudeville. She has a principal role in the feature picture now being made in the National Film Company's plant at Santa Monica Boulevard and Gower street, which will be a sequel to the feature "Tarzan of the Apes." Other principals in the cast of this company are Enid Markey, Elmo Lincoln, Colin Kenny, Thomas Jefferson, Clyde Benson, Phil Dunham, John Cook and Nigel De Brullier. Wilfred Lucas and Bess Meredith are co-directors.

Marin Sais to Be Hayakawa's Leading Woman.

Sessue Hayakawa has decided upon Marin Sais as his leading woman. To become a member of the Hayakawa company Miss Sais has given up a contract covering a period of eight months, during which she was to play the principal role in a serial production. Miss Sais made her bow in filmdom with the Vitagraph company in New York seven years ago. She played in the New York studio for two years and then came to California with the Bison company, leaving that concern for the Kalem institution.

Marin Sais.

While with the Kalem company Miss Sais was featured in numerous productions, among the notable ones being "The Girl from Frisco," "The American Girl" and "The Potter and the Clay."

Miss Sais is an exceptional horsewoman and she has a large following among the motion picture fans, due chiefly to her splendid work in western dramas. In these her feats of horsemanship and her remarkable swimming have played an important part. She is a perfect type of the outdoor American girl and in the Hayakawa Productions she will be afforded ample opportunities to display her accomplishments along athletic lines.

Exhibitors Drop Into Town.

Mrs. Pemprase, of the Star theater in Elsinore, was one of the visitors in town this week, as well as Mr. Cooper, who was formerly manager of the Columbia theater in Phoenix, but who is opening up on Riverside Park, in Phoenix, on May 15. Ethel Clayton Signs Paramount Contract

ETHEL CLAYTON has signed a contract to make a series of productions to be distributed as Paramount Pictures. Miss Clayton, commencing early in June, will begin work at one of the West Coast studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and although the title of her first picture has not been announced at this time it is stated she will appear under the direction of William C. De Mille. Miss Clayton can readily be termed a pioneer film player. When Henry B. Harris was in the height of his dramatic triumph Ethel Clayton was creating her first impression as a dramatic actress in "The Lion and the Mouse."

Ethel Clayton.

Miss Clayton appeared in the first three-reel production, "When the Earth Trembled." It was made by the Lubin company and is still being widely shown in South America and Japan.

Miss Clayton appeared in sixteen features during the three years with Lubin, the more important ones of which include "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Gamblers," "The House Next Door," "The Fortune Hunter" and "The Wolf." However, the two plays which served to bring out Miss Clayton were "The Great Divide" and "Dollars and the Woman," the latter having been directed by her late husband, Joseph Kaufman.

William A. Brady engaged Miss Clayton for the leading role in his stage play of "The Brute," but Miss Clayton preferred the silent to the spoken drama and returned to motion pictures. Her work under the Paramount banner will be along the lines of emotional domestic stories.

VITAGRAPH TO PRODUCE "LOVE WATCHES."

The Vitagraph Company has negotiated with Charles Frohman the screen rights to "Love Watches," the stage play in which Billie Burke played the stellar role, and will shortly convert it into a vehicle for Corinne Griffith. The play will be produced under the direction of William P. S. Earle.

Sherry Resigns Paramount Position

Retires as Purchasing Agent, but Retains Financial Interest in Company—Continues in Film Business.

WILLIAM L. SHERRY, one of the original Famous Players franchise owners and the first man in the United States to purchase the rights to the Jesse L. Lasky productions and who recently assumed charge of the Paramount purchasing department, has resigned from that position and his executive positions with the Paramount Corporation and will now, temporarily, at least, devote his time and enterprise to his other interests. Mr. Sherry will retain his financial interest in Paramount, which is said to be a large one.

William L. Sherry.

William L. Sherry began film operations shortly after the formation of the Famous Players and was the first purchaser of that concern's output. He opened an exchange at 126 West Forty-sixth street and immediately began exploitation of his products. During the first few months of Famous Players Mr. Sherry showed his grasp on the rental end of the business by establishing a rental price and dignity of distribution which soon earned for him the respect of various producers. When the Lasky company was formed, although other buyers bid higher than Mr. Sherry, he secured the output by reason of his remarkable handling of other big features. Mr. Sherry was one of the original organizers and vice president of Paramount, and when the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation absorbed the exchanges he became one of the largest stockholders and a director in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which office he still retains.

Mr. Sherry will continue to handle "Joan the Woman" from his new offices. He made a record in the outright purchase of this feature, and it is understood that he is in the market for other film plays of important character.

Mr. Sherry's leavetaking, from the Paramount was one of mutual arrangement and his going does not mar his great respect and friendly feeling for his associates in that organization. Mr. Sherry intends to remain in the film business, but in what capacity and in what channel he does not wish to state. He has a number of high-class propositions at his refusal and will issue a statement of his intentions within a few weeks. Temporarily he will be located at Room 501, Godfrey Building.

"STOLEN ORDERS" GOES TO BROADWAY HOUSE.

William A. Brady will present at the Casino theater for two weeks, beginning Thursday, May 2, his new motion picture drama, "Stolen Orders." The subject is a picturization of the famous Drury Lane melodrama, "Sealed Orders," which was originally produced in London at the Drury Lane theater shortly before the outbreak of the present war. It has been running there off and on ever since, having been revived oftener than any other play of its type either at the Drury Lane theater or any of the other London playhouses. It was afterwards produced in this country at the Manhattan Opera House by Messrs. Brady, Comstock, Gest and Shubert, by arrangement with Arthur Collins. It deals with German spy propaganda for which we were not prepared at that time, but have since learned, to our cost, to regard this situation seriously. "Stolen Orders" is prophetic in its story.

"THE TWO SOUL WOMAN" GOES TO BROADWAY.

"The Two Soul Woman," with Priscilla Dean playing in the dual role, opened at the Broadway Theater, New York, on Sunday, April 28,

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Real Message in Mabel Normand's "Joan of Plattsburg"

THINK of a motion picture star so fortunate at this moment as to be able to answer through the medium of a great screen production the very questions that virtually everyone in America is asking. Mable Normand is the personality who will convey this message. The medium for this message is "Joan of Plattsburg," a Goldwyn Picture that successfully has caught on the screen a story of ideals and inspiration that will heighten the faith and courage and loyalty of millions.

A great exhibitor who saw "Joan of Plattsburg" a few days ago said: "I would rather be Mabel Normand—right now—than any other star of the screen, because in 'Joan of Plattsburg' she is going to build for herself the increased affection of everyone who sees that production and carry a memorable message to the people of her country."

By creating that thought in an exhibitor's mind, "Joan of Plattsburg" is accomplishing exactly what Goldwyn expected it to do. Goldwyn knew months ago that there would be a flood of war pictures—good ones, bad ones, and indifferent ones. Goldwyn knew that the time would come in the great European conflict when millions of Americans suddenly would have the great war brought home to them in such a way as to challenge every latent spark of loyalty. Goldwyn knew that the time would come in America when every man, woman, and child suddenly would ask, "What can I do for my country?"

"Joan of Plattsburg" provides the answer. Mabel Normand as Joan, the little girl living near a great military encampment, sees for the first time in her life the pictured story of France's Joan, the greatest feminine heroine in all history. She hears the story of Joan, and asks, "Can any little girl of today be a Joan of Arc and influence the future of her country?"

And to this the answer is, "Yes, you can build up love of country. You can build faith and courage in your men. You and all other girls and boys and men and women can by your faith intensify and strengthen your country."

As the star, Mabel Normand reveals a new and brilliant phase of her splendid talents. Accustomed as she is to make world-wide audiences laugh at her wonderful absurdities and humors she is going to amaze everyone by tugging at their heart-strings and bringing a mist before the eyes of all onlookers.

Goldwyn itself believes that Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg" will do more to "keep the home fires burning" than any picture of the year.

Supporting Miss Normand is a splendidly capable cast, including Robert Elliott, Joseph Smiley, Edward Elkas, John W. Dillion, and Edith McAlpin.

Gravina Plays Comedy Role.

Cesare Gravina, the distinguished Italian comedian, whose roles in many films have always been dramatic, will appear in America for the first time in a comedy part in Pathe's feature, "The Mysterious Client," starring Irene Castle, set for release May 19.

Mr. Gravina has played at the head of his own company in the leading cities of Europe, Australia, South and Central America. When the members of his famous Italian company were called to the colors he decided to enter the motion picture field. He has appeared in serious parts in "Poor Little Peppina," "Diplomacy," "The Siren," and "Less Than Dust," in which he won great popularity.

Marie Pagano in "The Judge."

Marie Pagano, known because of her stunts before the camera as being the female rival of Rodman Law, is a member of the cast of "The Judge," a World picture featuring June Elvidge and John Bowers. Miss Pagano was selected because the role requires the actress to do some remarkable athletic feats, besides creating a characterization of unusual difficulty.

"Inside the Lines" to Go On Regular World Program

AT A large price World Pictures has just secured for distribution to World contract holders a great picture originally produced for distribution on a state rights basis. This picture is "Inside the Lines," filmed from the famous novel and stage success written by Earl Derr Biggers. Exhibitors will be immensely interested in this announcement and will await with even greater interest the announcement of the release date set for this supreme production.

When "Inside the Lines" was produced in New York City some time ago and achieved such a hit there was a rush for the screen rights. These were finally sold to the producers of the picture for $10,000 advance royalties, and the work of filming the production was started at once. Featured in the cast is Lewis Stone, who starred in the original production.

"Inside the Lines" is timely, vital, interesting, superbly staged and finely played. Playing opposite Mr. Stone is Marguerite Clayton, well known on the screen.

It is interesting to note that at the present time "Inside the Lines" has been played for over 400 times on the stage in London.

Artistic Hunting Lodge Built at Metro Coast Studio

A FORCE of twenty-two scenic artists, carpenters, decorators, cambinet-makers and "grips" worked for five days on a stage setting just built on the mammoth stage at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, which Clifford Butler, studio manager, believes sets a high-water mark for accuracy and perfection of detail.

The "set," used in a Metro production which is under way at the plant, is of a hunting lodge in the Adirondacks. The interior, 25x45 feet, was designed from old prints of English inns of the Elizabethan period, but was given a modern touch by its furnishings in hardwood. For this Technical Director Godfrey used hundreds of feet of California redwood. The massive panels, scores of them, were cut in the Metro carpenter shops and beveled at planing mills nearby.

A great fireplace of natural stone was erected on the stage. Danny Hogan, chief of props, ransacked the antique shops of Los Angeles for trophies of the chase, including hunting horns, flagons and old glassware, and from a number of wealthy sportsmen in the vicinity obtained a dozen mounted heads of wild game.

The set was expensive, but Mr. Butler would not be content with anything slipshod or carelessly done. As it stands, the setting not only provides absolutely faithful atmosphere, but is so painstakingly built that the woodwork will bear closeup "shots" without marring the illusion.

Universal's Program for May 13 Has No Long Subjects

UNIVERSAL branch exchanges throughout the country are making a drive to reestablish the popularity of one and two-reel subjects as drawing box office attractions. As an experiment as to the propriety of such a move the company in its releases for the week of May 13 has failed to list a single long feature. The entire program consists of serial episodes, comedies, and the usual split reel releases.

Several months ago President Laemmle sent out letters to numerous exhibitors throughout the country to obtain opinion as to the value of short subjects as against the costly features. The answers showed a wide diversity of opinion. While all exhibitors acknowledged that no theater program would be complete without at least one short subject few of them were willing to admit that any program would be complete without a five-reel feature.

Scattered throughout the replies were a few letters from exhibitors who felt that their audiences would be just as well pleased with a program consisting of a one-reel subject, a two-reel subject, a three-reel picture, and a split news reel.

President Laemmle feels that the Universal bookings for presentation during the week of May 13 will give some sort of an answer to the short reel question. No matter what the answer may be, however, Universal will continue to release its special attractions every two weeks.

The releases for the week of May 13 consist of episodes of three serials now running. The fifth episode entitled "Treachery at Sea" of "Boy Scouts to the Rescue" has been shipped to all Universal exchanges. The Boston territory is using ten prints of each episode, and are asking for more as a result of the manner in which the national organization of the Boy Scouts has got behind the movement.

"The Bull's Eye," with Eddie Polo, is in its fifteenth episode entitled "The Stained Face." This serial has but three more weeks to run.

Marie Walcamp is appearing in the seventh episode of "The Lion's Claw."

The comedy releases for the week consist of a two-reel L-Ko, a one-reel Nestor entitled "By Heck," featuring Hy Mayer, and a one-reel Star with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran entitled "The Dodgers," a laugh maker showing how the nimble wits of two young men allowed them to live without any apparent means of support.

The remainder of the releases for the week consist of the split-reel subject, the Universal Animated Weekly, Universal Current Events, and Universal Screen Magazine.

Twenty-Seven Features The Tourneur Record

MAURICE TOURNEUR, who has just launched his own independent producing corporation, has established an unusual directorial record during his four years in America. Mr. Tourneur's first independent production, "Sporting Life," based on the Cecil Raleigh and Seymour Hicks' famous Drury Lane melodrama, will be his twenty-eighth American production.

Mr. Tourneur came to this country on May 1, 1914, after a distinguished career as a screen director in France with Eclair and other big Parisian organizations. He began producing late in May for the World Film Company and has been steadily occupied with World Film and Paramount-Artcraft ever since. In his forty-six months in America Mr. Tourneur has made twenty-seven productions. This is an average of one production every seven weeks since May, 1914. At the same time Mr. Tourneur's offerings have in no sense been unimportant program offerings or minor photoplays.

During his four years in America Mr. Tourneur has been the creator of a number of noteworthy photodramas. Mr. Tourneur produced "The Whip," which has become one of the most important box office attractions of the year, and he is also responsible for Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" for Artcraft. He produced "The Rise of Jenny Cushing," "Rose of the World" and "A Doll's House" with Elsie Ferguson. He directed Mary Pickford in several of her biggest successes.

Work is now well underway on "Sporting Life." Principal roles will be played by the Binney Sisters, Constance and Freddy; Ralph Graves, Warren Richmond, and others. Constance Binney is now appearing in "Oh, Lady, Lady." Mr. Tourneur has had his company at Lakewood, N. J., for several days, shooting a cross-country hunt for "Sporting Life."

Pathe to Release "Moral Suicide."

Following the announcement that under Pathe's new feature policy big productions made by independent concerns would be released through its worldwide distributing company an important statement this week carries the news that Pathe has acquired from the Graphic Film Corporation rights calling for the release of "Moral Suicide," the sensational special picture which has caused much comment.

"Moral Suicide" is Ivan Abramson's dramatic depiction of a life problem, with a cast including John Mason, Leah Baird, Anne Luther, Hazel Washburn, Sidney Mason, Alan Hale, Jack McLean, Claire Whitney, and William Lampe.

The release date for "Moral Suicide" has not yet been set.

World Pictures Employs 1500 Men in Building Big Set

THAT is claimed to be the largest set ever built in West Fort Lee, N. J., was erected there, in record time, in the World Film studios when on Sunday, April 14, working the entire day and until 4 o'clock in the morning, it almost continuously employed 1,500 persons, working with Director Jack Adolfi and a full company for the important forthcoming World production, "The Heart of a Girl." It is scheduled for release July 1.

The set occupied the entire indoor stage of World's West Fort Lee studios. Seven hundred chairs, on the ground floor of the set, these roped in in tiers of one hundred each, seated as many persons. The tiered balconies seated a like number. The fluted columns, supporting the balconies, were each made for this particular set in the World studio carpenter shop, where extra help was employed for the occasion.

Following the new rule of Studio Manager McIntyre, no plaster of paris was used in the construction of any of the parts or detail of the set. Every piece was of solid wood, hand carved. All the doors were made solid, so that no vibration was registered in opening, closing or slamming. Five hundred flags were used in decorating the balconies, and seven thousand pieces of literature in the finale of the court scene.

Working from 9.30 o'clock Sunday morning until 4 o'clock Monday morning, Director Jack Adolfi and his cameraman and captains achieved an unparalleled record in the filming of sixty-one scenes so as to turn over the studio to the various working directors at 9.30 o'clock Monday morning.

Irene Vanbrugh in "Masks and Faces."

With the appearance of Irene Vanbrugh in "Masks and Faces," a World release set for May 6, all barriers in England between the spoken drama and that of the screen are broken down. It has long been said in England when announcements were made that a famous theatrical star had been engaged for "the cinema," "they will never get Irene Vanbrugh."

When all the great stars of England volunteered to make "Masks and Faces" to raise funds for the orphans of actors who died "fighting out there" Miss Vanbrugh did not wait to be asked but hurried a message to the committee telling them "no part was too small, just please let her do her share in the great work." She was given the role opposite Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson, and when the famous picture of fifty stars is seen in this country one will readily understand why Irene Vanbrugh is regarded as the greatest actress in England.

Bessie Love Leads Pathe For the Week of May 5

BESSIE LOVE in a delightful comedy-drama, "How Could You, Caroline?" the ninth episode of "The House of Hate," "Our Fighting Ally—the Tank," a war thriller, and another laughgetter featuring Harold Lloyd are the headliners of Pathe's program for May 5.

Bessie Love is more captivating than ever in her latest comedy drama, "How Could You, Caroline?" adapted from the story by Izola Forrester and Mann Page by Agnes C. Johnston. The story deals with the exciting and amusing adventures of Caroline Rogers, an ultra-romantic school girl at the caramel and novel-devouring age.

"Poisoned Darts" is the title of the ninth episode of the exciting and highly successful Pathe serial, "The House of Hate," featuring Pearl White and Antonio Moreno, with a fine supporting cast.

"Our Fighting Ally—the Tank" is an interesting war special in line with the numerous other features of this character released by Pathe. The pictures were taken by the Official Government Pictures, Inc., and show the tank "Britannia" being used by the boys of the National Army in their intensive training.

"Kicked Out" is the title of Harold Lloyd's new one-reel comedy produced for Pathe by Rolin. In it the inimitable comedian performs a "Julian Eltinge," and appears as a buxom, blithe and debonnair young woman. The comedy woven about the new role is sidesplitting, especially when the "he-hussy" is being wooed by the father of his sweetheart.

Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 38 and 39 are released on this program.

Hamilton Will Support May Allison in Metro Subject

MAY ALLISON is supported by a superior cast of players in "The Winning of Beatrice," her second Metro starring vehicle, which was written by May Tully. June Mathis and Katharine Kavanaugh adapted the story for the screen and Harry Franklin directed.

Hale Hamilton, whom everybody remembers best as "Wallingford," makes his screen debut as Robert Howard, a hustling advertising man who helps "the candy girl," Beatrice Buckley (played by May Allison), win fame and fortune. Hamilton introduced the up-to-date businessman type to the stage and has displayed marked versatility in other parts. Besides "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," others of his recent stage successes are "The Fortune Hunter" and "A Pair of Sixes."

Frank Currier, a favorite Metro actor, plays another "father" role in this picture. Stephen Grattan plays John Maddox, Sr., the head of the Maddox Candy Company. John Davidson, who has frequently played for Metro, is cast as John Maddox, Jr. Peggy Parr will be seen as Millie Nelson, the chum of Beatrice Buckley. Dean Raymond plays Thomas Nelson, Millie's father. Frank Joyner essays the role of Henry Jenkins. Baby Ivy Ward, Metro's little four-year-old actress, plays Baby Jenkins.

May 20 is the release date of "The Winning of Beatrice."

Ebony Speeding Up Activities.

L. J. Pollard, president and general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation of Chicago, announces that Ralph W. Phillips will resume directing Ebony comedies of Company 2. Mr. Phillips is a well known comedy director, having been formerly connected with the Gaumont and other eastern companies. He has directed most of Ebony's comedies and most recently had been supervising the film editing department. With Director Charles David working fast and Director Phillips taking over the new company, and with Scenario Editor Bob Horner going at full speed Mr. Pollard believes nothing can check his spring campaign.

Two Productions Making Under Garson Management

HARRY I. GARSON, under whose management Clara Kimball Young is filming Cynthia Stockley's "The Claw" at the Lasky studios, Hollywood, has another production under full sway at D. W. Griffith's studio working on "The Hushed Hour," which is now about completed. The latter story, by Gertrude Brooks Hamilton, is a short story that recently appeared in a magazine and is said to be one of the most novel and dramatic short stories that has ever been written.

Mr. Garson has selected a strong cast, including Blanche Sweet in the principal role. Miss Sweet is surrounded with such players as Wilfred Lucas, Milton Sills, Mary Anderson, Rosemary Theby, Gloria Hope, Lydia Knott, Winter Hall, Harry Northrup and L. T. Steers. The production is being made under the direction of Edward Mortimer, recently associated with Maurice Tourneur. Charles Maigne, who has done big things, wrote the scenario.

Mr. Garson has not decided just how the picture is to be marketed, and this decision will not be reached until the completion of the picture. He is still a believer in the state rights proposition, looking at it from the angle of the buyer, as he has had wide experience in purchasing state right productions for exhibition purposes, in which he has been very successful.

With two big companies working, his various Detroit interests, and his almost constant trips back and forth from California to his New York office in Aeolian Hall, Mr. Garson is one of the busiest men in the film business.

Much Interest Displayed in Hodkinson Proposal

THE reception accorded the Hodkinson copartnership plan by the exhibitors of the West, which has resulted in large theaters of that territory—extending from Denver to the Pacific Coast and Seattle to Los Angeles—becoming associated with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been responsible for an impetus in the interest of this plan by exhibitors all over the country, according to an executive of the Hodkinson organization.

Although the West is the only section where the plan has been personally presented by Mr. Hodkinson or his associates in any extended manner, the Hodkinson home office for several weeks past has had its hands full attending to inquiries which have been received by mail asking for detailed information regarding the plan.

These letters indicate that Mr. Hodkinson's accomplishment in securing the indorsement and active cooperation of such exhibitors as Greaves and Ellison, of Denver; Eugene H. Roth, of the California Theater, San Francisco; the Kehrlein Brothers, of Los Angeles, owners of the Kinema theaters of that city; Fresno and Oakland, and other theater owners of like caliber, has not been without its significance to those exhibitors to whom the details of the plan have not yet been personally revealed.

International Shows Combination Film.

A combined reel of laughs and interest, a release of the Educational Films Corporation of America, is a feature on the programs of motion picture theaters throughout the country this week. An International Film Service black and white comedy is responsible for the laughs, and a page from Raymond L. Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature" is getting its full share of attention from the standpoint of interest.

"Doing His Bit" is the title of the comedy, and Happy Hooligan, the world's great laugh-compelling screen actor and newspaper comic section comedian, as the star, is making merriment everywhere. He "does his bit" in a manner that has never been thought of by other heroes.

In the Ditmar picture, "Turtles of All Lands," many interesting things are learned about these strange creatures. Scenes are shown explaining how turtles hatch eggs, and there is a striking demonstration of a youngster breaking from the shell and calmly walking away prepared to begin life without parental assistance.

What Famous Players-Lasky Directors Are Creating

MARSHALL NEILAN has completed "Hit the Trail Holliday," the Artcraft picture starring George M. Cohan, which Anita Loos and John Emerson adapted from the play written by Cohan. The finishing scenes were taken on Long Island, among them being incidents on a railroad train, which was chartered for the occasion, and the big strike scene.

At the Fifty-Sixth Street studio, Emile Chautard is working on interiors of "Prince Zilah," the sensational play by Jules Claretie, starring Pauline Frederick. Last week exteriors were filmed of the home of Marsa, the role played by Miss Frederick, who was a woman of Russian and gypsy parentage residing in France, and possessed of considerable wealth.

At the Fort Lee studios, Edward Jose is making rapid progress with Lina Cavalieri in "Gismonda," notwithstanding the recent inclement weather which limited his activities to indoor work.

The last scenes of "The Danger Mark," Elsie Ferguson's picture for Artcraft, were taken by Hugh Ford, which included the beautiful Louis XVI fete, which was staged at Fort Lee. It is a costume affair resulting in a sensational elopement at which the dramatic threads of the story are brought together for the finale, and was staged by Mr. Ford on an elaborate scale.

Three new Paramount pictures were finished at the Western studios last week. Donald Crisp has completed "The Firefly of France" on good time, and believes it to be one of the most effective pictures he has made for Paramount release. Wallace Reid is star, with Ann Little as his leading woman.

George Melford has also shot the last scenes of Sessue Hayakawa's last Paramount picture, "The City of Dim Faces." This picture by Francis Marion is probably among the first genuinely realistic and accurate stories of life in San Francisco's Chinatown that has been presented.

Vivian Martin has finished "Viviette" at Morosco studio.

A remarkable replica of a small canal, one of those branching off the Grand Canal in Venice, with palazzos lining the banks and a flower-decked gondola floating on the placid surface of the water, is one of the excellent scenes that is being utilized at the Hollywod studio to add beauty and realism to "Old Wives for New," Cecil B. DeMille's new Artcraft special.

Charles Ray and company under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and the direction of Irvin Willat obtained fine snow scenes for "A Son of the Snows."

After Dorothy Dalton is seen in "The Mating of Marcella" she will appear in "The Triple Cross," a mystery play of the present war, and then will be released a real Southern story.

Enid Bennett is completing "The Desert Mating."

Bill Parsons Strong for Settings.

A well-appointed clubhouse is one of the many fine settings in "Bill's Baby," the first of the "Smiling Bill" Parsons Capitol Comedies, distributed by Goldwyn. The scene shows the headquarters of a Press Club, some of the members of which are newspaper men, as the sub-title facetiously states. An exterior view of the clubhouse reveals a fashionable three-story structure draped in the country's colors. Adjoining is a large garage containing four automobiles, the property of Mr. Parsons.

"I have gone to great expense to make the setting of my two-reelers as elaborate as any of the big features," said "Smiling Bill." "I see no reason why short comedies should be presented with slipshod mountings, especially vehicles without slapstick."

Scene from "Social Briars" (Mutual).

Mary Miles Minter in "Social Briars" Leads Mutual

THE forthcoming release from the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., starring Mary Miles Minter, is "Social Briars," scheduled for release at exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation May 6.

The picture casts the golden-haired Miss Minter in a more dramatic role than she has played before and gives her opportunity to combine a more serious part with her comedy artistry and her contagious smile.

The story is by Jeanne Judson, scenarioized by Edward S. Sloman, a member of the directorial staff at the American studios, and was produced under the direction of Henry King. The cast contains such names as Alan Forrest, George Periolat, Ann Schaefer, Edmund Cobb, Claire Du Brey, Milla Davenport, Jacob Abrams and Frank Whitson.

The Strand comedy, released May 7, starring Billie Rhodes, is titled "Over the Garden Wall."

Screen Telegram Nos. 20 and 21 are released May 8 and 12.

"The Caillaux Case" Is Made True to Life

AS A proof of the absolute timeliness of "The Caillaux Case," which William Fox has just completed for the screen, the Fox forces have announced that on the very day when dispatches from France reported the execution of Bolo Pasha, the traiter, by a firing squad at Vincennes, the Bolo Pasha of this film drama was executed at the Fox studio at Fort Lee.

Every scene of the picture had been completed but the execution of Bolo. The history of the case had been followed to the minutest detail, and the senational episodes in the careers of Joseph Caillaux, "evil genius of France"; Mme. Caillaux, his wife, and Bolo Pasha, the Kaiser's agent in France and America, had been recorded up to the minute. Nothing was lacking but the definite announcement of the arch-traitor's end.

Even the set of the prison yard at Vincennes had been made, and the actors in the scene had been notified to be ready at any moment. Director Richard Stanton, anticipating the execution, awaited only the flash from the wire to go ahead with the shooting of the final act in the big world intrigue.

Speaking of the filming of this great scene in "The Caillaux Case," William Fox said the next day, "I doubt if there has ever been anything quite like it. Although this picture is a film drama which covers years of time and required many weeks to portray on the screen, its final scenes are alive with current interest. It is history and it is news."

Production at U City Is Rapidly Increasing

PRODUCTION at Universal City is being pushed to the utmost. The big lot appears to be busier at present than at any time for several months. Not only are there several Universal special productions, comedy and serial companies working, but Bluebird and Jewel each have two complete outfits on the big lot, and four other producing companies are taking advantage of President Laemmle's offer of several months ago to turn a portion of the big production plant over to companies with which he has no affiliation.

Mae Murray is next to be starred in a photodramatization of "The Big Little Person," the well known novel by Rebecca Hooper Eastman. Robert Leonard is directing the production, and had the company in San Francisco for the past week staging metropolitan scenes from the popular romance. Bess Meredyth wrote the working scenario for the photoplay.

Carmel Myers has started work under the direction of Elsie Jane Wilson in "A Penny's Worth of Love," a light comedy romance by Olga Printzlau. This picture will follow "The Marriage Lie" and "My Parisian Sweetheart," which promise to be two of Miss Myers' greatest screen successes.

"Nobody's Bride" is the title under which Ella Hall's latest Universal picture is being made. Harry Pollard, who directed many of Marguerita Fisher's productions, will handle the megaphone for the petite Universal star, and Eddie Ring Sutherland, a nephew of Blanche Ring, the popular comedienne, will have the leading masculine role.

Ruth Clifford and Kenneth Harlan will be the featured players in Rupert Julian's next production. "The Shadowed Man" is its working title, and, as the name suggests, it is a detective story.

Scene from "The Interloper" (World).

Power of Suggestion Underlies Triangle's "Honest Man"

THE power of suggestion is the motive in "An Honest Man," which heads the Triangle May 5 schedule, with William Desmond in the title role. Environment made Benny Boggs (Desmond) a tramp. Through suggestion he becomes an honest man and wins regeneration. The play presents the situation of a careful, happy-go-lucky tramp who despised work and worry until a big task was placed upon his shoulders. Graham Pette and Ann Kroman are in supporting roles. Frank Borzage, the director of "The Shoes that Danced" and "Innocent's Progress," supervised the production. Henry P. Dowst wrote the story. Pliny Horne photographed.

"Mlle. Paulette," the second release of the week, is described as a dashing story of the gay white way with a touch of the Adirondacks. It was written by George Cowell and scenarioized by Frank Condon. Wallace MacDonald is the leading man. He is pictured as a rather speedy scion of a New York millionaire, sent by his overworked parent to a summer resort in the Adirondacks with a view to removing him from the temptations of the Great White Way.

Claire Anderson has the title role. George Pearce, Walter Perry, Dot Hagar, Anna Dodge and John Lince are in the cast. George Hernandez is Wayne, Sr.

"I Love Charles Albert," with Edward Brady and Ann Kroman, is the two-reel Keystone comedy release the week of the fifth.

Strong Cast Selected for "The Wolf-Faced Man"

THE cast selected for the Diando Film Corporation's production as a Pathe serial of "The Wolf-Faced Man," a story of thrilling adventures in the West by Lucien Hubbard and W. A. S. Douglas, is a strong one. The two leading roles are played by George Larkin and Betty Compson, while H. P. Carpenter, Fred M. Malatesta, Ora Carew, and True Boardman play important parts.

George Larkin is famous for the remarkable stunts which he performs in moving pictures, and is probably the originator of the modern acrobatic style of screen acting that seems to be proving more popular all the time. Among the more recent examples of his daring was his work in Kalem's serial, "Grant, Police Reporter."

Betty Compson is one of the most attractive girls on the screen, having been scoring heavily for the past two years in Christie comedies. Fred M. Malatesta, playing "Black Jake" in the serial, was born in Naples, Italy, and after being educated at one of the most famous military colleges in that country started his professional career with Novelli and Zacconi. Horace B. Carpenter, who plays James Grant, father of Thelma Grant, was for years a celebrated singer of the light opera stage under Henry W. Savage and Sanford Dodge. He has appeared in Selig, Bosworth, and Lasky pictures.

Oro Carew, who plays the part of the vampire in "The Wolf-Faced Man," has been under the direction of Griffith and Cabanne. True Boardman, who plays "Broncho Hartigan," is the son of Carro True Boardman, the actress and writer. He was starred in the "Stingaree" serial of sixty reels from E. W. Hornung's celebrated stories. Stuart Paton, the director, started out in life as a chemist and painter, having been born in Glasgow, Scotland. Among the pictures he produced are "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," "The Grey Ghost," and "The Voice on the Wire."

Anita Brown, 280 Comedy Pounds.

Fair and fat but not forty is Anita Brown, the 280-pound comedienne who furnishes comedy thrills in "Cyclone Higgins, D.D.," a forthcoming Metro All-Star Series picture with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the stellar roles. This picture was written and directed by William Christy Cabanne.

Miss Brown, who is the heaviest actress in pictures, is a fountain of good humor. She is an authority on the question of weight, as she has played the game of taking off flesh and putting it on, according to all rules. She believes that some women are fat from choice.

Wolfville Tales Are to Alternate with O. Henry

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week by General Film Company that it has taken over the distribution of the screen version of the Wolfville Tales written by the late Alfred Henry Lewis. These in two-reel form will be alternated with the O. Henry stories as Broadway Star Features.

The Wolfville Tales are strong, virile stories of the great West, which the famous short story teller knew intimately from first hand knowledge. They are brimful of plot value and human interest material.

"The Clients of Aaron Green," the first release, dated May 4, has been termed a regular "he-man's" story of the West, rich in human interest material, exciting episodes and flashes of humor. The tale deals with the attempt of a too-zealous young lawyer to establish himself in his profession in a western mining town.

The week following, General Film will release an O. Henry story, "The Purple Dress," a heart interest story with Agnes and Evart Overton in the leading roles.

What Goldwyn's "M" Trio Is Doing.

Spring days find Madge Kennedy near the end of "The Fair Pretender," by Florence C. Bolles, under the direction of Charles Miller. During the week many effective exteriors were made on the Long Island estate of Senator George W. Loft.

Mabel Normand, elated at the predictions made by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, and others regarding the enthusiasm which will be created by "Joan of Plattsburg" is working with renewed vim on her newest vehicle. Clarence G. Badger directs in Joan's successor. The title has not been announced.

Mae Marsh returned from Georgia with Director Hobart Henley and in the course of a few days finished "The Glorious Adventure," the Edith Barnard Delano drama. Miss Marsh found everything in readiness for her first scenes in a vehicle in which she will be directed for the third time by Mr. Henley. A distinguished cast has been provided.

Frank Beamish with World Film.

Appearing in the forthcoming World picture, "Clarissa," starring Madge Evans and Johnny Hines, and written for them by Maravene Thompson, is Frank Beamish. Those familiar with the activities of Sothern and Marlowe will recognize him as the stage manager of E. H. Sothern for many years. He did not confine his work alone to producing, however, but appeared with Mr. Sothern in his production of "If I Were King."

Samuel Goldfish Praises "Joan of Plattsburg"

As an indication of the joy that now reigns in the house of Goldwyn over "Joan of Plattsburg," Mabel Normand is in receipt of a letter from Samuel Goldfish, Goldwyn's president, pronouncing this to be by all odds the finest picture that this screen favorite has ever made.

A special showing of "Joan of Plattsburg" was held for a number of prominent exhibitors holding business meetings in New York, and these visitors were unanimous in their delight over the production, which will have its nationwide release May 5.

After this showing, where the effect of the picture upon an exhibitor audience had been noted, Mr. Goldfish wrote Miss Normand the following letter:

"My Dear Miss Normand: I have just seen 'Joan of Plattsburg' in company with some of the most prominent exhibitors of the country, who were our guests for a private screening. It is not merely my opinion, but their opinion as well, that 'Joan of Plattsburg' is the finest thing you have ever done for the screen.

"If there is a man, woman, girl or boy in America who, loving this country, is not reached in his deepest emotions by your performance of the little orphan girl at the big Plattsburg encampment, then that person will be lacking in humanity and loyalty to the nation.

"'Joan of Plattsburg,' as we all knew in advance, is a story of ideals and inspiration. It was designed to make everyone here at home realize how they, too, could serve their country as valiantly as those who have gone away to fight. Your little Joan conveys the inspiration of the historic Joan, who has left her imprint upon the history of the world.

"I am so glad that we avoided making 'Joan of Plattsburg' just another finely done war picture; that we realized there was equally big drama to be found here among the millions of loyal Americans now pledging their resources behind our nation at war.

"In spite of our knowledge of what a truly splendid artist you are, I confess my delight at witnessing the still bigger work you have achieved in 'Joan of Plattsburg.' It will take its place in picture annals as one of the most charming and distinctive pictures of the year.

Pathe's "Yellow Ticket," Strongly Cast, Set for June 2

THE release date of Pathe's screen version of the famous A. H. Woods' play, "The Yellow Ticket," produced by Astra under the direction of William Parke has been decided upon, and this important picture is set for June 2 under Pathe's selective feature service plan, while it is announced that a number of important houses have already applied for dates on this picture.

In addition to Fannie Ward, Warner Oland, and Milton Sills in the three big parts in "The Yellow Ticket" are the well known players Helen Chadwick, Armand Kalisz, J. H. Gilmour, Leon Bary, Anna Lehr, Nicholas Dunaew, Charlie Jackson, Edward Elkus, and Richard Thornton.

Miss Chadwick scored recently with Antonio Moreno in "The Naulahka," and has also been added to the big cast of the Pearl White-Antonio Moreno serial, "The House of Hate." Mr. Kalisz played the part of the villain in "Innocent," and does remarkable work as Count Rostov in "The Yellow Ticket." J. H. Gilmour is known as one of the best character actors on the screen. Leon Bary is a famous French actor. Anna Lehr is equally well known. Nicholas Dunaew was formerly with Vitagraph, and is an authority on the proper presentation of Russian stories. Charlie Jackson played Lincoln as a boy in Chapin's Lincoln picture.

Edward Elkus played one of the principal parts in "Les Miserables," and Robert Thornton has been seen in many Pathe productions. An effective advertising propaganda has been prepared.

Catalina Figures Big in "The Demon."

George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's west coast studios, spent a week on Catalina Island photographing exteriors for "The Demon," a Metro production starring Edith Storey.

Many of the scenes in "The Demon," which Mr. Baker adapted from the novel of the same name by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, are laid in Algeria and on the island of Corsica. Before beginning work on the production Mr. Baker made a tour of the mission country of southern California, which, with its ruins of the old Spanish missions, its palm trees and other semi-tropical vegetation, offered a colorful background for a story of the near east.

The director, however, wanted both land and water, and so decided on Catalina as the ideal location.

"Milk-Fed Hero" Is Rural Burlesque.

The release of the fourth of the Ebony comedy series, "A Milk-Fed Hero," is announced by General Film Company.

It provides an opportunity for the company of negro players to present upon the screen in the form of a rural burlesque the droll and inimitable humor of their race.

Following this will come "Busted Romance."

Bret Comedies Nearly Ready.

The activities at the Tom Bret headquarters continue at high speed and the first two-reel productions of their output, featuring James Aubrey, will be shown to the trade during the next two weeks.

Barker and Gordon with "Dollies."

Two of the most popular young men of the screen, Bradley Barker and Huntley Gordon, are leading men for the fascinating Dolly Sisters in "The Million-Dollar Dollies," a Screen Classics superfeature, written and directed by Leonce Perret. Barker and Gordon play Jack Hobson and Tom Hylan, respectively, who are the sweethearts of the Dolly Sisters in this romantic screen fantasy.

Bradley Barker is well remembered for his work opposite Edith Storey in "The Eyes of Mystery," her initial Metro All-Star Series picture.

Huntley Gordon is best known as leading man for Lucille Lee Stewart, whom he has supported in such feature pictures as "The Destroyers," "The Conflict" and "His Wife's Good Name."

"Young America" Getting On.

Essanay has made arrangements with several of the wealthiest residents of Highland Park, one of the beautiful suburbs of Chicago, to have scenes taken in the forthcoming George K. Spoor feature, "Young America," in their grounds and in the homes. It is expected that this will lend an unusually realistic atmosphere to the play. Work practically has been completed on the interior settings in the studios, and the beginning of the picture is waiting only for more clement weather to do outside scenes. Several of the cast have been selected in Chicago from the various shows.

Ten May Releases for Essanay.

Essanay's releases for the month of May will be comprised of ten pictures, including the Essanay-Chaplin comedy, "A Night Out," in two parts. This was one of the most successful and popular of the Chaplin comedies. Other releases for the month will include "Broncho Billy's Last Deed," Broncho Billy's Squareness," "Broncho Billy's Secret," "Broncho Billy and the Greaser," "Broncho Billy's Fatal Joke," "Slippery Slim and the Impersonator," "When Slippery Slim Met the Champion," "Snakeville's New Waitress" and "Slippery Slim's Dilemma."

The second set of ten pictures of Broncho Billy's western photoplays will start May 24 with "Broncho Billy and the Greaser." These plays proved so popular that it was decided to issue another block of ten, making twenty pictures so far scheduled for release.

Another block of ten of the Snakeville comedies also will be issued beginning June 1, one week after the last issue of the first set of ten.

Toto's "The Junkman" Set for May 26.

On May 26, Pathe will present Toto, the inimitable comedian who built up the large children's attendance in his two-season engagement at the New York Hippodrome, in "The Junkman," another of his wholly original characterizations.

His recent picture, "Fare, Please," played to big success at the Rialto, Fox, and Loew houses in Greater New York, and on the strength of this he is expected to score even more heavily in "The Junkman."

William Farnum and Francis Carpenter.

Master Carpenter Takes Life Seriously These Days

THE ambition of Francis Carpenter, the William Fox starlet of "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin" fame, has been gratified in "True Blue," the production that William Farnum has made for Standard Pictures.

"Big Bill" and Francis have always been great pals, and the latter's fondest hope is to be Farnum's successor when he grows older. When he was told by Director Frank Lloyd that he was to play "Bill" as a child in "True Blue," Francis' joy knew no bounds. He threw out his chest and strutted about the lot like a miniature Farnum, and rushed home for his "chaps" and accoutrements that go with the Western picture.

To play with Farnum, considers Francis, is about the greatest honor within anyone's reach, but to portray the same character was heaping it on with double measure. It was thought quite a joke at the Fox studios at first to "kid" the youngster about the drama, but to him it was quite the most serious affair in life, and the staff soon saw that the matter was not to be taken lightly.

Francis agrees with those who believe Mr. Farnum the finest star in all the land, and would be entirely willing to back his favorite actor with his tiny fists if it came to be a matter of argument.

"Patriotism" Soon to Be Ready.

The next Paralta-Barriscale play, "Patriotism," will soon be ready for release through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Director Raymond B. West staged the production. His first rough cut, which was shown in the studio projection room on Monday, gives promise of one of the most striking and thrilling screen dramas which has yet been made with the war as an atmospheric background, without the actual dependency of the plot upon the international conflict and without a single scene picturing a battlefield.

"Patriotism" was written by Jane Holly and R. B. Kidd, of the Paralta staff of authors, and the scenario was prepared by Julian Louis Lamothe, who has since been called into service. Mr. West expresses himself as believing it will be one of Miss Barriscale's best pictures.

Pathe's "The Yellow Ticket" To Be Heavily Advertised

THE readers of the Saturday Evening Post will read advertising on Pathe's "The Yellow Ticket," according to the company's decision, which probably marks the first time a single picture has been advertised on such a scale, and indicates the importance of this production. The magazine dated May 25 will carry "Yellow Ticket" copy, and the picture is scheduled for release June 2, when it is booked at the Rialto theater, New York.

This engagement follows on the recent announcement of Pathe's selective feature service, and it is stated on the authority of a high Pathe official that the Rialto is paying a record price for "The Yellow Ticket," because of its box office value, shelving another picture to make room for it.

Chaplin-Essanay Reissues Popular.

Advance booking orders for "A Night Out," new edition Essanay-Chaplin, have established a record for the series, despite the fact that it enjoyed a tremendous run when it was first issued, according to General Film Company.

Many prominent exhibitors are arranging to feature this new edition Chaplin for runs of from three to six days, a policy which has prevailed quite generally in connection with the other subjects in this series.

Philadelphians Like "Tarzan of the Apes"

TARZAN of the Apes" has just closed an exceedingly prosperous two weeks' run at the Victoria theater, Philadelphia, where it played to the largest business on record for the house.

When Frank W. Buhler, general manager of the Central Market Street Company, signed a contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for a two weeks' showing of the picture, he broke a rule that has only been infringed once before in the history of the house. His faith in the drawing power of "Tarzan" was more than justified, however, when the box-office reports began to come in. In fact the big jungle feature went even stronger the second week than it did the first.

Much of the interest manifested in the film must be credited to the fine press work done in its behalf in the Philadelphia newspapers. Feature stories were carried by the leading journals during practically every day of the run, the amount of news space devoted to exploiting its merits amounting to approximately 456 linear inches, or considerably more space than many program features get during their entire run throughout the length and breadth of the country.

The remarkable feature about this press campaign is the fact that every story seemed to have a legitimate reason for being, and got by the editors very largely on intrinsic merit as extravagant advertising spreads were not indulged in to any great extent. Reproductions of some of the best publicity stories are being printed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to help exhibitors in other parts of the country in putting over "Tarzan" to the best advantage.

Pathe Shows Women Munitioners.

The great work of the women munitioners of England is shown in Part 1 of the "Britain's Bulwarks" series produced by the Official Government Pictures, Inc., and released exclusively through Pathe at twelve weekly intervals beginning May 12.

The women are shown leaving their homes for the factory at 5 o'clock in the morning. Upon their arrival they change into comfortable overalls, and are seen donning woolen socks and rubber shoes preparatory to "checking in" at 6 o'clock. Among the scenes a fair worker is shown gauging the depth of explosive in a nearly completed shell. She clears the screw threads, inserts the acid, puts in the detonator, which causes the shell to explode when it strikes, and seals the "nose" of the finished "Hun-getter."

Included in Part 1 are interesting scenes showing the British cavalry at the front in France.

"My Four Years in Germany" Playing Double Bookings

MY Four Years in Germany," which is now being shown in the larger cities throughout the country, is living up to every prediction that has been made of its unusual box-office appeal by those who have witnessed its prosperous run at the Knickerbocker theater, New York.

The first city after New York to get a glimpse of Ambassador Gerard's screen revelations of his experiences at the Prussian court was Indianapolis. The film was put on at the Circle theater on April 7 and played to such unprecedented business that S. Barret McCormick, managing director, held it over for the second week, thereby breaking a hitherto inflexible rule of the house. Much of the success attained by the Gerard film in Indianapolis could be attributed to the fine promotion that it received at Mr. McCormick's hands. Half-page and quarter-page ads were used in the daily papers, and by dwelling upon the authenticity of Ambassador Gerard's message, interest in the picture was stimulated to a degree unequaled by any film that has been shown in Indianapolis within recent years.

In Boston "My Four Years In Germany" opened at the Tremont Temple for an indefinite run on April 14 and has been filling the house to capacity every day since then. The film was accorded a remarkable reception by the Boston newspapers, such a conservative journal as the Boston Transcript devoting one of its leading editorials to an indorsement of the film.

In drawing the attention of the New York public to the double run of the film at the Knickerbocker and Strand theaters during the week of April 28, an effective advertising "splash" was put over by the decoration of the Heidelberg building at Broadway, Forty-second street and Seventh avenue, with appropriate advertising matter in full colors that enforces the notice of all who visit Longacre square by day or night.

160 New York Houses See Chaplin in Week

FOLLOWING its notable pre-release showing at the Strand theater during the week of April 14, Charlie Chaplin's initial First National comedy, "A Dog's Life," was booked by 160 of the leading houses of Greater New York during the week of April 21, while 80 other theaters, averaging 1,000 seating capacity each, featured the big laughmaker during the week of April 28.

According to the report filed by Sales Manager Carey Wilson of the First National Exchange of New York, six of the "big time" vaudeville houses booked the comedy for the full week of April 21, headed by Keith's Palace, which is acknowledged to be the premier variety house of America, the list included the Colonial, Royal, Alhambra and Riverside, all B. F. Keith theaters, as well as Fox's Academy of Music.

In Brooklyn during the week of April 28 "A Dog's Life" was one of the most heavily advertised features at Keith's Orpheum and Bushwick as well as the Crescent theater, and was also selected by the management of the New Brevoort to open the latest temple of the silent drama to make its appearance on the skyline of the Greater City.

Interstate Exploiting Zeppelin L-21's Raid

THE Interstate Film Company, through its advertising and publicity representatives, the Press Service Bureau, announce the completion of its unique production, "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21." The film has been carefully edited and will be issued as a two-reeler, every inch of which is replete with revelations and action.

John A. Libston, the well known English war photographer, and Sam Siegel, formerly manager for William Fox in New Jersey, both of whom are members of the Interstate Film Company, sailed for England in the summer of 1915 to photograph scenes of the war for the American market. In deciding on a subject that would insure the fullest educational and commercial value they could not have selected a better one than the Zeppelin and its activities. In fact no phase of the war has been so universally discussed or created such world-wide interest, and yet, not to mention films, even ordinary still photographs were not sufficiently available to satisfy this interest evidenced by the motion picture public.

To photograph the German Zeppelin leave a German port, start on one of its murder orgies, follow it on its path of devastation and destruction on every trip and finally be on the spot when England's ace of aces, Lieutenant W. L. Robinson, plants the successful shot that sealed the doom of the L-21 might be considered impossible. The Interstate Film Company claims to have succeeded in accomplishing just this.

The production is not a Thomas H. Ince one and should not be confused on account of the slight similirity in title. "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21," produced by the Interstate Film Company, is claimed to be an actual picturization of the L-21 raiding London and its subsequent destruction.

The Interstate Film Company will announce the details concerning their methods of disposal and sale of the film in the next issue of the World.

Clara Kimball Young at Her Los Angeles Home.

Clara Kimball Young Likes the California Climate

THE final scenes of "The Claw," which Clara Kimball Young is making, under the management of Harry I. Garson, for release through the Select exchanges, have been photographed. Allowing the necessary two weeks for cutting, titling, etc., a print of the picture will be in New York for advance showing about the middle of May. Immediately upon the completion of "The Claw" Miss Young and her associates, who are now working in Los Angeles, will begin the production of "The Savage Woman," another pretentious picture which is to be made before the company's return to New York City, some time in June.

The presence of Miss Young on the Pacific Coast at this time is interesting in view of the fact that this is the star's first visit to California for the purpose of making pictures. There are those who contend that California is the only place in the United States where moving pictures can be properly and profitably produced, and yet Miss Young, with a highly successful career behind her, seems to have proved quite the contrary. Word from the player to her New York offices is to the effect that she has succumbed to the climatic lure of Southern California and is enjoying her stay there. She does not say, however, that all of her future pictures are to be made in the land of the golden oranges.

Just why Miss Young finds herself well satisfied in Los Angeles while her former haunts in the East are being swept by the chill April winds may be imagined after a look at the accompanying photograph, which shows not a "location" in her new picture, but a corner in the garden attached to the big private residence on West Adams street, Los Angeles, which Miss Young and her party have leased for their stay on the coast. Miss Young is accompanied by her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Kimball, and her aunt, Mrs. Grace Aylesworth. A butler, a chauffeur, a French maid and two house servants were taken from New York to make the Young party comfortable during their stay. Just a few days ago Miss Young's limousine was shipped from New York to add to its owner's comforts.

"The Hushed Hour," the big state rights picture in which Mr. Garson and Miss Young are interested, will be completed about the same time as "The Claw."

Katterjohn Working on Long Picture.

Monte M. Katterjohn, Paralta scribe, is now engaged in writing a story for which he has spent three years in gathering material.

"In this screen story I will not be hampered by any sort of restrictions," he says. "The story will be the thing, and the cast will be adapted to it. There will be no stars or featured players. I expect it to be about eight or nine reels in length when produced for the screen.

"It is a big dramatic story which will receive the best of handling possible under the best of conditions—which means that the restrictions of warping the story to suit a star, or cutting or padding it to make a certain set length of film footage, will be removed."

Innovations in Lighting in "Salome."

The motion picture realm is to see many innovations in lighting as novel as they are effective in "Salome," Theda Bara's forthcoming Fox super-production.

It is said that although the Fox studios at Hollywood, where the picture was made, are among the best equipped in the world, more than $15,000 was spent in installing the necessary apparatus for the scenes. Most of the new work appears in the action that takes place in the chamber of Herod. A score of artists and mechanics worked under the supervision of J. Gordon Edwards for seven weeks on the reproduction of the King's throne-room.

Four Men and Four Women Lead Paramount-Artcraft

EIGHT Paramount pictures are scheduled for release during the month of May presenting variety of stories. Three of the productions are from the Ince plant in California. The sexes are equally represented among the stars, the women including Pauline Frederick, Enid Bennett, Dorothy Dalton, and Marguerite Clark, and the men Sessue Hayakawa, Jack Pickford, Charles Ray, and Wallace Reid.

On May 6, Pauline Frederick, Enid Bennett, and Sessue Hayakawa are seen in new vehicles. Miss Frederick plays the stellar role of Katusha in "Resurrection," the story of Russian conditions by Tolstoy. The chief supporting roles are played by Robert Eliott, John Sainpolis, and Jere Austin.

Enid Bennett in "The Biggest Show on Earth" plays the part of Roxie Kemp, daughter of a circus proprietor, and intimate scenes of life under the big tops are shown. In the cast are Melbourne MacDowell, Earl Rodney, Ethel Lynn, Bliss Chevalier, and Carl Stockdale.

In "The White Man's Law," Hayakawa is seen as Ghengis, an ivory trader on the West Coast of Africa, who loves a pretty French Sudanese girl. James Young produced this picture, and Florence Vidor, Jack Holt, Herbert Standing, Maym Kelso, Forrest Seabury, and Joseph Swickard are in the cast.

Jack Pickford's "Mile-a-Minute-Kendall" is issued May 13. This is a virile play by Owen Davis, directed by William D. Taylor. The chief supporting players are Louise Huff, Charles Arling, Jane Wolff, Casson Ferguson, Lottie Pickford, Jack MacDonald, W. E. Lawrence, and John Burton.

The release for May 20 is Dorothy Dalton in "The Mating of Marcella," from the story by Joseph Franklin Poland. The director of this picture was John Stumar, and Thurston Hall, Juanita Hansen, William Conklin, Donald MacDonald, Milton Ross, Spottiswoode Aitken, and Buster Irving are in the cast.

Marguerite Clarke's stage success, "Prunella," is the release of May 27, and during the same week Charles Ray in "His Own Home Town" and Wallace Reid in "Believe Me, Xantippe," are offered.

"Pruella" is the story of a girl who is reared in at atmosphere of extreme innocence by her elderly aunts, and who elopes with a strolling actor and is taken over the world by him. The production was staged in an exceptionally artistic manner by Maurice Tourneur.

Charles Ray in "His Own Home Town" has romantic and thrilling adventures, and returns to his little home town and puts to rout the grafting politicians who forced him to leave the place of his birth to achieve success.

The story of "Believe Me, Xantippe," is unusual. Olga Printzlau is responsible for the screen adaptation, which was directed by Donald Crisp. It gives Wallace Reid a romantic role.

Los Angeles Praises "Heart of the Sunset"

THE verdict of Los Angeles on Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset" is favorable to this production.

Quinn's Rialto, the first theater in the country to present this production to the public, did capacity business all week, greatly stimulated by the reviews and praise of the Los Angeles daily newspapers.

As a result of its success at Mr. Quinn's Rialto, Goldwyn's Los Angeles office reports heavy bookings on this production throughout that territory.

The next big opening for "Heart of the Sunset" will be at Sheehan & Lourie's Rialto theater, San Francisco, where these showmen will put a big publicity drive behind the production. The story is now running as a serial in one of the big San Francisco dailies, linking up with the presentation of the picture.

A. G. Talbot, manager of the America theater, Denver, has booked the subject for immediate showing, and he, too, finds that one of his local Denver newspapers is running the story as a magazine page serial.

Theda Bara Working on Story of Philippines

ALTHOUGH the photodrama will soon reach the half-way mark in production William Fox is just announcing that Theda Bara is making another big picture in California under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. The story, which is by the playwright and author, George Scarborough, is said to be swift and stirring and is a dramatic account of an episode in the Philippines after the American occupation. Its original title was "Maria of the Roses," but this will probably be changed.

The role of Maria Valverde, the heroine of the subject now in work, provides Miss Bara with a background practically fresh to the screen, which is to portray the daughter of an American civil engineer stationed at La Trinidad on the Island of Luzon. The young woman is willful, romantic and capricious; artful, yet artless, and she stands out sharply from the military personages that help make this a colorful production.

Fox Names Players for First Zane Grey Story

A TELEGRAM to the William Fox offices from the studios in the west brings word that William Farnum has begun work on "Riders of the Purple Sage," the first of the two Zane Grey stories he is to do. Frank Lloyd, who is directing the photoplay, has assembled most of the principals. Katherine Adams will again appear opposite the star.

Other important members of the company are Marc Robbins, William Burress, Murdock McQuarrie, William Scott, J. Holmes and Nancy Caswell. The scenario is by Mr. Lloyd.

The entire company will leave the Hollywood plant in the near future for extended "location" work in Arizona, as the major part of the action is laid in the out-of-doors. Zane Grey will accompany the party.

Mr. Farnum commenced on his new vehicle directly he had finished the Liberty Loan tour on which he was engaged. It is said that approximately $2,000,000 in bonds were sold through the star's efforts. He worked tirelessly for the Loan and lost his voice entirely as a result of his speeches in its behalf. Director Lloyd was with the actor during the trip.

Mr. Farnum himself bought $88,000 worth of Third Liberty Bonds. Mr. Lloyd took $12,000, making a total subscription of $100,000. One of his greatest achievements was the selling of $110,050 in bonds in twenty-two minutes at Reno, Nevada.

Bryant Again Supporting Nazimova.

Charles Bryant, noted English actor, who was leading man for Nazimova, the famous Metro star, in "Revelation," is again playing opposite her in her second Screen Classic production, "Toys of Fate," also released by Metro. Mr. Bryant has also been a leading member of Mme. Nazimova's company of players presenting Ibsen's "Wild Duck," "Hedda Gabler" and "The Doll's House," which has had such a successful season on Broadway.

Mr. Bryant made his debut in London in Sir Arthur Pinero's productions, where he became very popular. In 1900 he came to the United States with Mrs. Patrick Campbell and remained with her during her two record-breaking seasons.

Following that he became the leading man for Ethel Barrymore in her revival of "Captain Jinks." He then appeared in George Bernard Shaw's "Misalliance," in Robert Hitchin's "Bella Donna," and in plays of John Galsworthy. Mr. Bryant also was Nazimova's leading man in her dramatic vaudeville sketch, "War Brides."

Mr. Bryant is of splendid bearing and is over six feet tall.

Balshofer Secures Four Novels.

That Harold Lockwood will be well supplied with choice vehicles for some time to come is indicated in an announcement by Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke-Metro company, that the photoplay rights to four successful novels by well known writers of fiction have been acquired for early production with Mr. Lockwood as the star.

These novels are "Lend Me Your Name" and "Pals First," by Francis Perry Elliott; "The Yellow Dove," by George Gibbs, and "A King in Khaki" by Henry Mitchell Webster.

John Wanamaker Buys Simplex.

A Simplex projector bought recently by John Wanamaker from B. F. Porter, 1482 Broadway, New York, was used at a smoker of the Sphinx Club held at the Waldorf Astoria, New York City, on Tuesday, April 16, before its shipment to the Wanamaker store for use at entertainments to be held for the benefit of the Wanamaker employees.

The machine was used to project a series of cartoons of various members of the Sphinx Club, an organization made up largely of advertising men.

Scene from "Resurrection" (Paramount).

Pauline Frederick's "Resurrection" Is Released May 6

A PLAY lending itself to exploitation on a grand scale is "Ressurrection," the Paramount release of May 6, starring Pauline Frederick in the role of Katusha, the heroine of the Tolstoy story, whose tempestuous life has been one of the most widely read stories in the world of fiction. The combination of author, play and star is a formidable one, which, added to the spectacular production, should prove effective in the box office.

Tolstoy is admittedly one of the most forceful writers the world has seen. The incidents of pathos and sensationalism crowded into the life of Katusha make this role one of the most exacting and emotional. Blanche Walsh created this role on the American speaking stage.

Charles E. Whittaker adapted "Resurrectfŏn" to the screen. His familiarity with Russia was of great assistance in visualizing this Tolstoy play.

Miss Frederick's qualifications to portray the difficult role of Katusha has been amply demonstrated in the past, and she has appeared to advantage in many Paramount pictures in emotional characters, the more recent of which were "Madame Jealousy" and "La Tosca."

As the play in a large measure deals with the nobility of Russia, massive settings were required. One of the largest interiors is the big courtroom, where the unfortunate victims of autocracy are sentenced to Siberia, and a big ensemble is the seemingly endless line of prisoners on the snow covered road to the far off exile. Chief among the supporting cast are Robert Eliott, John Sainpolis and Jere Austin.

Lockwood's Next Is Farce Comedy.

After having "done" five melodramas and comedy-dramas, Harold Lockwood will be seen in farce comedy in "Lend Me Your Name," a new Metro All-Star Series production, now being staged at Metro's Hollywood studios under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer. The photoplay is an adaptation of Francis Perry Elliott's novel by Mr. Balshofer and John B. Clymer.

Harold Lockwood plays a dual role, an earl and a burglar. In his supporting cast appear Pauline Curley as "the girl," Bessie Eyton as Sophronia, Bert Starkey as Dr. Dinger, and Stanton Heck as Hastings, a real estate agent who poses as a duke.

Fifth Avenue in O. Henry Story.

The "Sisters of the Golden Circle," a forthcoming O. Henry picture for General Film release, was produced last week on top of a sightseeing bus which cruised up and down New York's crowded Fifth avenue, taking scenes for the O. Henry story. Practically the whole tale is laid out of doors.

The cameraman, Tom Malloy, was stationed on top of the hood which protects the driver of the car, while the action of the drama was presented on the roof seats of the big bus under the direction of Kenneth Webb, with Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres in the leading parts.

Select Completes Cast for "De Lux Annie"

SELECT'S "De Luxe Annie," on which Norma Talmadge and her forces are busily at work as the star's May release, is progressing rapidly with the cast completed. The screen version of Edward Clark's successful play of the same name has been prepared by Paul West; the filming is under the direction of Roland West, and the photography is by Ed Wynard and Albert Moses.

Norma Talmadge's leading man again will be Eugene O'Brien. O'Brien plays the role of Jimmy Fitzpatrick, the confederate of the crook heroine in the "de luxe game." Another male role of major importance has been intrusted to Frank Mills, well remembered for his superb work on the stage with Mrs. Pat Campbell, Olga Nethersole, Forbes-Robertson and Sir Herbert Tree, and also on the screen.

Work on "De Luxe Annie" is going ahead under full speed at Norma Talmadge's Forty-eighth street studio, where this well known crook play is being filmed with the fidelity to detail and characterization that mark every Select picture.

Nineteen "Cleopatras" Still Touring the Country

ACCORDING to figures now at hand in the William Fox offices what is said to be probably the largest number of exhibitors that have ever played any production on a percentage system have shown the Theda Bara super-production, "Cleopatra," on that basis. Twenty companies are still touring the United States and Canada with prints of the big photo-spectacle.

Although a score or more of these companies have been out on the road continuously since October, 1917, when the picture was first presented, there still remain many large cities throughout the country that have not seen the film. Mr. Fox explains this on the ground that it has not been found possible to accommodate them at an earlier date, on account of the press of bookings and the length of time for which they have been made.

The big cities that are just seeing "Cleopatra" include New Orleans, Des Moines, Youngstown, Akron, Canton, South Bend, Evansville, Fargo, Joplin, Galveston and Waco. Hamilton, Canada, is also on this list.

Within a few weeks extended engagements will be played in Cincinnati and Louisville—at the Mary Anderson theater in the latter.

How thoroughly the nineteen companies are covering the United States—one is in Canada—with "Cleopatra" is evidenced by the announcement that in the week just closed they were scattered in the following way:

Two companies in Michigan and one each in Louisiana, New York, Massachusetts, Iowa, Ohio, Vermont and New Hampshire, Connecticut, Montana, Washington, Arizona, California, Illinois, Minnesota, North Dakota, Canada, Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma, and Texas.

The Fox offices report that everywhere the exhibitor is enthusiastic over having shown "Cleopatra" on percentage, because they have had the benefit of an experienced manager and an advance man, who have seen to it that the film has been properly advertised and publicized. The result, Mr. Fox says, has been splended business.

Warren Kerrigan in "Toby" Again Puts on His Harness

THOMAS J. GERAGHTY'S screen version of "Toby," the novel by Credo Harris, has been completed and is now being read for final approval by Warren Kerrigan and Raymond B. West, who will direct the picture. The production has been planed for five reels and the cast will be made up from the stock of Paralto productions with Miss Lois Wilson, who has appeared with Mr. Kerrigan in his last two pictures, probably appearing in the leading feminine role.

Production of this film will be rushed as much as possible without reducing the standard of quality of the picture, due to the fact that Mr. Kerrigan's absence from the screen after the great success of his first two Paralta plays, "A Man's Man" and "The Turn of a Card," has brought a great demand from the public for more of this star's pictures.

Adda Gleason to Have Chief Role in "The One Woman"

AFTER some delay, due to varied discussions concerning the scenario, cast and other details of production, the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation, through its president, F. Eugene Farnsworth, has at length made definite announcement concerning the final cast selection and the time for the commencement of filming of the novel, "The One Woman," by Thomas Dixon, Jr.

Miss Adda Gleason, who gave such an admirable delineation in the leading role of "Ramona," will appear in the principal role, that of Ruth Gordon. Miss Clara Williams is to portray the character of Kate Ransom, while Lawson Butt will interpret the part of Gordon. Herschell Mayall will play Overman; Thurston Hall is to be cast as Morris King and Joseph J. Dowling will be Von Meter.

The screen version of Mr. Dixon's novel was prepared by Harry Chandlee, head of the Paralta scenario forces, in collaboration with Mr. Dixon himself. The final scenario was written by Harry Chandlee and E. Richard Schayer.

Photographing "The Guilt of Silence" (Bluebird).

Snow Scenes in Bluebird Displease State Officials

CALIFORNIA state officials are dismayed over the possible effect of the Bluebird release for May 13 entitled "The Guilt of Silence," because many of the scenes in the picture were taken during the worst snowstorm that has visited California in several years. It was a veritable blizzard.

For several years the hotel keepers of California, aided and abetted by state officials, have advertised the state extensively as the "Land of Sunshine" in an effort to corral the greater part of the winter tourist business. They have carefully refrained from mentioning that the mountains and high altitudes of the state sometimes are visited by tremendous snowstorms which often close traffic for days.

The scenario for "The Guilt of Silence" had been in the possession of Director Clifton for several months. He was awaiting the psychological snowstorm to get his winter scenes. At the first signs of snow during the latter part of March he got his company together and headed them for the high lands, where the blizzard broke with full force. So hard did it snow, with an accompanying wind averaging forty-two miles an hour, that the company was marooned for six days.

Upon the completion of the picture it was screened at the Bluebird studios on the Coast, and to the dismay of the California officials the picture showed that portions of the state are just as bleak as Alaska during the closed season. As the Bluebird officials consider the picture one of the best that has been turned out by the company they would not listen to the suggestion that it be shelved, but agreed to explain that the picture was taken in the California mountains at a time when the valleys and the lowlands were bathed in sunshine and warmth.

Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury are featured in the picture that has caused all the worry. It is a story of the Northland and the discovery of gold. Woven into the tale is the love story of a strong man for an adventuress, and the final severance of the ties that bind him to her.

Salisbury in the role of "Silent Smith," a prospector struck dumb during a storm to regain his speech at the crucial moment, does exceptionally good work. The work of Miss Clifford in the role of the daughter of the man ensnared by the adventuress also is strong.

Mutual-Chaplins Going Strong.

Demand for the two-reel Chaplin comedies produced by Lone Star for release through Mutual exchanges has been consistently heavy under Mutual's new booking plan. Chaplin-Mutual specials played last week in 1,692 houses in all parts of the United States.

Virtually every booking of the 1,692 was at least a second run. In some instances the pictures had been run as many as twenty times and in one instance the booking of "The Vagabond," the twenty-fifth.

Shortly after the release of "The Adventurer," twelfth of the series of Chaplin-Mutuals, a new arrangement was put into effect under which the productions were made available to exhibitors who had not made an original contract at the beginning of the series.

National Issues Rancho Series.

General Film Company announces the release of the first of the Rancho Series of two-reel stories, "In the Shadow of the Rockies," a story of action and heart interest, produced by the National Film Corporation of Denver. The story deals with the son of an eastern millionaire who is sent west to earn his own living, but who becomes involved in a series of adventures of an unusual sort. The action of the story moves at a rapid pace.

A company of capable players has been selected for the work of filming the Rancho series, which will be released every other week.

Following "In the Shadow of the Rockies" will come "Where the Sun Sets Red" and "Poverty Gulch," each of which is designed to be a story of the West with real entertainment value.

Soldiers to See Fox Films.

Two William Fox special features and two Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons are listed in the newest War Service Bulletin issued by the War and Navy Department's Commissions on Training Camp Activities, for use in the camps of the army and navy. The present Bulletin takes account of pictures released between April 1 and April 15. Announcements are issued semi-monthly.

The films are "A Camouflage Kiss," starring June Caprice and directed by Harry Millarde, and "The Bride of Fear," in which Jewel Carmen starred. The cartoons, made by Bud Fisher for release through Fox Film Corporation, are "The Freight Investigation" and "The Leak."

Carey Signs Two-Year Contract with Universal

HARRY CAREY has signed a contract aggreeing to appear in Universal pictures for two years more. The contract is said to call for a large increase in salary largely owing to Carey's splendid work in "Phantom Riders," "Straight Shooting," "Wild Women" and several other equally good pictures. The manner in which he has come forward as a true "western type" also makes him a valuable asset to Universal.

Mr. Carey is an actor who won fame and distinction on the stage before entering the world of films. He wrote "Montana" and "The Heart of Alaska" and produced these plays and starred in them.

The player has probably had one of the most diversified careers of any actor on the screen. Cowboy, street railway superintendent, author, lawyer, actor, manager, director, athlete, prize fighter, miner, expert swimmer and engineer are a few of his titles. A graduate of the New York University, Mr. Carey practiced law for a short time, but soon gave up the staid profession for a career as an author of short stories and plays and later adopted the stage as his life work.

More "Camouflage" for the Screen.

Probably for the first time on the screen an attempt said to have been highly successful has been made to reproduce with proper effect on the screen fiction's traditional phantom ship, "The Flying Dutchman."

This has been done in Annette Kellermann's forthcoming sub-sea picture, "Queen of the Sea," which William Fox is soon to release. Inasmuch as this part of the big production was filmed almost a year ago, before the American people became as greatly interested in camouflaged vessels as they are now, the Fox offices are putting forth the claim to having introduced the first camouflaged ship made for motion picture purposes.

Simplex Distributors in Town.

Nolan, president of the Swanson & Nolan Supply Company, of Denver, Colo., and Lewis M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company.

Gaumont News Reels Replete with Timely Topics

Insurance of Soldiers, the Tank "America," the Liberty Loan Campaign and War Necessities; Also First German Prisoners Captured by Americans, Among Topics Pictured.

A SOLDIER who knows that his family will be protected if anything happens to him is the best of all fighters. Realizing this, Uncle Sam has made sure that when his boys go into battle they will not worry about the future of their families. The United States Government is now said to be the biggest insurance company on earth. In Gaumont Graphic No. 4 is picture "Insurance Unit" No. 1, at the U. S. Naval Training Station on the Great Lakes, where 25,000 policies averaging $10,000 each have been written. A good-sized army of enlisted insurance experts is necessary to handle the policies.

This issue also shows the first "cruise" of the tank "America." The United States has built many large tanks for her allies, but this monster, built for her own soldiers, weighs 45 tons, and is large enough to carry the biggest British tank in its interior.

Other timely topics in this number show the opening of the baseball and bathing seasons; the Third Liberty Bond campaign, and war pictures here and abroad.

A most enjoyable subject shows the annual visit of the circus to Bellevue Hospital. Since the days of P. T. Barnum, the Barnum & Bailey circus has journeyed each year to Bellevue and given a special and free performance for the entertainment of the unfortunate children in this hospital.

In Gaumont News No. 5 there are a number of subjects which show some of the things which the United States considers as necessary for the winning of the war as soldiers and guns. One pictures a great oil field which will supply much of the oil needed to run our tanks and aeroplanes. Other subjects show the thoroughness with which we are increasing our food supply. The United States now produces annually nearly a billion dollars worth of poultry and eggs; the picture of a big poultry farm shows how this enormous production is made possible. Meat for our soldiers and the Allies must be shipped from the United States, and to increase the annual production, every child in the United States has been asked to raise a hog this year. One of the pictures shows how California is growing more vegetables. Another shows thousands of shipbuilders who have agreed to work to their utmost to bridge the Atlantic with ships and defeat the Hun.

There are sixteen news subjects. Two of these show the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury in their swing around the country to boost the Third Liberty Loan campaign.

From France comes pictures of the first German prisoners captured by the American soldiers, who are shown interned in concentration camps back of the fighting lines.

W. H. Productions Going Strong.

From advice received by W. H. Productions Co. from exchanges that are handling the twenty-eight Mack Sennett Keystone comedies indications are that they are meeting with great success.

The first five subjects have already been booked and played in a number of the representative theaters. The following is a list of the first twelve subjects.

"A Small Town Bully," featuring Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle, Mack Sennett and Owen Moore; "Friendly Enemies," featuring Sydney Chaplin and Chester Conklin; "His Diving Beauty," featuring Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle and Mack Swain; "A Polished Villain," featuring Al St. John and Charles Arling; "His Bitter Half," featuring Polly Moran and Charles Murray; "The Dynamiter," featuring Chester Conklin; "A Desperate Scoundrel," with Ford Sterling; "Soaked and Scorched," featuring Chester Conklin and Mack Swain; "A Farmyard Romeo," featuring Roscoe Arbuckle and Mabel Normand; "Looking Them Over," with Sydney Chaplin; "For Better or Worse," featuring Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle and Ford Sterling, and "The Hula-Hula Dance," featuring Charles Chaplin.

"The Hula-Hula Dance" is a special two-reel Charlie Chaplin, adapted from "His Prehistoric Past," and most of the exchanges who have secured contracts from exhibitors for the entire series have included this special Chaplin.

The advertising matter on this series of comedies is composed of attractive one, three and six-sheet posters and a lobby display of 8x10 photographs.

Madame Petrova Returns from Asheville.

Accompanied by her director, Ralph Ince, and a staff of employees, Madame Petrova returned this week to New York from Asheville, North Carolina, where she has been busy for several days securing scenes for "Patience Sparhawk." This story, adapted from the novel by Gertrude Atherton, was especially chosen among other things because of the opportunities offered for beautiful exteriors and out of the ordinary photographic effects. It was decided to shoot many of the scenes in and around Asheville, a section of the South rich in natural beauty and excellent picture locations. The scenes obtained by the Petrova cameraman, Harry Harris, are said to have fully justified expectations. Bobby North, studio manager, together with Harry Harris and a complete staff of property men, carpenters and scenic artists accompanied Madame Petrova and Mr. Ince on the southern trip.

"Patience Sparhawk" follows "Tempered Steel" on the star's release calendar and will be issued through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit sometime during the coming month. It has been adapted for the screen by Mary Murillo.

Randolph Film Reissues "The Million Dollar Mystery"

New Version in Six Reels Contains Stunts, Thrills and Sensations of Original Twenty-three Chapter Serial.

THE Million Dollar Mystery" is coming back. This film, which, some time ago, was issued as a successful serial in twenty-three chapters will again appear on the screen, not as a serial, but as a six-reel feature. It is said, that into this six thousand feet have been crammed all the thrills, sensations, stunts and action of the original, and that thrills follow each other in such succession as to remind the spectator of a modern rapid-fire machine gun.

This picture, in which such well known screen stars as James Cruze, Marguerite Snow, Florence LaBadie, Sidney Bracey, Frank Farrington and Irving Cummings appeared, and performed what many consider to be their best work, will be marketed on a state rights basis by the Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building, New York, who are acting as sales agents for the Randolph Film Corporation, which is presenting this revised, retitled and re-edited "Million Dollar Mystery."

James M. Sheldon, president of the Randolph Film Corporation, anticipates that account of the success of this picture as a serial that state rights buyers will be swamped with requests for bookings for it as a feature. "All of the original story has been retained," says Mr. Sheldon; "all of the thrills, stunts and action that made the public gasp during the twenty-three weeks the original serial ran, can now be seen in a single evening. We have received innumerable compliments upon the remarkable lot of decorative subtitles to be found in the new "Million Dollar Mystery." They were made by one of the best known artists of an eastern studio and are really of unusual attractiveness. The matter of subtitles is but one instance of the care that has been taken to make the feature version worthy of modern standards in every respect."

Reports received by Arrow Film Corporation are said to indicate that the territory will all be disposed of within a short time, as there is a heavy demand from buyers who are familiar with the success of this attraction.

Novel Advertising Stunts Result of Petrova Trip.

As a result of a trip recently made by Herbert Lubin and Bert Ennis, representatives of Petrova Picture Co., for the purpose of ascertaining the exact needs of exhibitors in the matter of proper exploitation material, several original aids have been added to the service department. The most important consists of an attractively framed photograph on glass of Madame Petrova. This may be used in theater lobbies or in store windows with either electric light or daylight, and as patrons pass the single pose of Madame Petrova changes into various positions, each change being enhanced by beautiful color effects. The attention-compelling powers of this novelty was shown by placing it in a New York store window, where it is said to have attracted the notice of 3,500 passersby during the course of an hour.

Arrangements have also been completed whereby exhibitors can secure electrotypes of any of the series of beautiful Petrova advertisements which have been appearing in the trade publications during the past year. These will also be furnished in mat form where the latter style is found to be more convenient.

A magnificent stock of 24-sheet stands has also been prepared and a certain quantity will be distributed free to each showman to aid him in exploiting Petrova productions.

Together with these helps it is contemplated issuing a new pressbook, which will contain the result of all of the suggestions gathered by Messrs Lubin and Ennis during their conferences with exhibitors, exchangemen and newspapermen throughout the country. The Petrova service department is at the present time also issuing various styles of cuts suited for newspaper and program use, together with single and double-column mats and a full line of photographs suitable for lobby display purposes.

Tallulah Bankhead in New Graphic Film.

So impressed was Ivan Abramson with the work of Tallulah Bankhead in a minor role in "The Squab Farm," a play now appearing on Broadway, New York, that he offered her one of the principal roles in "When Man Betrays," the new picture he is making for the Graphic Film Corporation.

The character she is creating calls for strong emotional scenes and reports from the studio where the interiors are now being made are said to indicate that Director Abramson has made no mistake in this selection.

While she does not come from a theatrical family, Miss Bankhead's inclination for a public life is an inherited one. Her grandfather, J. H. Bankhead, has been Senator for Alabama for the past ten years, and her father, William B. Bankhead, has just been elected to Congress.

"It wasn't an easy matter to convince my family that I should be allowed the right to follow in their footsteps and choose a public career for myself," said Miss Bankhead. "Dad has seen me in a number of amateur theatrical performances and, while he was kind enough to admit that acting was my forte, he couldn't get away from an old Southern prejudice that a girl should be kept at home and looked after and cared for like a hothouse flower. I've spent a large part of the sixteen years of my life importuning him to let me have my way, and strong emotional scenes were an almost daily occurrence until I secured his consent.

Twede-Dan Performs Daring Feat.

What might be considered a daring, as well as a life-risking feat, was performed by Twede-Dan in one of the scenes of "The Wrong Flat," the May release of the Jester Comedies. The action shows a full stage with a flying trapeze performer in full swing; as the trapeze nears the box, in which Twede-Dan is sitting, he makes a flying leap and catches the performer by the feet. Had he missed Twede-Dan would have had a drop of forty feet.

Jester Popularity Due to Diversity.

Among the brands of pictures that have accomplished a quick and ready market are the Jester Comedies, featuring Twede-Dan. Actual work of production of these comedies commenced early last December, and by the middle of January two were completed. William Steiner, the head of the company, then started a tour of the United States, and screened the films for many exchanges, with the result that he practically closed up the entire country on this trip, making arrangement for handling one two-reel picture a month. Mr. Steiner says that in all his experience he never closed contracts with such rapidity as he did on the Jesters, and that exchanges handling the Jesters are enjoying a remarkable play on the first three, "The Recruit," "His Golden Romance" and "All 'Fur' Her."

"The Wrong Flat," the fourth release to go forward in May, gives promise of exceeding the booking of any of the first releases. One reason, given for the success of this brand is the fact that Twede-Dan does not follow any one line of action, each of the comedies show him in a distinct characterization with an entirely new line of antics and each story is entirely foreign to the other.

Composer Talks of "Mickey"

Neil Moret Speaks of Success of Musical Number Founded on Mack Sennett Photoplay.

NEIL MORET, one of the author of the song "Mickey," which is adapted from the photoplay "Mickey," featuring Mabel Norman and controlled by the Western Import Co., in speaking of the success of the song, made the following statement:

"In the past there have been a number of songs adapted from photoplays, but there has not been any as yet with the exception of 'Mickey' to meet with success. This is greatly due to the fact, I believe, that in many instances the photoplay was not strong enough to link a popular song hit up with it, and in many other instances the song was not strong enough to carry along with the photoplay.

"My most popular songs, viz.: 'Poppies,' 'Cherry,' 'Hiawatha,' 'Moonlight,' 'Silver Heels,' 'Nadja,' and 'On Moonlight Bay,' were all and still are popular successes, each one being a distinct type of song and carrying a lyric that appeals to the sound chords of human nature.

"I feel that 'Mickey' is the best thing I have ever done. When I first viewed the production at the Coast several months ago it was not for the purpose of writing a song, but the theme, the story and the action inspired me so much that within two hours I had unconsciously evolved the song 'Mickey.' Irrespective of its connection with the photoplay it has become one of the biggest hits of the year, and re-orders are pouring into our offices daily.

"To date we have disposed of almost one million copies, and at the rate we are now going, five hundred thousand copies per month will be added to this amount. Now, here's the case of a catchy and melodious song, successful in itself, being linked up to what I believe one of the most wonderful, interesting and entertaining photoplays that has ever been produced, and in view of this fact, Daniels & Wilson have arranged to have 15,000 retail dealers and all of the Five and Ten-Cent syndicates in the country devote a full window display to the song whenever requested by exhibitors who are running the photoplay in their locality. These stores have also agreed to decorate their window with a portion of the lobby display on the photoplay.

"I am sure this will be one of the greatest publicity campaigns that has ever been given to a photoplay, and I also appreciate that the photoplay itself will also be of material benefit to the song."

Premier Showing of "The Unchastened Woman"

Rialto De Luxe Production Presented at Morosco Theater Before Large and Enthusiastic Audience.

SELDOM has a film production been presented to a more enthusiastic audience than the one gathered in the Morosco theater, New York, on Sunday night, April 21, to witness the premiere of the Rialto De Luxe production, "The Unchastened Woman."

Several things tended to make this other than an ordinary occasion. First, the picture is based on Oliver Morosco's successful play of the same title, by Louis

Grace Valentine.

K. Anspacker; also conventions of different branches of the motion picture industry, held in New York during the week, lent a special opportunity for representative men to be present.

In addition, in the theater in which this picture was shown, Grace Valentine, the star, is also appearing nightly in a successful comedy, "Lombardi, Ltd.," and, coupled with the fact that motion pictures are strangers to the Morosco theater, it was possibly the first time that a screen star was enabled to see herself on the same stage where others usually see her.

All seats were reserved, and not a few persons were turned away. The audience, which consisted of film producers and allied interests, together with exhibitors, on several occasions greeted the telling points in the story with applause. Among those present were: Hiram Abrams, Tom Moore, Allan Dale, Harriet Underhill, T. E. Oliphant, J. D. Williams, Col. Fred. Levy, Harry Rapf, L. Lawrence Weber, William L. Sherrill, Kenneth Hodkinson, Ben Blumenthal, B. Howells, J. Wilk, Tom North, Mr. Ramirez, A. Brunet, Joseph Miles, Jules Bernstein, Harry Reichenbach, Paul H. Cromelein, S. A. Lynch, G. B. Garrison, Samuel Goldfish, Alfred Weiss, B. Alperstein, J. A. Golden, J. L. Sullivan, W. H. Seeley, Whitman Bennett, Al. Lichtman, F. H. Elliott, Dr. Shallenberger, A. Goodstein, E. H. Hulsey, Herbert Lubin, Moe Streimer and others.

Cropper Makes Fine Sales Record.

R. C. Cropper, manager of the Bee-Hive Exchange Co., with headquarters in Chicago, handling the King Bee-Billy West comedies, reports that over fifty per cent. of the Chicago exhibitors are now showing the Billy West comedies.

The exchange of which Mr. Cropper is manager is less than two months old.

Francis Ford Selecting Cast for Second Picture

Next Production to Be "A Man of Today" by Elsie Van Name—Will Produce Series of Features During Coming Year.

FRANCIS FORD, director-general of the Fordart Films, is getting his working forces under way on the second production of that brand. During the coming year it is contemplated that a series of features will be produced, in addition to the small subjects recently announced. Care will be taken in every detail of production, from the selection of the story, which, with Mr. Ford, is one of the foremost considerations to the writing of titles. To carry on the work which has been laid out negotiations have been entered into with certain well-known directors and stars, who will be required to produce the number of pictures which will be released under the Fordart banner.

The second product, "A Man of Today," from the pen of Elsie Van Name, is already under way. Francis Ford will direct and play the lead, while Edna Emerson, who created a favorable impression in "Berlin via America," will have the stellar feminine role.

The success which is attending the first production, "Berlin via America," has made Mr. Ford enthusiastic over the future. Bids for territories are said to be coming in so thick and fast that its success is already more than assured. A very flattering offer for world distribution had been tendered, but on account of the number of inquiries received it was decided to distribute the films on the state rights basis, and Mr. Shipmen, sales agent, at 17 West 44th street, New York, says that it is only a question of a few days when practically the whole country will have been contracted for.

Working on Third Keeney Production.

The Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation is now engaged in the production of its third picture. Its first picture, "A Romance of the Underworld," which had its initial showing recently at Keeney's theater, in Brooklyn, is to be released as soon as definite arrangements can be made.

The second picture, "Marriage," by Guy Bolton, is complete, except for final touches to the film. In this picture Mr. Bolton for the first time turns his hand to scenario writing. As is well known, he is one of the most successful of America's present-day writers for the stage, numbering among his successes "Polly with a Past," "Very Good Eddie," "Nobody Home," "The Riviera Girl," "The Rule of Three," "A Fallen Idol," "Oh, Boy!" and "Oh, Lady, Lady!" The third picture has not yet received a title.

All of the Keeney pictures are under the able direction of James Kirkwood, who formerly directed Mary Pickford and other well known film stars. Mr. Keeney's art director, S. M. Unander, has supervised the construction of some exceptionally elaborate and artistic sets for the firm's two later pictures. One of these sets, representing an artist's studio, was equipped with furnishings and decorations which are said to have had an actual valuation of approximately $200,000.

Baseball Opening Indicates Picture Boom.

The extraordinary enthusiasm with which the public welcomed the opening of the baseball season throughout the country indicates, according to Lynn S. Card, general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, that a boom is in store for the moving picture industry despite the war.

"Fully 30,000 persons attended the game of the National League season at the Polo Grounds," declared Mr. Card, "and I regard that as one of the best signs for the picture business. If that many persons will go to see a baseball game in war time it is logical to assume that a great many more will go to the picture theaters.

"In more ways than one baseball and pictures are similar. Baseball is essentially an amusement enterprise, just as motion pictures are an entertainment. Each has its loyal following. It is my contention that if the baseball fans flock to see the games, despite the increase in admissions, due to the war tax and the high cost of living, they certainly will not remain away from the motion picture theaters in an effort to economize.

"Both baseball and motion pictures form a medium to relieve taut nerves. They are a sort of panacea for mental ills, a recreation that the public will need in time of stress.

"Theaters all over Pennsylvana report a general improvement in business conditions. Reports from the middle west also indicate a spirit of optimism. From the north and south, too, come reports that business is picking up rapidly and a majority of exhibitors expect a flourishing summer season."

Hirsh Talks of "Still Alarm" Purchase.

The Pioneer Film Corporation, marketing "The Still Alarm" on a state rights basis, announces the following sales of territory to Exhibitors Film exchange, Seattle, for Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana; to Swanson-Nolan Supply Company, Denver, for Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and New Mexico.

Negotiations are also under way for several other territories, and it is expected that a number of deals will be closed within the next few days. New York and New Jersey have been retained by the Pioneer for handling through its own exchange, and a number of good bookings, including the Loew circuit, have already been arranged.

In speaking of this picture, which is founded on the well known stage melodrama by Joseph Arthur, Nathan Hirsh, of the Pioneer Film Corporation, attributes the success he has achieved during the short time he has been handling this attraction to the fact that he bought the negative as a protection to his local exchange, and to prevent its being secured by speculators who would possibly place it on the market at an inflated valuation. Mr. Hirsh further states that as he is satisfied with the profit he will obtain from his own territory and is willing to dispose of the remainder of the country on the same basis on which he is working, coupled with the almost entire absence of overhead expenses, he is in position to make prices for other buyers which will net them, as well as exhibitors, a fair profit.

In addition to the sales already reported the entire European rights to this production have been secured by the Export and Import Film Company.

Exhibitors Interested in W. H. Productions.

Nathan Gordon, president of the Globe Feature Film Corporation of Boston, who has acquired the rights from W. H. Productions Co. of the three Wm. S. Hart super-features, the series of 28 Mack Sennett Keystone comedies, the series of 16 Shorty Hamilton two-reel western comedy dramas and the series of 27 one and two-reel Charlie Chaplins, states that more than the expected amount of inquiries are being received from exhibitors of the New England territory for this entire product.

Mr. Gordon is considered to be a keen judge of pictures as well as one of the shrewdest exhibitors and exchange men in the country, and the fact that he has acquired the rights to practically the entire output of the W. H. Productions Co. speaks well for their value as an asset to independent exchanges and exhibitors.

Newspapers Feature Novelization of "The Eagle's Eye"

Several Handle Story of Flynn Serial as Straight News Matter, Giving It Prominent Space on Front Page.

THE publicity campaign in connection with "The Eagle's Eye" is said to have already proved itself to be one of the largest in connection with a motion picture. Forty-seven newspapers carried a full page of text and pictures in printing a novelization of the first episode. In almost every instance it was handled, as far as the position and display were concerned, as straight news matter. The Philadelphia Public Ledger featured it as the main news story on April 20, beginning it at the top of the first column on the front page, with a continuation occupying almost a full page inside.

The Boston Advertiser and American in its Sunday edition carried the episode as the feature of the war news section. A double deck 36-point type head clear across the top of the page was used in starting the story, and the entire left hand column of the front page, with nearly a page inside, was devoted to it. With hardly an exception the other papers made the novelization the feature.

In addition all of the newspapers made the novelization the subject of an advertising campaign. The Public Ledger used numerous six-sheets throughout Philadelphia, beside space in its own columns for the week preceding the publication. The Washington Times devoted full pages during the week to advertise the beginning of the publication.

The second week showed the number of papers using the novelization increased to nearly seventy. Other papers will start week by week until the number will be about one hundred and fifty.

The difference in schedule for the various newspapers was caused by the insistence of the Whartons that the publication should occur at the time when it would be of greatest aid to the exhibitors.

"Son of Strife" Next Piedmont Feature.

"A Son of Strife" will be the next feature to be made and released by the Piedmont Pictures Corporation. It will present a cast of talented players in a story that is said to be tensely dramatic.

"A Son of Strife" is an American version of a successful Italian stage play which deals in a thrilling way with the Austrian invasion of Italy. The picture version has been made to conform with American ideas, and will be presented by American players. The treatment received by the Italians at the hands of their enemies is all brought out strongly in scenes that are said to be remarkable for their dramatic power.

This picture will be placed on the market shortly after "His Daughter Pays" has been released. In "His Daughter Pays" the Piedmont Corporation believe they have a feature which will prove a popular film, and one which will make a direct appeal to the majority of film fans. The producers assert that both of the pictures have received careful production, with attention to even the smallest details.

Breaks House Precedent to Book Serial

Laying aside his prejudice against serials, Manager Harstn, of the Regun theater, New York, booked "The Eagle's Eye" after attending a meeting of exhibitors and hearing their comments about it as a propaganda picture.

After showing the first two episodes Mr. Harstn wrote Foursquare:

"I booked it because of the enthusiasm about it as a propaganda picture. To be absolutely honest I thought it would hurt the business of the Regun, but I was willing to run it because of the patriotic value of it. I was agreeably surprised when it proved to be the best business getter I have ever run. Americans want to see it, and I have received more favorable comment on it from patrons than on any other picture which has been shown at the Regun."

Every Josh Binney Comedy to Have Plausible Story

Each Release to Have Definite Plot, Combined with Heart Interest and Laughable Situations—Series of Twelve to Be Issued, One Each Month.

NUMEROUS inquiries and three contracts executed is very gratifying to Josh Binney and his associates considering that the first announcement of the Florida Film Corporation product only appeared in the last issue of the trade papers. It is Mr. Binney's intention to present a series of two-reel comedies that will differ in many respects from the slapstick method of extracting laughs so prevalent in the present run of comedy screen plays. A good, hearty laugh is the more enjoyable when the brain is appealed to and not alone the eye, and, it is said, that every narrative employed in the production of this series will tell a plausible and pleasing story, combining heart interest and plot, and embellished with a rapid fire of comedy situations—the more effective in that all is a positive part of the story, and not a chain of acrobatic, slapstick stunts irrelevant to the theme and depending alone upon physical peculiarities and exertions to produce the desired effect.

While the Josh Binney comedies will be apart from the slapstick variety, yet it must not be thought that they are "highbrow stuff"—on the contrary it will be Mr. Binney's aim to make them just human, and depicting the bright side of life from a laughing point of view. His wide experience in the production of mirth-provoking screen plays has afforded Mr. Binney opportunity to judge as to the demands of the movie fan, and a careful study of this subject has resulted in his determination to divorce his efforts from the old lines and mark a departure that should meet with the enthusiastic approval of a majority of theatergoers. Three of these comedies, including an attractive line of advertising matter, have been completed, and are ready for release, with one each month to follow. Twelve in all and a franchise for the entire series is open to the state right buyers upon terms that are based upon an attractively sane and equitable basis. Ernest Shipman, 17 West Forty-Fourth street, New York, is acting as sales representative.

Pine Tree State Trade Letter

From John P. Flanagan, 151 Parkview Avenue, Bangor, Maine.

Mystic Theater Takes Over the Strand.

LEWISTON, MAINE.—The huge playhouse on Main street, Lewiston, now known as the Strand, but legally designated as the Lewiston theater, has just become the property of the Mystic theater, a subsidiary of the Union Theater Company, of which Colonel John H. Bartlett, of Portsmouth, is president and William P. Gray, of Lewiston, is general manager.

A quit claim deed from the Lewiston Theater Company, by its treasurer, Farley Brewer, transferred the property to Moxley Hill, of Portland, and on Saturday morning another quit claim deed transferred it from Mr. Hill to the Mystic theater, which is owned and operated by the Union Theater Company. It is understood that the various attachments put upon the property in the last few weeks have been taken care of by Mr. Brewer.

This involves no change in the policy of the theater, which has been operated by the Union Theater Company under a lease for more than a year.

The theater has had a varied history. Harry Jones and Samuel Barnabee built it. In April, 1914, they met a committee of citizens and in response to the request of this committee, undertook the proposition. Ground was broken July 10, 1914, and the opening was held January 1, 1915. The figure given at that time for the cost of the plant was $150,000, though from private information this figure was about $20,000 too small.

The house was built in first-class style. The best of everything went into the construction of it. In spite of this, it was never a paying proposition. It had periods when the patronage was very satisfactory, but on the whole, it was a sort of a theatrical white elephant. Mr. Barnabee dropped out of the partnership soon after the theater was opened. Mr. Jones continued alone for a while and then the recent treasurer of the company, J. Farley Brewer, bought it in.

Vaudeville and pictures were the first policy, then came straight pictures; stock companies tried it awhile, and then the pictures came back. Finally a lease was taken by the Keith interests, and some of the best vaudeville ever brought to Maine was tried there—but even this didn't pay.

When the Keith vaudeville period ended, E. C. DeNault came from Lowell and tried Marcus Loew vaudeville. This venture, also, was unsuccessful. And then something over a year ago, the Union Theater Company took over the lease, devoted the theater to straight pictures—and made it pay. Now, through the Mystic theater holdings, it becomes the property of the Union Theater Company.

This company now controls, through ownership or lease, all the theaters of Lewiston, and a chain of others in Maine and New Hampshire.

Buffalo Trade Letter

Local Film Men Interested in Truck Transportation.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The Chamber of Commerce has established motor truck freight routes from Buffalo to points within a 150 miles radius. It is planned to secure return loads for trucks which leave Buffalo loaded with freight for other cities, and in this manner reduce cost to both shippers. It is expected that on account of the railroad embargoes local film men may take advantage of the service. Later it is possible that truck routes will be established to points as far distant as the Atlantic seaboard.

"My Four Years" Goes Splendid.

Dr. P. C. Cornell, manager of the Majestic theater, Buffalo, used good judgment in booking Gerard's "Four Years in Germany" the week of April 21. The film was especially timely during the Liberty Loan campaign and drew the crowds. Dr. Cornell allowed local news writers and other patriotic workers to enjoy an advance showing of the picture. This plan helped to give the show a great boost.

Many Cleveland Exchanges Move May First

All Film Distributors Ordered Out of Film Building—Business Is Still Concentrated in One Center—The New Addresses.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Building, Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—May 1 will see the passing of the original Cleveland film building, probably the first in the United States. This is the Columbia building, at East Second and Prospect avenue. On that date all exchanges will have to move.

The Columbia building housed its first film exchange seven years ago, when the Lake Shore Film and Supply Company took two ground floor storerooms. Soon other smaller companies opened up in that building and at one time there were as many as twenty-five big and small concerns either handling films or directly connected with the industry, located there. Since then, however, the building owner has discouraged further use of space by film companies and recently gave notice to all to vacate by May 1.

The Select Pictures exchanges will move to the Sloan building on Prospect avenue. Manager S. E. Morris has leased some good space on the third floor of this new structure, part of which fronts on Prospect avenue. The Sloan building is located right in the heart of the film district.

The Standard Film Service, which operates exchanges in Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit, will also move its exchanges and general offices to the Sloan building, third floor. General Manager Charnas was fortunate enough to get very desirable space in this building which at present houses the First National, Foursquare and the Premier Pictures.

The United Theater Equipment Corporation will move to the new Goodman building, at 714 Huron road. This street is just back of Prospect avenue, and can be reached through an arcade in the Belmont building, another structure in which film exchanges are located. Manager Mandelbaum took a ground-floor location in the Goodman building, which is opposite the Huron road side of the Belmont building.

The Exclusive Features, the Argus Company and the Ohio Moving Picture Bulletin will move to the Belmont building. They will be located on the fourth or fifth floors, occupying the same suite of offices.

The Bell Film Service, which succeeded the United Business Association recently, will move to the Sincere building, at Prospect avenue and E Fourth street. This company has taken spacious quarters in this building, which now has several big companies.

This move does not spread out of the first district, but rather concentrates it about one block. The Columbia building is just one block from the Sincere building. It will mean that the exhibitor will save steps and time.

Ely Epstein Joins Marines.

Dusenbury Brothers Will Go to France.

Columbus.—W. J. and J. W. Dusenbury have retired from active business and are preparing to go to France to do war work. They recently announced the closing of a lease on the Grand Opera House in State street and the Vernon theater in Mt. Vernon avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

The Grand has been leased to Will D. Harris, also lessee of Olentangy Park, and the Vernon has been let to J. F. Luft and W. Shelly Pletcher for four years, effective May 5.

Mr. Harris, it is said, will pay an annual rental of $15,000 for the Grand, and maintain it as a picture house.

J. F. Luft, who has been with the Dusenbury brothers for seven years, will be retained by Mr. Harris, as assistant manager of the Grand, the Park and the Piccadilly theater, which also have been taken over by Mr. Harris. The Vernon lease, while owned jointly by Mr. Luft and Mr. Pletcher, will be managed by the latter, who has been engaged in this capacity for a number of years.

Shooting Scenes in Charleston.

CHARLESTON, S. C.—Charleston, S. C., with its nearby "Isle of Palms," is rapidly becoming a mecca for producers in quest of typical tropical backgrounds for pictures, its historic and aboriginal city streets being adaptable for the staging of a scene of almost any era or place imaginable, and the beautiful beach of the Isle of Palms being an ideal background for tropical scenes.

For the past three weeks William Fox has had a company here in charge of Director O. A. C. Lund shooting scenes for a new Peggy Hyland production as yet unnamed. During January the Pathe Bessie Love company made a major portion of the exteriors for "The Great Adventure" in and around Charleston.

"The American," a Southern producing concern composed of theater men of Charlotte and Greenville, have had a company here for the past three months, making a ten-reel production to be released under the title of "The Rise and Fall of the Confederacy," to be an historical cinema drama of the Confederate States of America. Taking leading parts in this production here are Edna Mayo and Gladden James, the company being in charge of Director Hayden, who made "The Strange Case of Mary Page" for Essanay.

Manager Dardine Has Bigger Job.

Manager E. B. Dardine, of the Universal exchange, Charlotte, N. C., is now handling from one office, in addition to the output of the Universal proper, both Bluebird and Jewel productions. That Mr. Dardine is considered by Universal as capable of handling the vast volume of business done by these three organizations through North and South Carolina and Virginia is extremely gratifying to his multiude of friends through this territory. With "Big Bill" Conn, formerly manager of the Charlotte General Film Exchange, and Wallace Walthall, formerly of Atanta, as assistants, the Universal exchange has probably the ablest managerial trio of any exchange serving this territory. The Jewel productions have formerly been handled throughout these states from the Washington and Atlanta offices.

Ollie A. Savin Back at Desk.

Ollie A. Savin, general manager of the Piedmont Amusement Company, with headquarters in Charlotte, has returned to Winston-Salem, N. C., from Baltimore, Md., where he has been for treatment at Johns Hopkins. Mr. Savin suffered a nervous breakdown in January and was carried to Baltimore by physicians for complete rest and recuperation. Mr. Savin operates here the Pilot, Elmont and Paramount theaters, and the new 1,000-seat auditorium recently completed, as well as theaters in Greensboro, Durham and Charlotte. During Mr. Savin's absence the theatrical interests were in the hands of Assistant Manager J. B. Pennington.

Clever Ads Helped "Kaiser" Film.

"The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," broke all records for receipts at the Grand theater, Wilmington, N. C., playing to standing room audiences at increased prices. Much advance interest was stirred up by the publication in local newspapers of clever advertising copy, one calling upon all secret service men and police to look out for any adverse criticism of the picture as such people gave prima facia evidence of disloyalty to America. Another flaring headline warned all enemy aliens to keep away from the theater during the run of the picture, while a third republished an Associated Press dispatch from Davenport, Iowa, reporting a traveling salesman, who became so angered when the character of the Kaiser came on the screen that he plugged it with a bullet.

New Picture House in Concord.

Charles M. Isenhour, veteran exhibitor of Concord, has leased a large store building in Concord, N. C., which is to be converted into a large and modern picture house, with a seating capacity of 450. The Piedmont will be newly equipped throughout and is expected to open about May 15.

Decision Relative to Burned Film.

BALTIMORE, MD.—A decision has been handed down by Judge Heuisler on Tuesday, April 23, in Superior Court, Part 2, of Baltimore City, relative to whether a film company can claim damages for film which has been accidentally destroyed in the operating room of a moving picture theater by fire. K-E-S-E, it is understod, brought suit against a Baltimore exhibitor for $150 because while the feature, "Little Shoes," was being shown at a local theater the film broke, caught fire by accidentally coming in contact with an electric spark, and damaged the reels. According to the verdict, which was for the defendant, Judge Heuisler holds that a liberal construction of the terms of picture exhibiting contracts of this character exempt the owners of the moving picture shows from any responsibility for injury or damage to the delicate films entrusted to them, which is not directly due to negligence on their part.

Patriotic Meeting at Cambridge.

Through the courtesy of Manager Brown, of the Opera House, of Cambridge, Md., a patriotic meeting was held in that playhouse on Sunday, April 21. It was well attended, and several stirring speeches were made relative to the Third Liberty Loan.

Personal Items of the Trade.

E. R. Price, who is well known in Baltimore, and has a host of friends in that city, stopped over Sunday, April 21, while en route to the home office of the General Film in New York.

Oscar Morgan, who has been with the Philadelphia office of the Paramount-Artcraft since a branch exchange was started in that city, has now been appointed manager of the Washington, D. C., office of this company succeeding B. C. Cunningham. Mr. Morgan was assistant manager of the Quaker City office.

General Sales Manager Shurtleff, of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, visited Baltimore and Washington on Saturday, April 20. It is understood that his trip was to look over the General Film situation in both cities to see how the Paralta plays were going.

D. F. O'Donnell, who for some time has acted as manager of the Washington office of the Pathe, has now become associated with the United Exhibitors' Association, and has charge of the Baltimore territory. Mr. O'Donnell is a live wire, and has many friends in this city.

According to statistics from a reliable source the Washington Famous Players-Lasky office, distributors of the Paramount-Artcraft productions, leads the whole country in the number of bookings it has obtained on Maeterlink's "The Blue Bird."

Wells Hawks, a native of Baltimore, and who is well known as a press agent, having handled the publicity for Mary Pickford and other prominent film people, since the beginning of the war has been in the navy, and on Monday, April 22, was promoted to be a Past Assistant Paymaster, with the grade of lieutenant.

Recovers Damages from Theater.

In a trespass suit brought in the Supreme Court Circuit, Ferdinand Newburger, of Newark, N. J., who conducts a photograph gallery in Asbury Park, was awarded $300 damages against the St. James Theater Company. Newburger sued for $10,000, alleging that the defendant had trespassed on his property and cluttered up his place of business with building materials last year when the company was erecting the St. James theater. Walter Rosenberg, of New York, secretary of the theater concern, testified in his own behalf at the trial.

Montreal Police Spoil Approved Posters

Exhibitors Have Cause for Complaint Against Police Censor—His Stamp of Approval Spoils Effect of Expensive Paper.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, E., Toronto, Ont.

MONTREAL, ONT.—Exhibitors of Montreal and other Canadian cities are complaining of the manner in which the Montreal police censor, who examines theater posters, places his official stamp on the lithographs. The rubber stamp imprints the word "Approuve" with the name of the official. This word is the French for "Approved." In many instances, the imprint is placed right on the facial features of the star of a picture and the artistic value of the poster is immediately destroyed. A recent three-sheet of Alice Joyce was spoiled when the Montreal censor placed his stamp on her bare arm—where her vaccination mark ought to be. There was considerable blank space at the bottom of the picture for the impression of the stamp. The exhibitors are kicking because the cost of paper has increased quite a bit and they want to make effective use of it when they do get it.

Petitions Against Sunday Closing in Quebec.

In an effort to stave off a Sunday-closing order, the exhibitors of Sherbrooke, Quebec, have circulated petition forms throughout the city and the petition is to be presented to Sir Lomer Gouin, Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec. After the Lord's Day Alliance had the exhibitors summoned for contravening one of the ancient laws of the Dominion which provides for Sunday observance, one of the local theaters, His Majesty's, promptly closed its doors on Sundays, but the several other exhibitors are opposing the Alliance.

Notes About Canadian Theaters.

The Rialto and Globe theaters, downtown Toronto, presented "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" simultaneously during the week of April 22 with a matinee for children on Saturday morning, April 27. The reels were carried back and forth by a squad of messenger boys.

The Colonial theater, 45 Queen street West, Toronto, has adopted the policy of presenting shows from 9.30 A. M. to 11 P. M. daily, Sundays excepted of course. This may not sound unusual, but by making this arrangement, the Colonial is practically the only theater in Toronto which is open in the morning. The remainder of the downtown houses open at noon or thereabouts while only a few of the suburban theaters run matinees at all, except Wednesdays and Saturdays. The Colonial takes Universal Service regularly.

Daily Changes of Features at the Yorke.

During the week of April 22 the Yorke theater, 812 Yonge street, Toronto, presented six different features, attractions being changed daily, as usual. The six features were: Ethel Barrymore's "The Call of Her People," Bessie Love in "The Great Adventure," Kity Gordon in "Diamonds and Pearls," Mary Garden in "The Splendid Sinner," Jane and Kathlyn Lee in "Two Little Imps" and Earle Williams in "An American Live Wire." Manager Brock has following the policy of daily changes for many weeks and he declares that he keeps the people coming to his shows several times each week and he also gathers in a lot of transient trade. Although he has maintained this arrangement for some time with good success, no other Toronto exhibitor has cared to follow suit.

Notes from Canadian Exchanges.

Manager Ben Rogers, of the Toronto office of the Fox film, announces that a new arrangement has been made for contracts for Standard Pictures. Until recently it was necessary to draw up a fresh contract for every booking of a Standard Picture, but exhibitors may now sign a blanket contract for a year, during which time they may take one Standad release every two weeks.

The Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian distributor of Pathe and other releases, has acquired the Canadian rights for the British Official War News Weekly. This was formerly handled by the Independent Film Supply Company, which is reported to be going out of the exchange business.

Notes on Trade Conditions in Oklahoma

Good Agricultural Outlook Will Help Show Business—Short Subjects Are in Demand—Big Pictures at Advanced Prices.

H. W. Smith, Liberty Theater Building, Oklahoma City, Okla.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—Heavy rain all over Oklahoma at a critical time has set the stage for good amusement business for sometime to come. No material slump in business was noted as result of a monopoly of public interest by the Third Liberty Loan drive. Film exchanges if they agree on any one department of the motion picture business here concur in the opinion that the greatest demand is for the short subjects and that the hardest staple to sell now is the serial. This is hardly a fair estimate of the serial demand in this territory, however, as heretofore there has always been a lively market for the chaptered story of adventure. Western pictures have not lost one bit of their tang right here in the locale of the western subject.

Salesmen out of this point report that the smaller exhibitors within the last two months have been doing well with big picture subjects at advanced prices, and particularly with features based upon the war or of war propagandist turn. "The Kaiser, Beast of Berlin," has been booked in more than thirty Oklahoma towns, and there are only two cities in the state that have more than 50,000 population. "My Four Years in Germany" will have its introduction into this territory at the Overholser theater in Oklahoma City the week beginning April 28 and will be played at a top price of $1. It will be sponsored here by the County Council of Defense. Other notable picture dates in Oklahoma City within the month are "Tarzan of the Apes," "Revelation," "A Dog's Life" and "The Blue Bird."

F. C. Quimby Visits Oklahoma City.

F. C. Quimby, general manager of Pathe, is expected in Oklahoma City Monday, April 22, to inspect the new Pathe exchange here which is about to be moved into a new building built for Pathe and two or three other film concerns. For one month Pathe has been using offices in one building and doing its shipping from another, the two several blocks apart. M. J. Frisch is Pathe manager here.

J. Heiner of Universal Promoted.

"Barney" Rosenthal, of St. Louis, district manager of the Universal, spent the first three days of week of April 20 here checking over the realignment work at the local Universal exchange which A. S. Dowd of New York, representing the general sales department, had done. The final retouching of the job was accomplished when Mr. Rosenthal was here by the promotion of J. Heiner, booker, to the position of office manager under Sam Benjamin, general manager.

Interesting Personal Notes.

A. O. Doctoroff, sales manager of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., distributors of Paramount and Artcraft pictures for eleven southern states, spent Saturday, April 20, in Oklahoma City. His headquarters is Dallas.

"Bill" Warner, of Dallas, Fox representative in this territory, dropped in here this week. "Bill," as the boys often refer to Mr. Warner, has a host of friends between Dallas and Kansas City.

Mutual, whose interests in this field are looked after by a busy exchange managed by "Jack" Brainard, reports excellent business on all subjects.

Metro Exchange Entertains L. Bickle.

L. Bickle, president of the Metro Pictures of Texas, headquarters Dallas, Texas, spent one day in Oklahoma City week of April 20 looking over the new Metro office in charge of M. B. Tritch. This office is a buying one, but bills through Dallas or New York. Metro Pictures of Texas is a distinct corporation organized to handle the Metro product. The exchange here is properly a branch of the Texas company and not of Metro home office. Salesmen selling out of the Metro exchange here are: T. R. Richards, formerly of Kansas City; H. W. Beddoe, from Shamrock, Texas, where he operated a theater recently, and R. J. Clark, late of the Jewel selling staff. Clark has been called to arms in the batch of conscripts ordered to report April 27.

Mid-Illinois Trade Letter.

By Joe Esler, Traveling Representative of Moving Picture World.

Fire in Clinton Theater.

CLINTON, ILL.—Donald Hull, operator, and J. C. Wilson, manager of the Star theater, were severely burned when some film caught fire in the projection booth.

Hull was taken to the doctor to have his burns attended to and sent home, while Manager Wilson, after medical attendance, went back to the theater. The audience was not aware of the fire until after it was all over, as it was confined to the operating booth, which is fireproof, and kept the flames confined to the room. The two projection machines were not badly damaged and will be ready for use in a few days.

Iowa Judge Decides for Sunday Shows.

The Fairfield, Ia., theater can run movies Sundays and every other day is the verdict of Judge C. W. Vermillion of this city before whom the manager of the Fairfield theater was brought for violating the town's blue laws by running a movie show on Sunday. The manager of the theater was held by the police court, but the judge used a little more legal acumen than the justice of the peace and now the folks from Fairfield will have the pleasure of Sunday movies despite the town's blue laws.

South Side Theater Bright Again.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—The remodeled and redecorated South Side theater, operated by R. R. Blair and devoted to the showing of high-class photoplays, and located at 1044 Virginia avenue, near the business center of Fountain square, is now open again.

R. R. Blair, owner and manager, has two other attractive motion picture theaters on the South Side, the Lincoln, at South East street and Lincoln lane, and the Apex, at Virginia avenue and Stevens street.

Says Some Indiana Theaters Are Delinquent.

A large amount of the admission war tax paid by Indiana theater patrons is being diverted and is not finding its way into the coffers of Uncle Sam, according to H. M. Tebay, chief field officer of the internal revenue department at Washington, who arrived here this week. Mr. Tebay is engaged in schooling a force of field officers here to round up delinquent taxes in the Sixth district, composed of fifty-nine counties in Indiana.

Blanche Birch Visits Fort Wayne.

Blanche Birch, whose face is familiar to film fans, was in Fort Wayne, Ind., last week visiting her sister, Mrs. Earl F. Read, who is recovering from an operation at the Ways sanitarium. Miss Birch, who in private life is Blanche Clausen, is a native of La Grange, Ind. She appeared on the screen here recently as a member of the cast of "A Splendid Sinner," Mary Garden's latest hit.

Archer, the new manager of the Lyric, is exerting every effort to give his patrons first class and up-to-date service.

Fire in Indianapolis Theater.

A motion picture film in the Astor theater, 534 North Senate avenue, Indianapolis, burned on a recent Thursday night and threatened for a time to set fire to the interior of the place. The fire department was called and extinguished the flames before much headway was made. The loss was estimated at $50.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Benneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Will Watch for Neglect of Fire Rules.

CINCINNATI, O.—Cincinnati moving picture houses are being subjected to a rigid inspection by representatives from the building commissioner's office, in view of the belief of the commissioner that several small fires which have occurred lately in theaters are due to failure to comply strictly with the rules laid down for fire prevention. Carelessness in the operating booth is particularly mentioned as one of the chief causes of fires in moving picture theaters, and the authorities have indicated their intention of paying special attention to the operators and their methods hereafter.

First American Official War Film from France.

The next picture to be shown at the Grand, Cincinnati, April 29, will be the official Government moving picture of war activities, W. J. Benedict, representing the Division of Films, Bureau of Public Information, having been in the city to arrange for the exhibition of the picture. Mr. Benedict is one of Uncle Sam's dollar-a-year men, having given up a profitable advertising business to take up the work during the war. This is the first official film made by the American Government in France.

A tribute was paid to the popularity of little Marguerite Clark by the management of the Strand theater, Cincinnati, when it booked her latest feature, "Rich Man, Poor Man," for a full week's run, instead of the usual half-week allotted to the regular run of releases. The success of the picture more than justified the belief that it would do as well the second half of the week as the first, the popular star always drawing well in her home town.

What Is Doing Among Feature Shows.

The first of the new Chaplin films has arrived in Cincinnati, and it had the unusual distinction of running in two houses at the same time. Manager Libson secured "A Dog's Life" for the Walnut and the Family as well, running it with "The Warrior" at the Walnut and with "Playing the Game," a Paramount release featuring Charles Ray, at the Family.

The first week of "Intolerance," the great Griffith picture, at the Grand Opera House, proved so successful that a second week's engagement was ob ained. The fact that the picture, unlike its predecessor, "The Birth of a Nation," and other big features shown at the legitimate houses, is exhibited at the Grand at comparattively low prices, probably had something to do with the big houses, and the two-week run is already certain of pronounced success.

Max G. Schagrin Buys Orpheum.

Youngstown, O.—Max G. Schagrin, who has been manager of the Strand theater for some time, ever since he disposed of his Mahel street theater, has purchased the Orpheum theater, on West Federal street, and will hereafter devote his entire attention to the operation of that house. He has been succeeded at the Strand as manager by James Thomas, formerly manager of the Park. Mr. Schagrin has been successful at every house he has been connected with, and the policy he has announced with reference to the Orpheum, of showing only the best pictures, should prove equally successful there. The house is to be thoroughly renovated.

Dayton News Letter

By P. J. G., Dayton Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

H. E. Keller Making It Go in Richmond.

DAYTON, OHIO.—About four weeks ago H. E. Keller took charge of the Washington theater at Richmond, Indiana, and opened the house with "Stella Maris," featuring Mary Pickford, to a big business. The house has several new improvements, including a new organ, which will make it one of the finest theaters in Richmond.

Dayton Newslets.

Gil Burrowes is following a watchful waiting policy and is seen daily in his offices in the Rauh building, Dayton, waiting for the day when he will once more manage the Auditorium.

The Apollo, in Dayton, is to play "The Kaiser," and is advertising the fact far in advance.

Jack Needham motored through our Dayton city recently in what I hear was a Pierce-Arrow (one of those big ones). Jack is surely enjoying prosperity. I knew him when he, etc., etc., etc.

The Victoria theater at Dayton is to be rebuilt as a legitimate house.

H. N. Brice, business manager of "The Remaking of a Nation," was in Dayton, and told the writer that the "Remaking" was the biggest hit he had handled. In every town in which it plays the house is sold out before time of showing. There are also several companies touring Pennsylvania.

John Seifert, at the Ideal theater, reports business as still holding up and that he is well again. John was sick for several days last week. We missed you muchly, John.

The Valentine theater at Toledo had a record-breaking Sunday April 14 for William S. Hart in "The Tiger Man," also Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life." I think a better combination could not have been thought of.

H. H. Rudolph, of "Parentage," states that Dayton exhibitors do not know how to put over a picture. I know quite a few people who would appreciate his stopping here for at least a day.

James Hamilton is still claiming that Pathe pictures are the best on the market.

I have it from good authority that the Columbia theater is to have a new marquise, also a new electric sign for the front of the house. According to the story a large American flag is to be at the top of the new sign.

Film Trade News of the Week in Detroit

Manager Eliot of the Washington Puts "My Four Years in Germany" Over in Spirited Fashion—Other Interesting Items.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—"My Four Years in Germany," the great Gerard picture, opened at the Washington theater, Detroit, Sunday, April 21, for an indefinite run, and it is likely to stay there for many weeks. The crowds started about 1.30 and they kept coming by the hundreds until the last show. The whole presentation is a credit to Will M. Eliot, manager of the Washington.

The program opens with an overture, "Spirit of America," by the orchestra. This is followed by an address of James J. Morrison, who impersonates Ambassador Gerard. The address is very brief, but it gets the patriotic spirit started. "America" is sung by the entire audience.

Then comes a short act, called "Anywhere in America," played by Mr. Morrison and two others, known as the Columbia Players, who have been for several seasons at the Columbia theater. The scene depicts a soldier departing for service and the farewell between him and his mother and father. It is splendidly done and full credit goes to Mr. Eliot and Mr. Morrison, who arranged the act and the dialogue. In fact, so realistic is the scene that men and women by the hundreds were seen wiping their eyes at the Sunday performances. "Good-bye, Mother Dear," is sung by Emmons and Colvin during the last part, which helps the act immensely. The film is distributed by the Madison Film Exchange of 73 Broadway, Detroit.

Bill Bailey Now Manager General Film.

M. S. Bailey has taken charge of the General Film exchange, Detroit. He was for several years manager of the Detroit Universal and has a host of loyal, good friends in Detroit and through the state. The General, in addition to many short interesting and novel subjects, also distribute Paralta plays, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale, Henry Walthall and Louise Glaum. These productions are under the personal direction of the best men in motion pictures.

Dawn Masterplay Moves Up.

Dallas Theaters Pick Good Ones and Win

Exhibitors Satisfied with Week's Receipts—"Mr. Fix-It" Makes a Decided Hit—"Kaiser" and "Rich Man, Poor Man" Also Shown.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—From all indications, at least during the week of April 15, it's only a matter of pickin' the right ones. Dallas exhibitors have had no complaint—the week's offerings were all alive and everybody got his.

This starts a line of thought: Alan Dwan and Doug Fairbanks may not relish suggestions from a mere provincial, but a tip would be to keep the rambunctious one in such stuff as "Mr. Fix It." It was shown at the Old Mill this week, and in the opinion of local critics it's the best thing he's done. The kids got 'em all from a human interest standpoint, and from the angle of artisticness, few directors have done better. "The Kaiser" went well at the Hippodrome and the first of the Chaplin patriotic features supplied a proper war-time balance at the Old Mill for the Fairbanks comedy. "Rich Man Poor Man," with Marguerite Clark did an excellent business at the Queen, while the Washington had no complaint on "A Modern Lorelei."

W. H. Talbot Takes Charge at Pathe.

W. H. Talbot, formerly Kansas City manager for Universal, has taken charge as local manager for Pathe, succeeding Acting Manager C. A. Meade, who recently went with the United theater. Mr. Talbot is new to Texas, but believes he's going to like it.

Many Charlies and Many Friendly Pups.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The management of the Strand theater, Louisville, in advertising the new Chaplin picture, "A Dog's Life," handled an interesting bit of publicity, which attracted considerable attention. The theater management advertised that boys dressed and made up as Charlie Chaplin would be given free admission to see the show, and three tickets to the three succeeding Chaplin shows. As a result about fifty young would-be Chaplins appeared at the theater at 11 o'clock on Saturday morning, April 20, each accompanied by a canine of some sort, as the offer included $1 for the boy parading the best-looking dog and $1 for the shabbiest-looking mongrel. The boys wore streamers reading "Poor Charlie, he leads 'A Dog's Life' at the Strand." The parade was formed and the motley-looking crowd paraded through the business district and downtown streets, preceded by a large wagon containing the numerous mongrels owned by the miniature Charlies. The dogs were good, but the youngsters were great. A number of local boys have proven excellent comedians in Chaplin costumes, and the parade was an unusual feature which attracted much attention.

Capt. Travers Speaks in Louisville.

Capt. Richard (Dick) Travers, the former prominent film star, and now an employee of Uncle Sam, has been in much demand as a patriotic speaker during the past few weeks. Later the film opened a week's engagement at the theater, where a recruiting booth was opened in the lobby to secure men for the marines. Such patriotic pictures are taking the "slack" out of "slacker," and doing a lot of good it is claimed.

Trade Items from Kentucky.

Through a mix-up in express shipping only three reels of a ten-reel production, "The Garden of Allah," arrived at the Washington theater, Maysville, Ky., for a scheduled showing. The management hurriedly got together some other shows, and in order not to disappoint its patrons or sting them for the price of admission for an unadvertised picture, the special show was run free of charge in the afternoon and evening.

Minneapolis Trade Letter

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Good Business During Loan Week.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. — Fairbanks' "Modern Musketeers" drew good crowds to the St. Paul Majestic theater during Loan week, "Mr. Fix-It" enjoyed a good week's business at the New Garrick, Minneapolis, and Fairbanks' special Liberty Loan reel "Swatting the Kaiser" was featured by a dozen theaters in the Twin Cities in their program and newspaper advertising.

Two rainy days and fairly chilly spring weather made business at Twin City theaters during Loan week fairly brisk. Some good bills were offered and the best were well patronized.

"My Four Years" in Legitimate Houses.

First National attractions will hold down the boards at the Metropolitan theatres (legitimate) of Minneapolis and St. Paul for the last week of April and first week of May. "My Four Years in Germany" will be shown at the Minneapolis Metropolitan for two weeks beginning April 28 and at the St. Paul Metropolitan "The Fall of the Romanoffs" will begin a week's run on April 28 and will be succeeded the week of May 5 by "My Four Years in Germany." "Tarzan of the Apes" will begin a week's run at the New Garrick, St. Paul, May 5, with special stage effects according to Manager Theodore L. Hays.

With Twin City Exhibitors.

Charles G. Branham, manager of the Strand, Minneapolis, has returned from a visit to Chicago and has anonunced that among future Strand attractions will be "A Pair of Sixes," "The Unbeliever," "Doctor and the Woman" and "Daughter of Destiny." Henry Santrey continues to please Strand audiences by singing the latest song hits as only Santrey can.

Manager Theodore L. Hays, of the New Garrick, St. Paul, has adopted the "War Song Contest" idea recently adopted by Manager Branham of the Minneapolis Strand, and beginning April 21 seven representative "song pluggers" began a popularity song contest at the New Garrick which pleased good-sized audiences daily. "What Will We Do With Him, Boys" recently won the Strand war song contest and a silver loving cup was presented to the publishers of the music.

Manager Woodhouse, of the New Lagoon, Minneapolis, added two vocalists to his program the first half of the week beginning April 21. War songs composed by local musicians were introduced at each performance.

very best organists in the Northwest and it may be added that there are few better house managers. Mr. Johnson played the pipe organ at the Minneapolis Lyric theater for four years, when Sam Rothapfel managed the theater. When Rothapfel went to the Regent theater, New York, Julius went with him, returning to Minneapolis about three years later to plan organ solos for Manager Calvert at the New Garrick. When Mr. Calvert became a lieutenant in the signal corps last fall Mr. Johnson was named his successor. Every once in a while for diversion Mr. Johnson tinkles a few tunes on the Garrick organ and an ouburst of applause always greets his efforts. Mr. Johnson has a keen sense of humor and a wide knowledge of photoplays and photoplay music.

Kansas City Waits for Three New Theaters

Doric Will Open on Walnut Street, the New Liberty at Eleventh and Main and the Isis on Troost Avenue—The Doric Nearly Ready.

Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Within the next few weeks three new theaters will be in operation in Kansas City. The first of these to get started will be the Doric. This theater will be owned and managed by George W. Curtis, a pioneer in the moving picture business in Kansas City. He has been making pictures in Kansas City for the last 20 years, and now has in his possession about 900 feet of film showing the old horse cars ascending one of Kansas City's steepest hills. First of all this man is a moving picture man for the love of it. He is not only an authority on matters pertaining to this particular industry, but he is an artist, as all will testify who visit his new house. He is also a musician and is planning to give his patrons rare musical treats.

All the materials and equipment are on the ground. All that remains to be done is the finishing up, which includes the interior decorating and arrangement. The outside is completely finished, and it is needless to say that it is truly beautiful, the Doric order of architecture being followed out in detail. At the present time the built-in cases to hold posters and announcement of attractions at the theater are now filled with Liberty Bond posters.

An interesting thing about this theater is that up to the present time, no local film company can boast of a signed contract. The owner of this theater is of the impression that there are an abundance of pictures to be had, and he is not allowing himself to be bothered in the construction of his theater by film salesmen.

Within several weeks, the new Liberty Theater at Eleventh and Main streets will be opened. Following that will be the new Isis theater at Thirty-first and Troost avenue. The Doic is located on Walnut street between Ninth and Tenth streets.

Beautiful New House Opens in Alameda

Hamblen Theater, Seating 1,500 and Owned by James Hamblen, Has Premiere—Will Be Managed by E. V. Clover.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The new Hamblen theater, Park street and Encinal avenue, Alameda, was opened on the evening of April 15. This theater was constructed and will be operated by James Hamblen, formerly of Kansas City, Mo. As this is the first venture in the amusement field he has secured the services as manager of E. V. Clover, for several years connected with the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, and the opening of the house was conducted under the management of the latter.

This new theater is of substantial brick construction, with a facade of plaster, relieved by a trimming of light-colored brick. It has a seating capacity of 1,500, this being divided about equally between the lower floor and the balcony. The office is on the lower floor, directly off the main entrance, and near the broad stairway leading to the balcony. At the other side of the theater is another stairway, but this leads directly to the street and is designed to be used as an exit. Off the foyer is a small rest room for women, a telephone booth and drinking fountains. The foyer, aisles and stairs are carpeted throughout.

The entire mezzanine floor is given over to a ladies' rest room and a nursery where there is a maid in attendance. These rooms are very attractively furnished and show much thought on the part of the designer. Here are drinking fountains and free local telephones. The decorations here and throughout the house are of a quiet, but very effective order.

The theater is equipped with a full stage and it is the plan to present vaudeville attractions each Sunday. The ventilating system is a feature of the house, the air being changed throughout once every twelve minutes. Music is rendered by a seven-piece orchestra, under the direction of Max Amsterdam, of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, and a large Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra presided over by Miss Irma Falvey. The projection equipment includes two late model Simplex machines installed by the Breck Photo Play Supply Company.

The opening program included an address by Green Majors, mayor of Alameda, musical numbers by a soldier, a Fairbanks feature "Headin' South," a Sunshine comedy, a Burton Holmes Travelogue and a Pathe News. The prices of admission are 15 cents for the lower floor and 10 cents for the balcony, with reserved loge seats at 25 cents. At matinees all seats are 10 cents. These prices include the war tax.

Government Films in Great Demand.

The film division of the State Council of Defense, headed by Sol L. Lesser, is meeting with great success in booking the Government films. Every downtown theater in San Francisco has booked these films and the public is showing an immense interest in them as many depict phases of national activities never before shown on the screen. Two prints of each subject are now on hand and the plan is to show these simultaneously in each district in order to reach as many people as possible. The second shipment of forty-five reels of film was recently received by the film division and those who reviewed them are enthusiastic over their splendid qualities. The local army and navy authorities are co-operating to the fullest extent with the State Council of Defense and with exhibitors in giving publicity to these films, and the newspapers are also giving space freely. The publicity division, headed by M. J. Cohen, of the George Kleine System, has been enlarged and its services are at the disposal of any exhibitors who desire them. This feature will be of special value to country exhibitors and they are invited to get in touch at once with the film division. The films are being handled at cost and it is the desire of State and Federal authorities that they be shown in every theater in California, as a part of the plan for education and for the combatting of enemy propaganda.

Film Shows San Francisco Before Fire.

Thursday, April 18, was the twelfth anniversary of the great fire that devastated San Francisco and the Imperial theater offered an attraction for this day only that brought to this house many who were familiar with the city as it was before that catastrophe. This attraction was in the form of a moving picture taken on Market street a few days before the fire, showing this thoroughfare from Seventh street to the Ferries. The Market street of that day, with its cable cars and pioneer buildings, offers an interesting comparison with the street of today.

Mr. Kelsall was in the film business as a buyer of state rights pic- tures before becoming associated with Mr. Johnson.

J. R. Harrington, known to old timers in the motion picture business of the Northwest as the manager of the early Universal exchange of Seattle, has also joined the Johnson forces as editor-in- chief of a new weekly being put out by the store. The name of the new publica- tion is "The Bull-A-Ton." It is creating quite a lot of interest on film row and among the exhibitors of the field.

Small Towns in Oregon Losing Business

Willamette Valley Exhibitors Feeling Effects of the War and Influx of Labor to the Bigger Cities—Prospects for the Summer Not Bright.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—Road men returning from Willamette Valley towns report the prospect for summer business south of Portland very poor. Considered in its entirety, Oregon was never more prosperous for the showman, but prosperity has been concentrated in the bigger cities and in the neighborhood of the shipyards.

Roseburg, which always was considered a poor show town, is worse than ever now, say the road men. Previous reports of mediocre business since the war began gave the exodus of the young men to the army as the reason. Of late there has been a general movement of all classes of labor to the shipyards of Portland, Vancouver, Astoria, Marshfield and Coast cities. S. Danz, Star theater, Astoria, was a visitor on Film Row April 18 and reported most excellent business there. Portland theaters are also at their best, due to the increasing number of shipyards and the number of new families coming into the city to work in them.

I. Lesser Cohen Is Editor.

Portland.—I. Lesser Cohen, formerly manager of the Globe theater and secretary of the Portland Amusement Company, has been selected as editor of the new moving picture page of the Evening Telegram. Mr. Cohen is one of the best-liked picture men of the Pacific Northwest, and has announced that he will make the policy of his paper one that will give a higher tone to the general industry. He will carry a star photograph every day together with live reading matter.

Mr. Cohen recently edited a reel showing the industries of Oregon that enjoyed good success.

What Road Men Are Doing.

Ted Johnson has resigned his position with the Mutual and gone to work for Universal. He has been a most successful salesman in this territory, and Universal is fortunate to get his services.

Louis Rosenberg recently completed a trip over the territory for De Luxe, and reports excellent business for "Carmen of the Klondike."

The Broadway Reopens.

After being closed for several months the Broadway theater, on East Broadway, Portland, has been reopened. The new owners are Kisswetter and Kelly, Portland men. They have started on the right track by spending several thousand dollars in fixing up the interior and changing the lobby.

The Broadway is in a high class residential district, and for this reason demands extraordinary service and attractions. Former exhibitors who have tried to open the house have undoubtedly missed it by neglecting this feature of the business.

Paramount Heads Visit.

The Rose City has been honored by visits from two distinguished representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky Company. One of these is Carl H. Pierce, special representative and manager of the Service Department, with headquarters in New York. He has been on the Coast assisting in the exploitation of "The Blue Bird." While in Portland, Mr. Pierce gave the film men the benefit of his experience along censorship lines, and the local men honored him by making him their spokesman in their plea before the mayor for a modified censor ordinance.

The other Paramount visitor was J. W. Allen, also special representative, who has come to the Coast directly from New York on matters of sales exploitation. Mr Allen is well known in this territory, and the Portland boys are glad to know that the industry has shown true appreciation of his ability by promoting him to a high position with Famous Players-Lasky.

SPOKANE BREVITIES.

By S. Clark Patchin, 1811 Eleventh Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

C. E. Stilwell Buys Theater in Colfax.

SPOKANE, WASH.—As the first step toward establishing and operating a circuit of outside theaters with a service of big features purchased for his Spokane houses, C. E. Stilwell took over the Rose theater of Colfax.

"We expect to take over more theaters in the future and operate them on a circuit over which we will route the biggest features we use in our Spokane houses," said Mr. Stilwell after his return from Colfax. "This plan is an advantage to the booking exchanges and makes it possible for us to get features at a price at which we can play them in towns that otherwise could not afford to run them.

"The Colfax theater will be managed by J. S. Nelson, once booking manager of the Spokane Universal Exchange and a road salesman of features at the time we engaged his services."

Good Local Pictures of Parade.

What are declared to be the best moving pictures ever taken in Spokane and shown on the screen here were those taken by the Washington Motion Picture Corporation of the Liberty Loan parade April 6. They were shown at the Liberty theater the week of April 14, and the photography was excellent.

Interesting Theater Items.

Toppenish, Wash.—Dr. H. M. Johnson, owner of the Lois theater, has his new house under construction. He is going to operate both houses. His new house is unnamed, but he expects to open it about July 4.

Mansfield, Wash.—Mrs. Clara E. Wright has sold the Mansfield theater to her former competitor, S. Radtke.

Pasco, Wash.—Mrs. Martha Reynolds and her husband have bought the Pasco Summer Garden. They are the owners of the Liberty and Empire theaters in Pasco and will take charge of the summer Garden along with their other amusement enterprises. Mrs. Reynolds is the manager.

MORE SEATTLE NOTES.

F. R. Durand Finds It Better Than in East for Theaters.

F. R. Durand, sales manager of the Greater Features Company, has just returned from a trip through the territory. Mr. Durand arrived from the East only a few weeks ago, where he has been in the film business for a long time. He declares that business throughout the Northwest is better than in the East. During his recent trip he said he was constantly hearing exhibitors talking about how much money everybody was making.

Joe Deitch to Open Seattle Office.

Joe Deitch, formerly Oregon representative for the Kleine Exchange, has come to Seattle to open an office on film row for the Northwest Consolidated Film Corporation. This concern handles the Bruce scenics and the Ditmar Animal Pictures.

Dinner Tendered to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit by Madame Petrova, Hotel Astor, New York, April 16, 1918.

Harry Raver Renders Thanks.

In his dual capacity as a motion picture magnate and an out-of-door showman, Harry Raver, president of the Showmen's League of America, New York Division, sends the following letter to the editor of the Moving Picture World:

"Through the columns of your valuable publication I wish, on behalf of the Showmen's League of America, to express appreciation for the splendid support given to our Showmen's Hospital Benefit at the Hippodrome, April 21, by the representative men and women of the motion picture profession who so unselfishly aided in making the event a success. As chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the Ticket Committee I sent through the mails an appeal for recognition of our effort to provide hospital care for showmen in adverse circumstances who become ill, and was overwhelmed by the generous and whole-hearted response.

"Not only did the best blood of the industry respond financially, but I was made happy in the knowledge that they used their seats and assisted in filling the huge Hippodrome to capacity. That, in spite of dozens of other benefit performances, the Liberty Loan Drive, and other appeals for funds, our undertaking was a tremendous success we of the Showmen's League feel duly proud, but more particularly so because the first appeal I have ever made to the motion picture profession was answered so generously and freely.

"And when it is considered that some $70,000 worth of Liberty Bonds were sold to our audience, and that members of the motion picture industry subscribed for at least one-third of the amount there is added reason for exultation."

Philadelphia Brevities.

"A Dog's Life" made its opening presentation on Monday, April 22, at the Stanley, Palace, Victoria, and Arcadia. Never in the history of motion pictures was such a lively interest displayed to get a glimse of this honest comedian whose whole soul appears to be in his efforts to cheer the world.

The projection at the 333 Market Street theater, under the management of F. B. Hammond, has been considerably improved by the installation of two new Simplex machines of the latest type by Lewis M. Swaab. The ventilation was also given consideration, and two 16-inch exhaust fans have been added to the system. This theater, while being located in the heart of the wholesale district, enjoys an extraordinarily large clientele by reason of its efficient method of advertising.

Baseball Game Between Film Row and the Eastern Penitentiary—What Local Exchangemen and Exhibitors Are Doing.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—A base-ball game between the inmates of the Eastern Penitentiary and the denizens of "Film Row," Philadelphia, was held on Saturday, April 20, at the former's ball grounds, 22d and Fairmount avenue, and was witnessed by over 1,200 spectators who saw the film men defeated by a score of 10 to 3. However, it was a (reel) game, and much excitement prevailed while it lasted. However incredible it may seem the real object of the game, as announced by William J. Sadlier, special representative of the Senator Penrose faction and Republican Alliance backing Senator Sproul for the next Governor of Pennsylvania, was to afford the film men the proper sort of exercise which will equip them with the essential wallop that it will be necessary to hand to the board of censors in order to make a clean score when the proper time arrives.

The line up of the film men's base-ball team was as follows: Herbert Given, Goldwyn, captain and pitcher; Robert Lynch, short stop, and Steve McErven, catcher, Metro; Charles Klang, General, 1st base; Chas. Goodwin, Superior, 2d base; Earle Sweigert, Paramount and Artcraft, left field; R. E. Binns, Vitagraph, right; D. Heenan, Vitagraph, center, and Sam Lefko, 3d base. Number 688 was the umpire who is reported to have been in favor of his home team winning.

Theater on Kensington Avenue Sold.

Title to the moving picture theater, 4208 to 4212 Kensington avenue, was conveyed last week by Israel Grossman to Hyman Stiefel and others for a nominal sum and a mortgage of $20,000.

General Film in New Quarters.

The General Film Company is now settled in their new quarters at 1225 Vine street, Philadelphia. F. E. Samuels, the manager, and Charles Klang report excellent business on Paralta productions.

Interesting Philadelphia Notes.

Alla Nazimova in "Revelation," as presented at the Victoria, Monday, April 22, is a Metro production of marked artistic worth, and one of the finest ever seen at this theater. While the press has contributed a lavish amount of space to its reviews about Nazimova in her wonderful role the public has likewise been generous with their patronage in coming to see her.

D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" will be offered at the Garrick theater for an indefinite engagement beginning Tuesday, April 30.

"Mothers of Liberty," featuring Barbara Castleton, and released by the Electric Theater Supply Company, was reviewed by the Committee of Public Information at Washington, D. C., who passed their approval on this production, while it was highly endorsed by the French High Commission and the Liberty Loan Committee also.

May 2 Big Day at World Pictures Office.

W. R. Priest, manager of the Philadelphia World Pictures exchange, announces that Thursday, May 2, will be the day when "open house" will be held at their new quarters 1315-17 Vine street. The occasion will be marked as a day of great importance, as Ricord Gradwell and Felix F. Fiest, of the home office, will then be expected to be on hand to welcome the exhibitors at the new two-story building.

Several World Pictures stars are expected to come over to spend the day boosting the Liberty Loan by speaking at the various theaters. Jay Emanuel, formerly manager of the Park and Jefferson, is now a member of the World's sales staff.

Monthly Exhibitors' Luncheon Held.

The usual interesting monthly luncheon of the Exhibitors' League and the United Exhibitors' Association was held at the Vendig, Thursday, April 18. A committee composed of Morris Spiers, Charles Rapoporte, and William C. Hunt was sent to New York to investigate and secure full particulars regarding the co-operative booking plans of the United Picture Theaters' booking system.

"Over the Top" at Academy.

"Over the Top," with Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey as the star, the Vitagraph's latest special release, is being presented at the Academy of Music for the week of May 6. This feature, which is a picturization of the book written by Empey, was made with the endorsement of the United States Government, in which nearly 8,000 American troops took part.

"HONOR'S CROSS."

Selexart Production Features Rhea Mitchell in Story Picturing the Seamy Side.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

TANG politics and glimpses of underworld conditions are features of chief importance in this offering. The story, written by H. B. Daniel and directed by Wallace Worsley, gives an intimate view of vice conditions which have existed in many American cities in the past, and still no doubt flourish in some of them. This has all been done before many times and the situations therefore have no special novelty. There is a complete freedom from anything of the offensive, even though some of the lowest dives are pictured.

Rhea Mitchell portrays the part of Jane Cabot, the pretty daughter of a drunkard. She plays this role in a quietly effective way, gaining considerable sympathy as the story proceeds, despite the lack of intensity in the situations. Herschel Mayall appears as the Hon. Thomas Dolan, political boss, a part which he fills very capably. Edward Coxen plays the lover, Lee Stevens, and Adele Farrington does considerable with the down-and-out, half-degraded mother part.

There are some interesting contrasts in his subject, though perhaps too much footage was given them in the opening reels. The story, which begins in earnest with the commencement of the third reel, holds the interest well. The political boss takes a strong fancy to Jane Cabot, whom poverty has driven into dancing at a cabaret. He tries to coerce her love, but the girl throws wine in his face and leaves the place. Dolan never forgives her, but by this act she won the regard of Lee, Dolan's young assistant, just in from the West. Lee aids the girl to escape from Dolan's clutches and eventually weds her. In the course of the story the girl's father is sent to prison for killing a policeman in a saloon brawl and her mother commits suicide.

"HEARTS OR DIAMONDS?"

William Russell Thrills in His First Picture with His Own Company.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

PICTURE fans the country over are so accustomed to expect thrills when William Russell's name is announced on the bills that it is taken as granted that he will not disappoint them. In "Hearts or Diamonds?" I have no fear in promising that he will come up to expectations and more.

The script has been adapted from the magazine story by William Hamilton Osborne, and William Parker, the adapter, has not only given Mr. Russell fine opportunities for the display of his physical prowess, but he has also woven a web of adventure around him that holds the spectator with tense interest until the final fadeout comes.

The story, in brief, revolves around Larry Hanrahan, a famous diamond collector and expert, who accidentally becomes acquainted with Colonel Gascoyne (Howard Davies) and his ward, Adrienne (Charlotte Burton), in New York. Gascoyne, who poses as a gentleman who manufactures diamonds as good as the real for half the cost, is in reality the head of an international band of diamond thieves. Adrienne is ignorant of his real character and, in fact, is one of his dupes.

Larry Hanrahan (William Russell) falls in love with Adrienne, and when his priceless collection of diamonds are stolen and he links the crime with Gascoyne, he has, he believes, convincing evidence that she is an accomplice of the burglars, though she is entirely innocent. Larry succeeds in tracing the thieves to Gascoyne's home, gains access and recovers the diamonds, but loses them again in the terrific fight that takes place in the Gascoyne home. Through the aid of Adrienne he is unbound and succeeds in sending a call to the police station. The officers arrive just in time to nab Colonel Gascoyne and his gang, the Colonel being badly wounded by a pistol shot. To Larry the leading criminal confesses that Adrienne is innocent of all wrongdoing, and the happy hero takes her to his heart.

William Russell is seen in two exciting scenes, where Larry mixes things up ferociously with members of the gang. In the first, a number of Gascoyne's accomplices attack their leader and his ward while they are motoring homeward. Adrienne's precious diamond necklace is the prize sought, but Larry puts the thieves to flight in a thrilling chase in which he shows remarkable sprinting and high-jumping qualities.

In the second Mr. Russell as Larry fights the entire gang in the diamond retort room in the Gascoyne home. He is overcome and bound after one of the nerviest scraps seen for a long time on the screen. In the lighter scenes Mr. Russell appears to fine advantage in the roles of gentleman and lover.

Charlotte Burton's Adrienne is charmingly acted, and the role of Colonel Gascoyne is very capably assumed by Howard Davies. The two butlers of the story are excellently impersonated by Carl Stockdale and Robert Klein, while the part of Wintermute, the fake diamond scientist in the Gascoyne laboratory, is well sustained by John Gough.

Director Henry King is to be complimented for furnishing the spectator several fine interiors, rich and artistically impressive.

The release will be made April 29 though the Mutual Film Corporation.

"THE REASON WHY."

Clara Kimball Young Stars in Select Production of Glyn Novel.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE hectic flush that gave "Three Weeks" its chief claim to fame is absent from "The Reason Why," an Elinor Glyn story done into photoplay form by Mary Murillo and directed by Robert G. Vignola for Select Pictures, with Clara Kimball Young at the head of the cast. Novelty of plot is not one of the story's features, but the troubles of the heroine will appeal to most spectators. Suspense and surprise are also missing. The plot, however, can be followed without the slightest difficulty, and the acting of the entire cast brings out all the points of the story at their best. Director Vignola's care and understanding of his subject have reproduced the English and Russian scenes correctly, the air of wealth and refinement that surrounds Lord Tancred being particularly effective.

Zara, a Russian girl married to a brute of a husband, and the mother of a young son, receives a letter from her uncle in London asking her to come and make her home with him. The uncle does not know that Zara is married. That same night her husband is killed in a brawl and the widow starts at once for England. Arriving there she leaves her boy in charge of a lodging house keeper and goes to her uncle's home. The gentleman has social aspirations and hopes to satisfy them through his niece. Lord Tancred, of an old and impoverished family, is in the uncle's debt. Markrute, the uncle, suggests a union between the nobleman and his niece. Tancred refuses until he meets Zara. He then says he would be glad to make her his wife even if she had no dowry.

Zara is pursuaded to accept the nobleman, but after the marriage she keeps him at a distance, as she is convinced money was the only reason for Tancred's wanting the match. On the night of their first reception word is brought to Zara that her son is very ill. She hurries to him. Her husband follows and discovers his wife at the bedside of the dying child. He goes back home and does not let her know that he has discovered her secret. The reconciliation occurs when Tancred starts to leave home forever, satisfied that his wife will never love him.

With Clara Kimball Young as Zara, Milton B. Sills as Lord Tancred, Florence K. Billings as Lady Highford, Frank Losee as Markrute, John Sunderland as Lord Ellerton, Kate Lester as the Dutchess and Eldean Stewart as Mimo, a fine performance of all the characters is guaranteed. Young Master Stewart is a remarkable child actor. Louis J. Physico did the camera work.

"HOW COULD YOU, CAROLINE?"

Pathe Play Features Bessie Love in Comedy of Young Girlhood.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A FIVE-REEL feature, done in the best comedy style, with Bessie Love in the role of a romantic young girl who pines for a soulmate and finally imagines she has found him in a taxi-driver. The development of the piece is in a series of episodes, rather than in a straight, continuous plot, and for this reason has no particular suspense. The humor of the number will be more appreciated by feminine observers than by men, no doubt, as it pictures the romantic age through which most women pass.

Bessie Love is well suited to the part of Caroline, with her ingenuous looks and sympathetic eyes. She is first seen at college, or rather at a girls' school, where she is a leader in mischiefmaking. Her parents send for her to come to her sister's wedding. Caroline, who has been reading a novel called "Twin Souls," is delighted to go home and determines to find her soulmate while there. She is asked to look up an usher for her sister's wedding, and selects a man named Reginald Van Alden, who turns out to be a taxi-driver and a crook as well.

Caroline, before she has come to her senses, has bared her soul to Reginald and agreed to elope with him. They ride into the country together in his taxi, which breaks down. Her mother and Bob, her regular sweetheart, rescue the girl. Later she learns to her further sorrow that Reginald is aleady married. The final scenes have to do with the wedding of Caroline and Bob.

Amelia Summerville, James Morrison and Dudley Hawley also appear.

"THE TWO-SOUL WOMAN."

Priscilla Dean Featured in Five-Reel Universal, Based on Burgess Novel.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

GELETT BURGESS is a writer whose literary spark-plug always throws off an agreeable amount of the divine fire. This screen subject, "The Two-Soul Woman," is an adaptation of his novel, "The White Cat," and the producer, Elmer Clifton, must be given credit for handling his dramatic material to the best advantage.

But four characters appear in the story from first to last, but there is no cessation of interest in the problem that confronts the hero from the moment of his injury in an automobile accident. The latter awakens in the bedroom of a charming country home, and discovers a beautiful girl bending over him. Her name is Joy Fielding, and the hero, Chester Castle, loses no time in falling in love with her. But the girl, while sweetly attractive in her natural self, has a mysterious dual nature. At times she becomes a vulgar, athletically inclined creature who calls herself Edna, and in this alter ego she loves a certain Dr. Copin. This doctor and the housekeeper are the other principals in the fascinating little mystery.

Priscilla Dean does some remarkably interesting work in this weird double role. In this she is abetted by intelligently employed double-exposure photography. Joseph Girard portrays the villainous doctor capably and Ashton Dearholt makes a good looking and able hero. Evelyn Selbie appears as the housekeeper, Leah.

The subject rounds up with an exciting climax.

"AT THE MERCY OF MEN."

By Edward Weitzel.

A second showing of the Select picture, "At the Mercy of Men," revealed that the most offensive portion of the assault scene has been cut out, but this does not materially affect the objectionable features of the story. The picture is morally wrong from start to finish, and has no place in a family moving picture house.

"M'LISS."

Mary Pickford Admirably Fitted in Artcraft Production of Harte's Famous Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ONCE more has Mary Pickford been fitted with a character and a story admirably suited to her personality and her brand of screen art. Bret Harte's famous tale of California during the golden days of '49, "M'liss," has been made into a picture play by Frances Marion, the scenarioist exercising the same freedom in introducing new material that Clay M. Greene used when he dramatized the story for the stage over thirty years ago. Annie Pixley was the original "M'liss."

The screen version does not follow the stage play, and the comedy possibilities are developed to a greater degree. So insistent has the adaptor worked for the laugh she has not hesitated to put in considerable downright farce. Few of Mary Pickford's following will object to this, however. The story moves along in sprightly fashion, and it's a poor heart that will not rejoice at the innocent fun of the picture and the happy ending of the little heroine's romance. Marshall Neilan deserves praise for the excellence of his direction. Some of the comedy scenes are too much in the shadow, but the general result reproduces the locale of the Bret Harte country and the character she created.

The story of "M'liss" is easy of comprehension, and her doings will enlist the sympathy of all good folk. She is the daughter of "Bummer" Smith, a dissipated but good natured old ne'er-do-well, who lets her swear like a trooper and run wild. "M'liss" has no use for school until a handsome new school teacher comes to Red Gulch. She then washes her face and startles the pupils by walking into the school house and taking a seat on one of the benches. Continually up to her pranks, "M'liss" gets any amount of fun out of life, and rides a horse like a cowboy. The serious interest is supplied by the murder of old man Smith, and the fastening of the crime on the school teacher. A fortune left by Smith's brother leads to the old man's death.

Theodore Roberts as "Bummer" Smith, Thomas Meighan as the school teacher, Charles Ogle as Yuba Bill, and Tully Marshall as Judge McSnagley are the principal members of a fine supporting cast.

"BLINDFOLDED."

Well-Directed Paralta Story Featuring Bessie Barriscale.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

MOST of the interest of "Blindfolded," a Paralta Play, centers in its heroine, played by Bessie Barriscale, and that happy actress' vivacity and naturalness in picturing a wide gamut of human emotions make the offering one of considerable merit considered as entertainment for all kinds of spectators. It never fails to be interesting nor loses a sense of freshness, though the scenario follows a well-trodden path. The players make every character in it human, and their emotions are thus freshly interesting to other real people in the audience.

The girl has been taught to open safes by her father. She has inherited his hearing, and is, like him, the most expert tinkerer with combination locks in the "business." But she has been reading Emerson, and begins to doubt the crook philosophy. They are going to "pull" a last job, and then she is to be free to walk straight. The police suspect, and surround the house. There is a well-directed fight between officers and yeggs. One policeman and one crook are killed. The leader of the gang on that night is "The Mask," who is unknown even to the girl. The girl is caught while he is struggling with two of the police, but "The Mask" escapes. The judge is not hard on the girl, and after she finishes her term she is taken in by a charitably-minded woman whose only son has been wild, but is now making good out West. They visit him.

The love story begins, and there is a wedding, and later a child comes. She fears to tell her husband of her term in the House of Corrections. Near the picture's close the old gang comes. They attempt to force her to open the safe of the bank where her husband is employed. The detective overhears a scrap of conversation. There is a satisfactory climax in the living room of the heroine's house at 1 o'clock at night in which she finds that her husband is "The Mask." The villainous member of the gang is killed trying to get away, and man and wife can now live happily.

"THE SEAL OF SILENCE."

Blue Ribbon Feature of Intimate Family Relationships—Dignified and Interesting.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT is an interesting situation once it has been established, that of having an unmarried girl left guardian of a married woman's son and under a promise of silence unable to tell whence it came. It is rather hard to establish it firmly, and in this picture, "The Seal of Silence," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in five reels, the promise of silence is given just to cover the married woman's desire to spite her husband because he did not let her flirt and gamble. The child is born in the home of the woman's old nurse. She dies in childbirth, content that the husband, who longs for a son, is not to know he is a father.

The father is a doctor and the younger woman is and has long been his helper. He falls in love with her, learns by accident that she is interested in a baby and has her bring it to his home. This is done as an everyday incident without embarrassment to the girl or the doctor; yet because of continuity it holds attention and really interests. The growth of the boy in his unknowing father's affections and the sickness that overtakes him are finally dramatic. At his bedside, when he has unexpectedly recovered, the girl apparently discovers that the doctor suspects the boy is hers and she breaks her vow of silence to reproach him. It ends the picture and ends it weakly. The fault perhaps lies as much in the lack of ability of the player who has this part as in the script, which is decidedly not actor-proof.

The picture gets dignity from the able acting of Earle Williams as the doctor, of Kathleen Kirkham as his wife, of Kate Price as the nurse and from the work of the director, Tom Mills. Plenty of things happen in actual life that are hard to believe and they make poor incidents for a picture—this picture. It has too little real convincing power; yet it surely is a likeable picture. It is all in good taste, makes steady progress, has pretty scenes and graceful players and will force no one to think.

"THE LONELY WOMAN."

Triangle Photoplay, Featuring Belle Bennett Has Good Heart Interest.

LIKE all the stories written by John A. Moroso, the Triangle five-part photoplay "The Lonely Woman" contains well-drawn characters and the heart interest is genuine. The complications are not at all difficult to anticipate, however, and there is very little dramatic action throughout the picture. Anyone who is satisfied to have his feelings mildly aroused and is fond of dogs will find "The Lonely Woman" an interesting story. Belle Bennett is featured in a part that is right in her best way, and Thomas N. Heffron has directed the production intelligently. The scenario by Catharine Carr and the camera work of Jacob Kull are praiseworthy.

"PAYING HIS DEBT."

Roy Stewart Has Dual Role in Triangle Western Drama That Will Interest.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ALVIN J. NEITZ is the author of "Paying His Debt," a five-part Triangle Western drama in which Roy Stewart plays a dual role. The picture was directed by Cliff Smith and photographed by Steve Rounds. Its story is melodramatic, the exploits of a stage robber forming the basis of the villainy that is always necessary in plots of this nature. A love motive, the remarkable resemblance between the bandit and a young chap who comes west for his health, and the way he repays the bandit's kindness to him are other developments of the action. Events move along at a good clip and the surroundings of the tale are well chosen for picturesque effect.

Frank Borden, the man in search of health, and one of the parts played by Roy Stewart, first meets Nan Christy, the heroine, when he has spent his last cent and is weak from hunger. The girl makes him accept some money, and with the partial return of his strength Bordon finds a job and pays her back. The long walk to her father's ranch proves too much for him and he falls in a faint by the roadside. Pete Morton, the bandit, picks Borden up and takes him to his cabin. Noticing the close resemblance between them Morton explains how the Easterner can repay him for helping him to recover and giving him a home. When Morton is engaged in holding up a stage Borden is to hang around the public places in town and be mistaken for the robber. The working out of the scheme brings Borden and Nan to the understanding both desire.

Roy Stewart doubles the two characters skillfully and makes each a distinct type. Josie Sedgwick as Nan, William Ellingford as Simon Christy and Walter Perkins as Father Kelly are the important members of the supporting cast.

"HER ONE MISTAKE."

Gladys Brockwell Has Double Role in Interesting Play About a Woman Who Repented of Foolishness.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WITH two roles in this picture, "Her One Mistake," a Fox five-reel offering, Gladys Brockwell is decidedly at her best. Her clear photographic qualities and her ability to be charming as well as convincing whether at ease or under the spell of emotion add much to a story by George Scarborough that deals convincingly with the relationship of the sexes.

It's a rather highly flavored love story. The heroine is twice rescued by a detective, played by Charles Perley, from the wiles of Chicago Charlie, a crook, played by William Scott. In the first instance she has been drugged in a hotel whither she had come to be married, a runaway match. The detective saves her in time so that at least she can get home the same night and her parents never know she had been out of the house. Later on, when the district attorney has fallen in love with her, and she, after putting him off as long as he would let her, has consented to marry him, she is a second time the victim.

The crook this time sends a false message telling her that her maid, the leading woman's second role, has been hurt, and she comes to him thinking to aid her servant. He locks the door, and tries to force her. She stabs him. The police were watching the house to arrest the crook. The detective gets a good clue, and follows it to its right end. There is a bit of melodramatic high light in the willingness of the heroine's maid to shield her by letting the police think she killed the crook. The police know better, and the detective sees how things are and reports that the dead man had committed suicide.

Director Le Saint has put life into the action, and there are many excellently handled bits of fresh business in it. It is effective as a whole, is well cast, natur-

"MASKS AND FACES."

Remarkable English Cast in Reade's Famous Stage Play Produced as War Aid.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE novel features connected with the World release, "Masks and Faces," would make it an unusual attraction, and the merits of the screen version of Charles Reade's famous old play alone are sufficient to insure its success. Produced by the combined efforts of all the leading dramatists and actors of the English stage as their contribution to the moving picture's share in helping to win the world's war for the Allies the array of names is a remarkable one. Sir James Barrie, George Bernard Shaw, Sir Arthur Pinero, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, Gertrude Elliott, Sir Squire Bancroft, Dennis Neilson Terry, Irene Vanbrugh are among a few of those interested.

"Masks and Faces" is founded on the life of the noted actress, Peg Woffington. It is a bright and interesting play of the time when George III was king, and reproduces the manners of that period with truth and skill. The character of Triplet played by Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson is famous in stage history. Irene Vanbrugh plays Peg.

The story tells of an English gentleman, Ernest Vane, who leaves his wife in the country, goes up to London, meets Peg, and imagines he is in love with her. The way that Peg cures him of his folly, settles accounts with an offending nobleman and several more of her enemies, and also shows her kindness of heart to the family of the unfortunate Triplet make up the leading incidents of the play.

The production of such a screen drama calls for the best acting that tradition has handed down on the English stage. The grand manners of a past age are shown in "Masks and Faces." Historical personages are made to live again, and even the "mob scenes" are portrayed by actors and actresses of established reputations.

"THE BRIDE'S AWAKENING."

Universal Special Features Mae Murray in Offering of Emotional Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS story, written by F. McGrew Willis and produced by Robert Leonard, pictures the early matrimonial experiences of a young girl who married the wrong man and then fell in love with another after learning the true character of her husband. The situations are of an emotional rather than a dramatic sort, the scenes in the final reel being the only ones that assume any great intensity. The emotionalism plays almost entirely upon the surface, giving a somewhat mechanical turn to the events, yet at the same time the story is one that will find many admirers.

Mae Murray is cast in the part of Elaine, the girl who made an unfortunate marriage. She plays the role with a fair degree of strength, but the too constant use of close-ups gives a rather overdrawn effect to many of the best scenes. The number, while it carries an interesting story, is weakly handled from the standpoint of direction and inclines to sentimentality of an unconvincing type.

Lewis Cody appears as Richard Earle, who tricked the young heiress into marriage after the death of her uncle. He looks the part of the fortune-hunting male and makes the most of his scenes. Ashton Dearholt, as Jimmy Newton, hero of the piece, makes an agreeable contrast with Earle.

As the story goes, Earle has an affair going with a married woman named Lucille Bennett, at the time of his marriage to Elaine. He insists upon keeping the marriage secret for a time, introducing Elaine as his ward. Jimmy Newton sees the girl and becomes interested in her. Later events bring about a quarrel between Earle and Jimmy Newton, in which Mrs. Bennett takes a hand. She shoots Earle in a fit of jealous rage, thus leaving the way clear for Jimmy and Elaine to wed.

"PASSING OF THE THIRD FLOOR BACK."

Six-Part Version of Jerome's Drama Produced by Herbert Brenon.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MADE famous in this country and in England by the acting of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, "Passing of the Third Floor Back," Jerome K. Jerome's stage play, has been put into screen form by Herbert Brenon, and is now being released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Sir Johnston plays his original part of the Stranger. Those who saw the play on the stage will miss the star's chief asset—his melodious voice—but the same gentle dignity which was so winning in the spoken play is brought out equally well on the screen, and the beautiful sentiment of the story cannot fail to reach the heart of every spectator. Several changes have been thought necessary in the plot, the greater freedom of the screen allowing them to be introduced. As originally written every scene took place in the parlor of a London boarding house.

"Passing of the Third Floor Back" is a modern allegory. Its action is all fashioned to drive home the lesson that selfishness is at the bottom of the misery of the world. The inmates of the boarding house shown in the picture are trying their best to show their worst side to one another when a new lodger arrives. He is a man in whom the spirit of Christ is reflected. Every word and every action of his reveal his thought and care for those about him. To each one of his fellow lodgers he shows a way out of the difficulty into which his own folly has led him. The dishonest landlady, the immoral little slavey, the father and mother who are willing to sacrifice their daughter for the sake of a wealthy marriage, all are taught the true meaning of life. It is to be hoped that the screen version of the play will repeat its stage success.

"TREASURE OF THE SEA."

Edith Storey Presented in Picture Dealing with Buried Treasure.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

THE Metro release for April 22, "Treasure of the Sea," is a five-reel production of average strength, made more interesting by the fine acting of the star, Edith Storey. The action at times is not altogether convincing.

Henry Ames, in order that he may remove the barrier of wealth separating him from Margaret Elkins, misuses a power of attorney and brings ruin to Margaret's father, placing the blame on Jim Hardwick, who is in the West. Margaret and her father go west and Margaret meets Hardwick, who falls in love with her. Later a gale shifts the beach sands and discloses a treasure ship. Both Margaret and Hardwick obtain gangs of men and endeavor to secure the treasure. Margaret's gang overpowers Hardwick's men and Hardwick is locked up in a cabin. Ames appears on the scene, and by listening to a conversation between Ames and Hardwick Margaret learns that Ames is the guilty party. In the meantime, although believing Hardwick a traitor to her father, she has learned to love him, so with the removal of this barrier all ends happily.

Edith Storey does excellent work as Margaret Elkins, and Lew Cody gives a good performance as Jim Hardwick. Josef Swickard as Margaret's father is inclined to overact. Lewis Willoughby as Henry Ames, and Toto De Crow, are satisfactory in their respective roles. Frank Reicher directed the production and has provided some excellent outdoor scenes, particularly those of the water and others showing the seacoast during a sandstorm. The photographic work of William Thompson is excellent.

"THE BIGGEST SHOW ON EARTH."

Paramount Presents Enid Bennett in a Story of Circus Life.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

EACH lady star has to have a chance to wear clothes of the other sex before she completes her "repertory of characterizations," but, most fortunately, Miss Bennett does not in her change have to pretend she is anything but a girl. She is so thoroughly feminine in every movement as well as in appearance that it would be impossible for her to disguise herself as a boy. She is very straight, alert and quick in her movements as a lion tamer, the daughter of a circus owner, but only once does she act like a man, when horsewhipping a man guilty of gross insult. She even holds a pistol as if she was afraid it would go off. She is delightfully feminine, however, a compensation for the utter lack of other characterization in this play. The unfortunate "hero" is compelled to move through it like a manikin, and all others simply play up to the star.

She is sent to a private school and snubbed by the other girls until she demonstrates her courage by overcoming a supposed mad dog. The hero happens along just then and the brave girl is invited by his sister to their grand old family mansion. The poor girl is snubbed by his proud mother, but they all attend a circus in a nearby town, which happens to be that of the snubbed girl's father. The regular lion tamer happens to be a little off that day; the crowd becomes enraged and the brave girl takes her place. She easily tames the wild beasts and wins an ovation from common, ordinary people, but she feels she will be rejected by the proud family she is visiting. Not so. The head of that proud family happens to be her father's silent partner in the enterprise. The proud mother is given the smelling bottle and the lovers embrace, a most fortuitous series of happenings, otherwise their love might never have "come true."

OPEN MARKET FILMS SHOWN.

Francis Ford Feature, Josh Binney Comedies and a Shorty Hamilton.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"Berlin via America."

WRITTEN by Elsie Van Name and produced by the Fordart Films, Inc., "Berlin Via America," a patriotic photoplay in six parts, directed by Francis Ford, is worthy the serious consideration of state right buyers. The picture is by no means a world beater, but it is strong for the cause of the Allies and is bound to inspire loyalty and devotion to the United States and the soldiers under her flag. The story of "Berlin Via America" has for its hero Phil Kelly, a veteran of the Spanish-American war, now in the United States Secret Service. By pretending to be disloyal to his country he gains the confidence of two German agents and takes service as an aviator in the German army. Before leaving this country Kelly becomes suspicious of Lieutenant Miles, who is in love with Rose Lockely, the hero's sweetheart.

When Kelly reaches the other side Rose, Colonel Lockely and Miles are there, and by flying over the American lines and dropping a message to his countrymen the supposed enemy flyer is able to forestall a German attack. There are war scenes, the marching of French and American troops to the front, episodes showing the treachery and cruelty of the Kaiser's soldiers and a love story that ends happily.

Francis Ford is the Phil Kelly and acts the part earnestly. The leading members of his support are Edna Emerson, Jack Newton, George Henry, Lois Scott, William Willis and William Canfield.

"Fabulous Fortune Fumblers."

The screen vampire is broadly burlesqued in the two-part Josh Binney comedy, "Fabulous Fortune Fumblers." Two moving picture actors out of a job get a wealthy married man to put up the money for a new company after he has fallen in love with the leading lady, who aspires to become the most famous vamp in the business. The studio scenes showing the filming of the picture that eats up the backer's money is full of slapstick fun. The acting and direction are on a par with the usual standard of this brand of two-reelers.

"Fred's Fictitious Foundling."

Funny Fatty Filbert plays an infant in "Fred's Fictitious Foundling," another Josh Binney comedy in two parts. The whole picture is one wild absurdity and will please persons who are amused by seeing a fat man dressed as a two-year-old and acting as near like one as possible. The finish is lively.

"Denny from Ireland."

Shorty Hamilton is the star of "Denny from Ireland," a five-part photoplay written and directed by W. H. Clifford. The story opens in Ireland and Shorty is shown as a good natured lad who is forced to leave his bride at home when he sails for America. He finds his way to Arizona, turns cowboy, has plenty of adventures and is at last able to send for his wife. There is a spirit of good feeling all through the picture and the star's humorous personality wins him many a laugh. The production is of good general average.

All of the foregoing subjects are being marketed by Ernest Shipman.

"HIS SMOTHERED LOVE."

Paramount Releases Amusing Sennett Farce with Chester Conklin in Leading Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT matters little to Mack Sennett what the story is or the characters are, he seems to have an inexhaustible fund of ingenious and highly original tricks to provoke laughter. Conklin, however, is equal to the difficulties, mostly athletic, of a farce role, and he is ably supported in this one by Marie Prevost and Harry Gribbon.

Into the love and adventures of the young couple Conklin is injected by fortuitous accident. He gets the credit of a heroic rescue really performed by a life-saving dog. He is nothing more or less than a short-changing conductor on a surface line of cars. He loses ground when this is discovered and decides to send the bridegroom a poisoned bottle of wine. The bridegroom sends a note of thanks, saying that he and the bride will drink the wine on their wedding trip.

Adventures thereafter hinge on Conklin's frantic efforts to reach the train on which the bridal couple are traveling. The chases of this train by his car and an ambulance would make the most lurid melodrama thrilling. It is partly trick work, but it is of a very high order, preserving the illusion of reality to a thrilling degree. The farce is replete with comic incident, professional in its thoroughness and activity from start to finish.

General Film Company.

LOST ON DRESS PARADE (Broadway Star Feature).—Preserving well the spirit of the O. Henry story from which it was adapted this two-reel offering provides good entertainment, and shows Patsy Deforrest and Evart Overton, the featured players, to advantage. Reviewed in issue of May 4.

A BLACK SHERLOCK HOLMES (Ebony).—A novel feature in connection with this brand, which is new to the General Film program, is that the cast is composed entirely of negro players. The story is a burlesque on Sherlock Holmes, and has some amusing situations, but the players are inclined to overact. Reviewed in our last issue on page 745.

RIP ROARING RIVALS (Clover).—Enacted by the same cast as the preceding comedy this offering has some amusing situations, and a rather good comedy fight. Bud Duncan, formerly of the team of Ham and Bud, has secured a good foil in Kewpie Morgan, who is several times his size. Reviewed at length in our last issue.

WOOING OF COFFEE CAKE KATE (Clover).—This one-reel picture is the first of a new brand of comedy. Dot Farley, Bud Duncan, and Kewpie Morgan being the principal fun-makers. Quite amusing.

DOING HIS BIT (Educational).—One of the "Happy Hooligan" cartoons, which is exceptionally funny. Hooligan, after a series of uncomfortable happenings, finally is placed on guard at a German post. He makes his escape by painting his shadow in black on the wall, so that the officer in command, and who is flirting with a German girl, is satisfied at a glance that Hooligan is still there. Finally he succeeds in dropping a bomb on the Kaiser.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

HONOR'S CROSS (Selexart).—A six-reel number written by H. B. Daniel, which features Rhea Mitchell, Herschell Mayall, and Edward Coxen. The number pictures vice conditions intimately, but without offense. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

BLINDFOLDED (Paralta Plays).—A Barriscale picture in five reels that is pretty sure to prove an attraction in the average theater. WITH NEATNESS AND DISPATCH, April 15.—This is an entertaining romantic farce featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. It is different from anything they have recently attempted, and contains several good situations, and many laughs. Reviewed at length in issue of May 4, on page 745.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 16 (Mutual), April 24.—Interesting scenes of this number are a train wreck at La Grange, Ill., the opening of the baseball season at Chicago and New York, Hun prisoners in France, a regiment of French cavalry in review, the unveiling of the John Burroughs monument at Toledo, Ohio, in the presence of the distinguished naturalist and writer, women auto drivers hauling supplies, Secretary of War Baker, gambling machines burned by police in Philadelphia, and scenes showing our boys in France on the way to camp.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 17 (Mutual), April 28.—One of the unusual sights in this number of the Screen Telegram shows some of the animals at the zoo in Baltimore in panic when fire broke out among the buildings, the oldest soldier in the world celebrating his 110th birthday at San Francisco, Geraldine Farrar singing for war relief activities, the testing of an armored car, and the shooting down of wooden soldiers with a machine gun are among other items of interest. Among other prominent personalities shown are Charles M. Schwab and President Wilson.

SPOTTED (Strand, April 30.—A pleasing number featuring Billie Rhodes. The comedy is of the light, refined sort, and centers around a joke that is perpetrated on a visitor to a young married couple. This couple in moderate circumstances accept the invitation of a young heiress (Billie Rhodes) to use her home during the sojourn of their wealthy guest. The heiress, who acts as chauffeur and also as maid to the family, finally becomes betrothed to the guest.

HEARTS OR DIAMONDS (William Russell Productions, Inc.), April 29.—A strong, well-knit story, with sustained interest throughout, and several big, exciting scenes in which William Russell assumes heroic proportions. The support, headed by Charlotte Burton, is praiseworthy, and Director King has handled the production excellently.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

HOW COULD, CAROLINE? (Pathe Play), May 5.—A five-reel subject by Izola Forrester featuring Bessie Love in the part of a romantic young girl. She falls in love with a taxi-driver at her sister's wedding, and is disillusioned only by learning that he is married and also a crook. The humor of this number, which is presented as a series of comedy episodes, will appeal especially to women.

DOUBLE CROSSED (Pathe), May 12.—Episode No. 10 of "The House of Hate." This continues the exciting events begun in the last instalment. Pearl escapes from her position over the acid tank, and all hands pursue the Terror. He returns to Waldoncliffe, and by a clever substitution escapes death by the sacrifice of another man's life. Gresham invades the underworld, and leads a band of crooks to capture in a sensational manner. The number is full of thrills.

BRITAIN'S BULWARKS (Pathe), May 12.—A half reel, picturing the remarkable work of British women in munition factories. They are shown preparing shells for shipment to the front. Health inspection of employees is another feature.

BRITISH CAVALRY ON WESTERN FRONT (Pathe), May 12.—On same reel with above. This gives just a few interesting glimpses of the mounted soldiers of the empire patrolling villages along the battle front. The Indian lancers are also shown.

THE NON-STOP KID (Rolin-Pathe), May 12.—A comedy number featuring Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels, and Harry Pollard. Harold palms himself off as a professor of music at a social event, and is forced to call upon the victrola when he is asked to sing. This has the same deft comedy touch as previous offerings, and is very laughable.

OUR FIGHTING ALLY—THE TANK (Pathe).—An amazing demonstration of the powers of the caterpillar tractor used in warfare. A 350 horse power tank is shown traversing a country filled with ditches, then through a thick woods, where it turns over grown trees in its course. It also ploughs its way through a frame building. This is the best demonstration yet made on the screen of the tank in action.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 50 (Universal), April 20—Opening a baseball season in New York, stringing wires "under fire" at Camp Logan, Texas, shipbuilding at Stockton Springs, Me., children's tribute to John Burroughs, and numerous other subjects are treated in this interesting number. It closes with reproductions of newspaper cartoons.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 21 (Universal), April 24.—A motorcycle climbing contest at Los Angeles heads this number, which also contains war views of various sorts, baseball game at Chicago, scenes from the Liberty Loan drive, food saving, and cartoons by Hy Mayer.

HER MOVIE MADNESS, (L-KO) May 8.—A two-reel comic, with Gale Henry and Hugie Mack in the cast. Gale plays a farm maiden, who joins a moving picture company; Hughie is her fat country lover. There are some quite amusing knockabout moments in the studio scenes. The subject is one of average strength; it would have been helped by more of a plot idea.

THE BULLSEYE, No. 14, (Universal Special), May 11.—This number pictures the selling of Cora as a white slave, in Mexico. Cody and Lee, recovering on the desert, go in search of her. There are some fierce hand-to-hand conflicts, and the number closes with Cody about to be shot, against a wall.

WHOSE BABY ARE YOU? (Lyons & Moran Star Comedy), May 11.—Eddie appears as a young husband with a wife and baby, and Lee plays his well known role of janitor. The janitor finds himself with the baby, a dog and a parrot on his hands, after a mixup in the apartment house, but eventually gets them in the hands of their proper owners. This is an excellent comedy and will make its way with any audience.

THE LION'S CLAWS, No. 6 (Universal), May 11.—Thrills without number are contained in this instalment, which is alive with interest. Beth and Buck, after escaping from the subterranean stream, are captured and taken to Bonda, where Beth's father is already a prisoner. All are confined in the palace dungeon, and Beth is tortured in the presence of the other prisoners. This is exceptional in direction and general presentation.

THE TWO-SOUL WOMAN (Universal Special), May 11.—A five-reel subject, based on a novel by Gelett Burgess, which features Priscilla Dean as a sort of feminine "Jekyl and Hyde." She is under the hypnotic power of a doctor, who changes her from a sweet, attractive girl to a vulgar, athletic creature. The hero succeeds in releasing the girl from this bad influence and of course marries her. This is a weird, fascinating story and leads up to an exciting finish.

THE BRIDE'S AWAKENING (Universal Special).—A six-reel number, written by F. McGrew Willis and produced by Robert Leonard, with Mae Murray in the leading role. She plays the part of a young heiress who marries the wrong man and later falls in love with another. Lewis Cody and Ashton Dearholt play the male leads. The story is one of the emotional type and has a moderately strong plot. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

World Pictures Corporation.

MASKS AND FACES, May 6.—This five-part feature is unique. It was made in England, and all the famous actors in London take part in the performance. Charles Reade's celebrated work would please any body of spectators. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

The Stranger, by refusing to see in the scheming landlady and her quarrelsome boarders anything but the best, succeeds in calling out the best in each, and one after the other each becomes morally rehabilitated. Before his smile and understanding words their bickerings and meanness disappear. They grow more tolerant toward each other, and at the same time strangely happy. Finally, when love has replaced hatred as the governing spirit of the household, the Stranger passes from their midst as mysteriously as he came.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00

He's at it Again!

The burglar—the second-story man—the gumshoe operator—the imitator—the would-be duplicator is in our midst once again.

No sooner had "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," turned its first night audience of blasé New Yorkers into a yelling mob than the feeder-on-other-men's-brains caught the Big Idea.

It was the Title that received his first fine attention. "That Title's a Whale," he said. "Watch me rib up a ringer—it's that 'Beast' word that does it." So already—only a few short weeks since release, you're being asked in some places to come see "The Mad Beast of Berlin." You can go—but you'll be lonely. The big crowd will be across the street under the big top, seeing the real, the genuine, the true—"The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin"—the picture that makes 'em fighting mad.

Next, it was the Advertising. And the walloping ads. got 'em all—even legitimate producers with their own show on similar lines. Right off the bat they caught the appeal—and switched to the note that's going to make more money for Exhibitors who show "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," than any other picture of years past—or for many years to come.

Our Only Warning

Our only word of warning is this. If you want to make the real money play the real show. Only in that one way can you get the Title and the Advertising that bring in the real dollars. Reserve by wire today.

Count Guisseppe De Cippico, Longacre Building,
42nd Street & Broadway,
New York City.

My dear Count:

Replying to yours of recent date regarding the picture "Lest We Forget", beg to atate that I have refrained from answering the same awaiting results at our various theatres when I could answer you more intelligently.

The business we did (which was record breaking everywhere) simply bore out our judgment. In all of our New York Theatres, it was absolute capacity.

The picture opened Monday night in Baltimore to what might have been termed a "Riot". As you may judge what the audience thought of the picture, they took up subscriptions immediately after the presentation and sold Three hundred and five thousand dollars worth of Liberty Bonds that night. It was the picture that did it.

The audiences at our various theatres simply were wild with enthusiasm and I want to take this means of thanking you for the opportunity of presenting it in our houses.

Yours very truly,

Marcus Loew

The "Affiliated" Platform

1—To insure EXHIBITOR MANAGEMENT and CONTROL in very fact, as well as promise.

2—To in no way disturb existing booking organizations, but rather to encourage them.

3—To keep the capital of each association in its OWN depository, and under its OWN control.

4—To maintain all the benefits of "Open Booking," and at the same time provide a CONSISTENT and DEPENDABLE schedule of releases.

5—To secure, not only ALL the concessions in rental prices which the combined buying power of exhibitors will earn, but the MAJOR SHARE of all excess profits as well.

6—To distribute the cost of all productions on a fair and business basis to each booking association, and to every member of such an association.

7—To regulate expenditures, according to sound business methods, and to protect exhibitors against excessive salaries, extravagant advertising and pretentious executive offices.

8—To arrange, on behalf of the booking associations now existing, and such others as shall be formed, for an affiliation with a national, or central clearing house, upon terms that are JUST and EQUITABLE to all concerned.

Minding Their Own Business

EXHIBITORS possess the real values of the motion picture business. Their theatres are the fundamental assets of the industry. Their investments exceed all other investments.

Yet, until this moment, exhibitors have had little to say about the running of the business—scarcely, even, anything to say about the running of their own part of the business.

Their attempts to pool their interests, and thereby exercise the voice in affairs which their combined booking power would give them, has resulted either in the feathering of the nests of a chosen few of their number, or in the financing of the selfish purposes of outsiders.

The reason for this has been, that once having assembled their forces, exhibitors have given over the control of these forces to others.

The AFFILIATED DISTRIBUTORS CORPORATION has been formed BY exhibitors, FOR exhibitors, to keep the control of the exhibitors' booking power in the hands of exhibitors.

The purpose of the organization is to gain for the exhibitors' booking associations affiliated with it, a definite and consistent supply of meritorious pictures, at price concessions which such combined booking strength will earn —not to take advantage of that strength for selfish interests.

Exhibitors' booking associations, affiliated with this organization, retain ALL of their independence, ALL of their funds, and likewise are WHOLLY responsible for the management of the AFFILIATED DISTRIBUTORS CORPORATION.

This management is vested in a Board of Directors, made up of exhibitors, and elected by exhibitors. To make this board fully representative, of all exhibitors, one director is allotted to every hundred days of booking represented.

That a directorate of such representativeness may be relied upon to provide an efficient and trustworthy management, is best attested by the results which are now being obtained by such exhibitor booking units as

The Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate, of New York.
The Associated Theatres, Inc., of Minnesota.
The Motion Picture Theatres Association, of Illinois.
The Associated Theatres, Inc., of Illinois.
The United Exhibitors Association, of Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania.
The Exhibitors Booking Association of the Intermountain States.
The North and South Carolina Exhibitors Booking Association.
The Exhibitors Booking Association, of Michigan.
The Tri-State Exhibitors Circuit, of Pittsburgh.

Retaining their present independence, but affiliated in a national organization that will assure the better producers an even more extensive market, these, and other booking associations, now in process of formation, will for the first time in the history of the industry, be in a position to realize the full power of their strength.

That such realization will bring added savings in rentals, and increased returns in the excess profits of each booking association, will be obvious to the most casual investigator.

If you would have a share in these benefits, write today to the

This Is the Way A HUMAN EXHIBITOR Figures His Picture Values:

HE watches a screening, sees the plot develop, watches the actors, notes the sets and the "look" of the scenes and then asks himself the following questions:

"Do the things I am seeing in this picture happen in the lives of the people in my audiences? Do these players act and behave like the everyday, normal human beings to whom my theatre caters? Are the problems and emotions in this picture the common, recognizable problems and emotions of men and women in general?"

He could combine all these questions in one and ask himself: "Has this picture got humanity in it?" The great public of the world worships before the God of Things As They Are. It is a FACT WORLD, as opposed to the world of Fancy. Give your audiences LIFE AS IT IS. When you do this you have challenged and will hold their interest.

TRIANGLE

It's In The Eating

THAT'S where the proof of the pudding lies.

You will never know what TRIANGLE pictures and TRIANGLE service will do for your house until you have given them a trial.

The one object for which you are in business is profit—and profit is registered at the box office.

TRIANGLE service is not designed to fill your house and then take all the receipts, leaving no profit for you. Nor is it intended to sell you pictures at reasonable prices and then when, through your efforts, your box office shows a profit to suddenly raise your rentals to unreasonably high figures.

TRIANGLE is a combination of good pictures, founded on human interest stories, artistically directed and with talented players; plus prompt, courteous, honorable and business-like service. The TRIANGLE policy has for its object the success of motion picture exhibitors and it is sufficiently flexible to meet the demands of any exhibitor in the country.

The TRIANGLE Program offers you two pictures each week on which you can absolutely depend—pictures that are consistently good week-in and week-out—pictures that will always please any audience.

TRIANGLE service is offered at prices which guarantee a profit to all exhibitors who will use reasonable efforts in the exploitation of pictures. It is the unalterable policy of TRIANGLE—an instruction rigidly enforced by the corporation—that salesmen must do business with exhibitors only on such a basis as will insure them making money. Exhibitors must make money on TRIANGLE service—this is the very foundation of the success of TRIANGLE.

Let us make you a proposition for running a few TRIANGLE pictures. Compare the opinion of your patrons, the service from our exchange and the box office results of TRIANGLE with any other program you have used or are using. GIVE TRIANGLE A TRIAL.

There's a TRIANGLE exchange near you. Don't delay. Find out at once what TRIANGLE Service will cost YOU.

Gentlemen:-

Congratulations on your latest wonder serial, "THE HOUSE OF HATE" with Pearl White and Antonio Moreno. After viewing first three episodes, I immediately booked same for all my houses.

In comparing the Pearl White Serials that I have shown, namely: "the Perils of Pauline"; "Exploits of Elaine"; "The Iron Claw"; "Pearl of the Army"; and "The Fatal Ring", I am convinced that "THE HOUSE OF HATE" has a greater element of interest, snap, and mystery, that will greatly appeal to the Ladies as well as to the Men and Children.

I look forward to "THE HOUSE OF HATE" being a big money maker for me. Wishing you further success, I am,

Very truly yours,

A FACE THAT THE WHOLE WORLD KNOWS;

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson

in Herbert Brenon's Picturization of

Passing of The Third Floor Back

MOVING PICTURE WORLD:

Sir Johnston plays his original part of the Stranger. The same gentle dignity which was so winning in the spoken play is brought out equally well on the screen, and the beautiful sentiment of the story cannot fail to reach the heart of every spectator.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH:

Herbert Brenon's screen version of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," featuring Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, the eminent English actor, who introduced the play to this country, provides rare screen entertainment. Its exquisite theme carries a reassuring message particularly commendable in this day of unrest. "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" makes a unique photoplay. The idea of enlightenment has been used in more or less similar form in many screen subjects, but never with such potent effect.

As only to be expected of a Brenon feature, the production is splendid, revealing many unusual lighting effects and fade-outs. Forbes-Robertson, in this, his first American-made film, plays with a quiet dignity which creates a lasting impression. The producers have surrounded him with a cast of exceptionally capable types, every one of whom deserves special mention.

Supported by these well-known artists:

Mrs. Sharpe	Augusta Haviland
Stasia	Molly Pearson
Major Tompkins	Ben Graham
Mrs. Tompkins	Grace Stephens
Vivian	Ketty Galanta
Joe Wright	Robert Fisher
Christopher Penny	George Le Guere
Jake Samuels	Sydney Goldin
Harry Larkcom	Thornton Bastion
Miss Kite	Ricca Allen
Miss De Hooley	Dora Mills Adams

From play by Jerome K. Jerome.
Directed by Herbert Brenon.

DRAMATIC MIRROR:

There remains but little to be said in praise of Jerome K. Jerome's play, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," for critics and theatergoers far and wide have acclaimed it wherever it has played. And so strongly has Forbes-Robertson's impersonation of the stranger taken root in the hearts and minds of people, that it is safe to say that capacity houses will greet his screen appearance in this—one of his most famous roles.

Herbert Brenon has caught the spirit and meaning of this symbolical play, and its message is forcibly conveyed. The atmosphere of the boarding house is finely presented, and the characters of its inmates carefully drawn.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW:

Herbert Brenon has achieved another magnificent success in his filming of Jerome K. Jerome's well-known book, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back."

The acting is excellent without exception, and it would be really difficult to tell whose work stands out most in prominence.

". . . . and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

—Proverbs 18:24.

When you're in a tight place and nothing can pry you loose, not even money.
And you look in despair for a friend
and you find him.
And he goes the limit for you at the risk of his very life—
Would you "grapple him to your soul with hoops of steel"?
(as old Bill Shakespeare said)
Certainly you would!
It's a subject worth volumnes, years of thought and discussion.
And surely worth a picture.

WID says:

Big heart throb story should spell many dollars

Mitchell Lewis in "NINE-TENTHS of the LAW"

AUTHOR.....Reaves Eason

AS A WHOLE—Story founded on mother-love, one of the greatest themes; has great acting and lots of drama.

STORY—Bereaved mother finds kidnapped child and attempts to die when husband insists upon returning it to parents.

DIRECTION....Very good, indeed

PHOTOGRAPHY.....Good

LIGHTINGS.....Excellent

CAMERA WORK—Highly intelligent; some fine shots.

STAR.....Great performance

SUPPORT—Jimsy Maye, wonderful; Reaves Eason, splendid work; Julius Frankenburg, effective; Breezy Reaves, a great kid.

EXTERIORS.....Beautiful

INTERIORS — Atmospheric and convincing.

DETAIL—Generally well handled.

CHARACTER OF STORY—Good for all audiences; great for women.

TIME.....66 minutes (6 parts)

HERE is a story that is founded upon a theme so big that it just can't help get over. It is played with sincerity and real power by an exceedingly competent cast, in a locale of the big woods where the drama is reduced to its lowest terms for tremendous punch. The continuity is by no means perfect, but it has preserved the dramatic values so fully that it would be absurd to quarrel with it.

Mitchell Lewis presents one of the truest and most sympathetic pictures of the French-Canadian woodsman ever shown on the screen. He has, to be sure, a tremendously powerful characterization with which to work; but that circumstance by no means belittles his own contribution. Jimsy Maye, as the mother, is equally imbued with the force of her part, and in her own dramatic moments rises to heights fully equal to those of the star. Reaves Eason, the author, is vigorous and compelling as the villain kidnapper, and Julius Frankenberg is effective as his evil associate.

Play this feature as a genuine attraction.

MORALE

A motion picture opportunity and obligation of service.

MR. BRUCE BARTON, editor of "Every Week," in one of his constructive editorials says:

WORDS come and go: they have their day. We have passed through the reign of "psychological" and "efficiency" and "merchandising."

And a new little word now holds the throne: the destinies of the world are wrapped up in its six letters.

It is spelled this way: M-O-R-A-L-E.

I listened the other night to Will Irwin's description of the great Italian disaster. There are no better fighters in the world than the Italians. Cadorna had established them in positions almost impregnable.

What, then, happened to hurl them to defeat?

First of all, the report spread insidiously all over Italy that the war would be over in December, that the peace conference even then was under way in Switzerland.

It spread first, not among the soldiers, but among the women at home. Soldiers going home on leave met wives who gave them the good news and warned them: "Don't take any chances now: the war is practically over. Just be careful a few days more."

The whole story is too long to tell. But, for our purpose, the significant fact is this—the morale of the people at home was first attacked; and they, in turn, poisoned the faith and determination of the troops at the front.

Morale is as old as warfare, and it can be made or broken overnight.

And that nation whose morale curve is highest when the final conflict comes will win the war.

What, then, is this quality—morale? Of what elements does it consist?

Cheerfulness—bred of the knowledge that the home fires are burning brightly and are worth fighting for.

Courage—sustained by the courage of those who are behind.

Faith—that the cause is eternally just, and therefore can not fail.

These are the elements of morale. If you yearn for the news of victory that will spell peace, see that you keep these qualities in your own heart strong and vibrant.

For almost always, when morale begins to weaken, it begins to weaken first of all at home.

THE MOTION PICTURE SCREEN is one of the most powerful agencies available for building and sustaining the morale of our people. The picture screen has given much—there is much more to give. Let every exhibitor see his duty.

JUDGING "THE EAGLE'S EYE" BY NEWSPAPER STANDARDS

As evidence of the opinions of the country's leading newspaper editors about the public appeal, timeliness and importance of "The Eagle's Eye," this is what they did in their respective papers during the week preceding the publication of the first chapter of the story:

The Philadelphia Evening Ledger posted two color half sheet cards on all its newsstands, placarded its score of delivery wagons with three sheet announcements, ran two and three column ads in its daily columns—all advertising the publication, for twenty weeks, of the story of "The Eagle's Eye."

The Boston American announced the first chapter with a seven-column, two-line display heading across the FIRST PAGE OF ITS SECOND MAIN NEWS SECTION, AND BEGAN THE STORY IN THE SEVENTH, OR "BIG NEWS" COLUMN ON THAT PAGE, the second most important in the paper.

The Washington Times published full page advertisements, drawing attention to the appearance of the first chapter.

The Chicago Examiner also used full page ads, lauding the story of "The Eagle's Eye" as the greatest serial feature of the year.

The Los Angeles Examiner began the first chapter on its first page, giving it equal importance with war news.

The San Francisco Examiner started the story with a four column, full page depth layout on the first page of its second main news section.

The Buffalo Express, Albany Telegram, Atlanta Constitution, Houston Post, Austin (Texas) American, Denver News, Salt Lake City Tribune, and twenty-eight other big dailies treated it with equal prominence.

Not even the most popular of the big war stories that are being published as feature matter have received the great amount of advertising that the newspapers have given to their contracts for exclusive local publication rights to the novelization of the story of "The Eagle's Eye."

It is another, and an irrefutable evidence that "The Eagle's Eye," in picture form, is the biggest subject in the industry. There is nothing that can begin to compare with it. It is so big it belittles description.

Exhibitors who have booked it are unstinted in their praise of its drawing power. Patrons have gasped at its revelations. It is the pictured history of Imperial Germany's war against America on American soil.

The big first, second and third run accounts throughout the United States agree, after showing the first episodes, that there never has been, in the history of motion pictures, anything to compare with

Facts and Comments

IF you have put a lot of money into a picture theater what do you suppose is the best protection for your investment? It would be interesting to read the answers to that question from a given number of exhibitors, and we wish that we might have them to print here, but lacking those answers at this moment we are going to make a few observations upon the testimony of a man who has taken occasion to look into the subject. He is an exchangeman whose business brings him in close touch with exhibitors who have such investments to protect, hence speaks from experience. "What I can't understand," he says, "is why an exhibitor with thousands of dollars invested in a picture theater will insist in running inferior pictures because the rental price is low. Pictures that rent at low prices are not the kind that will give a picture house the sort of reputation it should have. The trouble seems to be that the house manager will not make the effort to put over a good picture if he can get by with a cheap one. To prove that more money can be made with a picture that cost one hundred dollars a day than can be made with fifteen-dollar pictures I have gone to the trouble to make a demonstration in a number of houses, but the results, however good, have not made the least impression on the house manager. How can the producer continue making good pictures if the exhibitor will not make an effort to run them?"

This is a large question—one for which it will be difficult to find an answer. In the first place, what sort of man is the house manager; is he a showman by training or was he brought up in the real estate business? If a showman he will understand and will prefer good pictures at any price and will know what to do when he books one. But if he comes from commercial life and is hampered with all the conservative ideas which surround ordinary business callings, he will be hopeless in the majority of instances. The show business is so different from anything he has ever engaged in that he cannot grasp its possibilities or comprehend its probabilities. To bring men of this latter class up to the degree of keenness that enables them to sense the drawing power of an attraction and to know how to communicate that power to their public requires education. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD has long sought to instruct its readers along these lines and many fine examples of exhibitor propaganda are continually being recorded in its "Advertising for Exhibitors" department. If read carefully the inexperienced will learn much from those pages.

THOUGH the grand total is not in to prove the fact, yet it probably is a fact that the combined efforts of the moving picture industry has resulted in the sale of more Third Liberty Loan bonds than can be credited to any other industry. Picture players of high degree have toured the country arousing the crowds which greeted them to great buying enthusiasm. Millions have been subscribed through this effort. Picture theaters everywhere have been active in pushing the sale of bonds with the public and, finally, the picture people in all branches of the industry have bought and bought and bought again. It will make a fine showing, Uncle Sam.

WHY must the moving picture industry continually be harassed by Chicago's super-censor, Major Funkhouser? To be sure he does not hold sway over a large domain, but Chicago is an important city, and in the matter of war propaganda pictures, particularly, there is great need for the truth in Chicago. But Major Funkhouser is always on the job and insists in taking bits out of the best of them. Just now "Hearts of the World" and "My Four Years in Germany" are receiving his attentions. Popular opinion against the Major runs so high in Chicago that he has felt impelled to issue a denial of German parentage. Altogether it must be quite interesting for the Major.

JOHN R. FREULER'S resignation as president of the Mutual Film Corporation was somewhat of a surprise to the trade and now everyone is asking: "What's going to become of Mutual?" While Mr. Freuler was instrumental in saving the Mutual Film Corporation from financial wreck and ruin, we believe it to be a mistaken idea to assume that the concern builded so carefully by him will fall because he ceases to be its president. It may be confidently stated that the men in charge of the affairs of the Mutual are competent to protect its interests and are as determined to maintain its position in the trade.

Sex and Common Sense

By Robert C. McElravy.

THERE has never been a time in the history of moving pictures when the general output of producers has been so free from offending sex stories. Producers have risen splendidly to the new atmosphere of the times, they have caught the heroic spirit of the day and matched it with screen creations that have brought praise to the industry. Let no one doubt that at the present moment the screen is winning a permanent and enviable position for itself in the hearts of a democratic peole.

Yet occasionally a picture appears which, while not actually offensive in itself, is sufficiently like the product of more decadent days to bring out showers of criticism from certain sources. These interests, while professing great friendship for the moving picture industry, are really magnifying the situation and doing an incredible amount of mischief with their ill-advised comments. They choose one or two offerings which contain broad situations and use these as a basis for slurring the moving picture output, which in the main is altogether clean and wholesome.

If we are ever going to gain for moving pictures the full consideration to which they are entitled it is time we got away from some of the narrow, destructive criticism that goes on within the industry itself, or on the part of those who profess to be associated with it. We need, in particular, to use a little more common sense in dealing with screen stories that have a sex interest, as most stories must have.

The Moving Picture World has fought valiantly all the years of its existence against lewd and vicious screen portrayals. Its efforts in this regard have been too consistent and painstaking to be misunderstood, or much less forgotten, by both exhibitors and producers. There has been no change in this attitude and there will be none. On the other hand, there is no disposition on the part of this publication to encourage untrained or undeveloped critics to narrow down the scope of the screen to their own circumscribed limits. It is ready now, as always, to protest against lurid and offensive pictures on the screen, but it is equally ready to protest against exaggerated misrepresentations of pictures that contain nothing of real offense. Such comment is not criticism, but simple abuse of well meaning pictures.

We should recognize, first of all, that sex interest has a legitimate place in moving pictures, just as it has in novels or plays. It may be treated on the screen in many ways—with reverence or with humor. Sex is an indispensible part of life and indelibly associated with any form of entertainment, good or bad, that professes to represent life. Even a touch of the risque is at times permissible, but this should be attempted only by producers who know what they are doing and know the fine line that separates decency from indecency. Pictures of this sort are apt to be costly experiments, for they demand an extremely light touch, and with the very best of intentions the effort may give offense where none was meant. Besides, there has been a surfeit of this sort of thing.

This publication was recently called to account by a contemporary for its review of a picture called "The Risky Road." Our contemporary took the attitude, for reasons best known to himself, that the review was an attempt to deceive exhibitors into using the picture against their wishes. We do not understand how such a conclusion was reached, for every line of the review told the exhibitor just what the picture was, if the title itself had not already done so. Our review termed it "a fervid love story," with "a very frank sex interest." It termed the story "melodramatic" and "rather trivial" in plot.

Only one sentence of the review was capable of misconstruction, that which said the situations had been given acceptable treatment and there was nothing in the general presentation that should offend. The review meant by that, if it must be explained, that the acting was free from coarseness; in other words that the manner of presentation did not add any further impediments to an already doubtful plot. The review did not pass upon the morals of the production because this did not seem necessary, after what had already been said and after describing the plot itself. As a matter of fact, the story had a good moral, but it was so entirely the sex type of offering that the moral was obscured. "The Risky Road" is the type of film that would be acceptable and perhaps mildly amusing to sophisticated observers, but would not be liked by many others. It is not, as our review indicated, in any way a strong production. But it is not a vicious picture in any sense of the word.

We think exhibitors realize the difficulties our reviewers have to cope with in these brief criticisms. There is seldom such a thing as an utterly bad picture in these days. The most a reviewer can do is to make distinctions as to the types of stories, pointing out the good points and the bad ones, saying something of the effect of the whole, and permitting the exhibitor to use his own judgment. Exhibitors realize, further, that their own requirements are different, and that the burden of making program selections must remain with them. The object of our reviews is to guide them as honestly and carefully in this difficult task as is humanly possible.

As for making wholesale accusations against producers because an occasional offering offends, that is also ridiculous. Fiction of almost any type to be interesting must play rather close to the sex line at times; we should not be too ready to cast stones if by accident it occasionally goes over the line in certain scenes. The safest plan for producers is to keep the sex interest incidental rather than to base an entire story upon it.

Little Theatricalisms

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE heroine writes a note with three or four up-and-down movements of the pen. All right on the stage, where time is an important factor. On the screen psychology counts. How about portraying her feelings as each sentence is framed, with, at least, some semblance to "holding up the mirror."

It is manifestly impossible to hold interest at the theater by a dinner lasting more than five minutes, but why jump the screen characters from soup to nuts in seven seconds?

Interesting geographical problem. Why does the western villain hold up his hands the moment a pistol is thrust in his face, so close that he might easily grab it and put up a fight, whereas the eastern villain in a dress suit merely curls his upper lip over his pearly teeth in a sneer and flicks his cigarette ashes with a truly heroic indifference to danger?

When the millionaire's neglected wife is about to leave him in their drawing room fifty-five feet long, a little reflection will easily convince anyone that he can manifest his indifference otherwise than by standing with his back to the grate fire, his elbows on the mantle-piece.

When a spirited young lady starts out to be a burglar, why transform her to an angel of mercy before she really has a fair chance to show what she can do? Why try to create the impression that the way to upper life is through the underworld? Let her burgle.

It would at least ring in a variation on the commonplace if the young hero would not stand gazing after the adventuress, a flower at his lips, when she makes her exit from his bachelor quarters, but would examine his watch-pocket and count his change.

A long established tradition is the housemaid in silk stockings, opera pumps with Louis heels and lace-edged apron and cap. She is about as T.T.L. as the New York millionaire who marries a poor girl, or the perfect lady who goes unescorted to the villain's rooms at midnight in decollette costume, or a cabaret attended by any but sight-seeing, out-of-town boobs and native crooks.

From the mother art we get easily-ruined bankers, grafting politicians with uptilted cigars, impoverished working girls with permanent hair waves, heroes with beautiful waist lines, who slap their gloves against their thighs, heroines who could not do wrong if they tried, adventuresses who know how to dress, except they wear big hats and bigger feathers, debutantes with simp giggles and a duck walk, Mexican ladies with knives in their teeth, counts of no account with Chaplin mustaches waxed at the ends, and the star.

The star reads scenarios nowadays with a view to being portrayed as an inexperienced young girl who outwits "them all." She never really wanted to kiss the villain, only that he should be dying to kiss her, the innocent thing—he must not think that of her under any circumstances. She may even decide to be wrongfully accused and "suffer so" before matters are finally adjusted, but she really never meant anything wrong from the first. When the star is not a queen, a princess, or not even an ordinary duchess, with a half-dozen men crazy to marry her, she may consent to be poor and human during most of the play, so long as she can wear a Paquin creation "at last."

These are only a few of the souvenirs from Grandma Drama's workbasket, handed down to a young art which exquisitely mirrors Nature in her sweetest moods, which can be made to mirror human nature in all its varied, interesting and complicated manifestations. Speaking of Chaplin, one great secret of his success lies in avoidance of the conventional, witness "A Dog's Life" with one of the most artistic endings ever shown on the screen.

Always a Steady Demand

By Sam Spedon.

THERE always will be a steady demand for pictures of quality and merit. The producers who know how to make this kind will establish a steady demand for them. This does not necessarily mean big star productions. It means the right kind of story, interpreted by a competent cast under the right direction. The whole industry is awakening to this fact and the sooner they get to it and do away with the hit or miss productions the sooner we will get down to a steady and established business basis. To satisfy this demand, we have got to give the best that is in us and employ the best of everything and everybody to accomplish it. When we say best, we do not mean the most expensive.

There Are Exceptions.

Just now there are flashes and spurts in the business of the industry. We refer particularly to the production of big pictures and big sales. Every once in a while we hear of a big independent production and a big sale. They are the exception rather than the rule. The general program productions are fluctuating, governed by quality and demand.

Creating Demand.

The sale of big independent productions depend to a great extent upon promotion and exploitation. Broadway runs, or runs in metropolitan centers, are one means of exploitation. We believe from observation that it can be overdone. We have known some very large, excellent pictures to run for two weeks very successfully and fall down the third week. It would be safer to limit these metropolitan showings to two weeks, three weeks at most. If they peter out before the end of the run they lose out in the purpose for which they were started: advertising and sales value.

Strengthen Your Releases.

There is a tendency on the part of some manufacturers to separate or cull their pictures under special brands, such as super masterpieces, etc., taking what they consider the best from the regular program and releasing them through different channels and under distinctive heads, which injures the regular program releases by comparison. It makes the regular patrons of the program believe they are being discriminated against and not getting the advantage of the best, being deprived of an equal choice. It was very wise on the part of one of the well known producing and distributing companies to decide to release its recent "Broadway" success through its regular exchanges and program. It will do much to strengthen its program and popularize its product.

Always a Market.

Program productions will not go begging if kept up to the standard. Neither will independent productions, for the same reason. The exhibitors will be glad to get the former and the distributor will be ready to buy the latter, because the exhibitors are always looking for the best. All of which proves that the demand is for standard quality and timely pictures.

The Time to Build Up.

The steady business which the exhibitors are enjoying just now is largely due to present war conditions. People must have entertainment and diversion and the pictures afford a reasonable and ready means to this end. The pictures are not always of such quality and merit as they should be; very few of them are poor and most of them are enjoyable. It is a well established fact that people must have the pictures; they want more and better pictures all the time. The time is now ripe to establish a still higher standard for the pictures, that will continue their popularity long after the war is over. If this is not done they will diminish rather than increase in favor.

An Important Disclaimer

By the Rev. W. H. Jackson.

THERE appears in the current number of a contemporary trade paper an article written by a certain Rev. W. M. Taylor upon the well known Sunday question that is of such a nature that we are compelled to take notice of it. The purport of this article is to the effect that there is no established Sunday or Sabbath. Seven reasons are given, each one absolutely false and in distinct contradiction to history and truth. The Moving Picture World has given personal and practical aid to the moving picture interests for such an observance of the Sabbath day as seemed consistent with the principle that the "Sabbath was made for man," but the Moving Picture World cannot and will not consent to outrage the Sabbath day in a way called upon to do so by this falsely stated call of the Rev. W. M. Taylor, not only on the ground that his position is a false one, but also upon the ground that the position he takes will do more harm to the moving picture interests than all the picture opponents could do in a thousand years. May we not therefore call upon exhibitors everywhere to stand by the present position of the picture interests upon the Sunday question and ignore the advice given to spread the mischievous proposals of this sort of "I. W. W." member of the ministerial profession?

Reports Here and There

By Sam Spedon.

THE call of the conventions is abroad in the land. We will soon be giving ear to them and telling you about them. State conventions first; Minneapolis, Philadelphia, Chicago, A. E. A. convention and then the Boston exposition, where they expect to make the big noise and make things boom. Keep your ears to the ground, because you are going to hear something.

Report from "Over There."

In a letter dated April 14 received from George Balsdon, who is now in France working in conjunction with the Y. M. C. A., he says: "The Y. M. C. A. is really father, mother and everything else to our boys and the movies are the one necessary thing to keep them in touch with things in America and home. I think outside of letters from home there is nothing the boys desire and appreciate more than the movies. There is lots of truth in General Sherman's quotation. Have been up to the trenches and had plenty of thrills. In Paris there is no chance to get lonesome, with the air raids and the bombardments by the new long distance guns. They were at it again today. Saw a regular Fourth of July display of sky fireworks by the bursting of shells fired by the anti-air guns on the invaders.

Keeping Up the Work.

C. C. Pettijohn has returned from Detroit, Michigan, and Indianapolis, Ind., with a stronger determination to continue and still further promote the Affiliated Distributors Corporation. Already units have been established in eastern and western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, the Rocky Mountain states, New York and Greater New York. A representative will start next week to organize the Southern States, Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas. The Affiliated Distributors Corporation has established offices at 524 and 525 Long Acre Building, New York City.

Conventions.

Our latest report concerning the business convention of the A. E. A. is that it will be held in Chicago late in June or early in July. We are also told that no decision was made at the Detroit meeting to consolidate or harmonize with the National Exhibitors League at the Boston convention in July. Hope of doing so is not abandoned, but the way is not clear yet. Much will depend upon the complete reorganization and adjustment of the League control. The two presidential candidates mentioned to succeed the present League incumbent are Ernest H. Horstmann of Boston and F. D. Eager of Lincoln, Neb.

PATHE EMPLOYES BUY BONDS.

J. W. Kyle, film editor of Pathe, and secretary of the Pathe Club, who was assigned by General Manager Paul Brunet to canvass the home office in the interest of the Third Liberty Loan, succeeded in raising $6,500 in one afternoon. Practically every employe in the office who subscribed already had purchased bonds elsewhere.

Board of Review Holds Annual Luncheon

Interesting Spring Gathering Brings Together Socially All Sides of the Film Business.

By Hanford C. Judson.

ONE of the interesting events of the film year is the April luncheon given by the National Board of Review, when the reviewing committees have as their guests manufacturers, writers and newspaper men interested in the making of screen puroductions. Luncheons of this kind are one of the peculiar marks of modern metropolitan life, and the object of this in particular is to give a chance for sociable discussion of the problems that the board is meeting in its work. The topics taken up at these annual gatherings, formally or informally, are far from being narrow. In fact, the thing that is unconsciously evidenced again and again is the desire on the part of the National Board to be of real service to the world in the matter of motion pictures. As is widely known the work of the reviewing committees of the board is wholly voluntary, and no one present at the Hotel McAlpin at the board's recent spring luncheon on May 3 could escape being impressed with the reason behind their interest in this work and the spirit of it.

About a hundred and fifty members of the board and its guests sat down to midday luncheon in the Green Room. One of the guests in whom at this time a great deal of interest centered was Marguerite Clark, who has sold for the Government over $18,000,000 worth of Liberty Loan Bonds. She had to leave early as her time is valuable just now. Before departing she made a graceful little speech thanking the board and its guests and acknowledging the tribute they gave her. After the ices, Lester M. Scott, who presided, introduced Hetty Gray Baker, scenario editor of the Fox Film Corporation, who in a few witty remarks recalled the courteous relations between the board and those who had to stand for the producing companies in the discussion relating to scenes that were thought not quite desirable by the viewers.

This was followed by the discussion of the place in the business of the dramatist, the man who has won recognition by work for the stage. George Middleton, who wrote "Polly with a Past," one of the big stage successes of the present season, opened by calling attention to the difficulties that a man used to writing for the legitimate stage meets when dealing with screen producers. In the first place he thought the pay for a good script was not sufficient, it being from $1,000 to $3,000. He suggested payment on the royalty basis and jokingly referred to the difficulty of collections on that basis. On the artistic side his own experience showed that too often the director of the picture failed to follow his continuity and often spoiled his primary situation by changing wholly the background of the leading character. He said that the scenario writer ought to be taken into the confidence of the director and permitted to follow his work through to final product as this would give him more artistic incentive.

Frederick Warren, of the Goldwyn Company, replied to him and declared that the dramatist as a rule failed to give a dollar's worth for a dollar and that he was slipshod and usually thought that anything would do for the movies. The fresh, naive, common sense of the middle-class American was, he said, surer in its criticism of the picture on the screen than the producers, or a board of authors, or the present gathering could possibly be. That common sense was quicker to detect faults and readier to recognize good work than the trained but blunted perceptions of any body in the business. He called attention to many examples of splendid screen work of the past. In reply to this Mr. Middleton admitted the justice of Mr. Warren's statements, but reiterated his complaint that there was need of more co-operation between the writer and the directer and claimed that the writer was really kept away from a knowledge of the inside mysteries of the business.

One of the best things at the luncheon was a speech by Dan Beard on moving pictures for boys. He said that we of the older generation had made a mess of human life and that our only hope was in the youngster who could be taught better ways. With many witty asides he called attention to the value of the motion picture in this education and made a strong plea for red blood and adventure in pictures. For boys he wanted out-of-door stories and clean out-of-door heroes like Daniel Boone and others of his kind.

EXCHANGE MANAGERS' ASSOCIATIONS AFFILIATE.

The Exchange Managers' Association of Toronto has decided to affiliate with the Exchange Managers' Association of Montreal in order to co-operate in various movements. A joint meeting of the two organizations has been proposed.

Freuler Resigns as Mutual's President

James M. Sheldon, of New York, Elected Successor—S. S. Hutchinson Also Retires

JOHN R. Freuler resigned as president of the Mutual Film Corporation of Delaware and James M. Sheldon, of New York, was elected his successor at a meeting of the board of directors held at the concern's offices at 220 South State street, Chicago, on May 1.

Warren Gorrell and Walter McLellan, of the Federal Reserve Bank, Chicago, were elected to the board of directors. Samuel S. Hutchison, of Chicago, resigned from the board.

James M. Sheldon.

The officers of the corporation now include G. W. Hall and John F. Cuneo, vice-presidents; Paul H. Davis, treasurer; I. C. treasurer; Edward Stoddard, secretary, and H. G. Davis, assistant secretary.

The Mutual Film Corporation is among the oldest and largest of the motion picture concerns. It includes a system of thirty-six film exchanges covering the United States and Canada. The Mutual is now distributing pictures starring Edna Goodrich, the Charles Frohman stars, William Russell, Mary Miles Minter and Marguerite Fisher. The roster of stars which have been in its service through the period of its history includes a majority of the celebrities of the screen. Its gross output has ranged as high as one million feet of motion pictures a week.

James M. Sheldon, the new president of the Mutual, is known in the motion picture business through his connection with the Syndicate Film Corporation, as president of the Randolph Film Corporation and more recently as head of the Empire All Star Corporation. Prior to his motion picture connections Mr. Sheldon was a lawyer. "Business as usual" was Mr. Sheldon's terse statement on taking his new office.

Telegrams were at once sent to all department heads of the several branch exchanges assuring them that the Mutual would continue in business on a stronger and broader basis.

Freuler Makes Statement.

Immediately after the meeting of the Mutual directors, Mr. Freuler boarded a train for New York, where he was seen at the New York offices of the Mutual by a Moving Picture World representative on Friday, May 3. Regarding his resignation Mr. Freuler said that he had been contemplating the step for some time, but that he had delayed action in deference to the wishes of some of his associates.

"My reason for resigning is that I have been opposed in the execution of the course which I have deemed to the best interests of the stockholders and creditors of the Mutual Film Corporation, including all of its subsidiaries," said the former president. "I regret that I have not been given either the moral or financial support from those interested which was necessary to the conservation of the interests mentioned.

"The destiny of the concern is now in the hands of a committee of three men, I. C. Elston, Jr., Warren Gorrell and George W. Hall, directors and officers, and their associates.

"This committee represents the principal creditors of the Mutual Film Corporation. This group of men has purchased the assets of the Mutual Film Corporation of Delaware, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, New York, California and of Canada, which previously were held by the Mutual Film Corporation of Virginia, the parent concern. The stock of these concerns is now held by the committee against claims from the principal creditors totalling about $700,000. The committee has given the stockholders one year in which to satisfy the claims and redeem the stock.

John R. Freuler.

"I have not been satisfied for a long time with the present methods of the picture business and have desired to make certain marked changes in order to bring the Mutual as a producer closer to the exhibitor. In this desire I did not have the backing of the majority of my associates, so I determined to cut loose from the Mutual that I might have an opportunity to do the things I wanted to do. Along these lines I will have some important announcements to make before fall, probably, and you may say that in whatever future motion picture activities I engage I shall make my headquarters in New York.

"Of course, since I moved the Mutual to Chicago, this may amuse you, but I want to say that I still believe Chicago to be the best distributing center. Our experience proves that, yet for a producer there are but two centers—New York and Southern California, and one must be in New York to feel the pulse of the business quickly. Therefore I am coming to New York and you will hear from me some time late in August on my new plans from my New York office.

"In the meantime I have other interests that require my attention. I have two picture theaters in Milwaukee and two in Kansas City that are doing a fine business; I am an equal owner in the American Film Company with S. S. Hutchinson and then there is the American Projectoscope which is coming along beautifully and promises to be one of our best moneymakers. With all these things you can see that I shall have something to do even though I were to engage in nothing further. But, as I mentioned before, I have some ideas about the picture business that I want to work out, so I shall not be out of the game for long."

Mr. Freuler returned to Chicago the same day. He is looking particularly fit and said that he felt greatly relieved in mind after shaking off his duties as president of the Mutual.

SUNDAY LID ON IN SHERBROOKE.

The Sunday lid is on in Sherbrooke, Quebec. On April 26 the local police magistrate gave judgment against exhibitors who had been operating their houses on Sundays and sentenced them to pay a fine of $20 each. Although a fight was promised, the theater managers pleaded guilty to the charge of contravening an old Federal blue law and they were promptly fined. The actions were pressed by the Lord's Day Alliance, who promise to close up Montreal theaters on Sundays in their next move.

GERALD SPIERO RESPONDS TO THE CALL.

Gerald B. Spiero, who has given excellent service on the Fox Publicity staff for the past two years, has been called to the colors, and has reported at Fort Slocum. Mr. Spiero will probably be detailed to the Quartermaster's Department, since slightly defective eyesight barred him from the aviation corps, for which he volunteered.

Public Responds to Players' Appeals

Nearly $40,000,000 Raised by Stars of Famous Players-Lasky—Uncle Sam Knew His Business When He Called on Industry

PARAMOUNT and Artcraft stars and producing distributing and executive units are responsible for over $40,000,000 of subscriptions in the Third Liberty Loan, it has just been announced. The figures on record are $39,896,000, but this is exclusive of the amounts subscribed by members of branch offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and various stars and executives whose reports were not in at the time the total was estimated.

Members of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its affiliated organizations in the East and West have devoted much of their time, effort and money toward the new loan, particularly Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Marguerite Clark and William S. Hart, who sacrificed entirely their work before the camera to make public appearances in national tours.

Each unit involved in the treatment of Paramount and Artcraft pictures from the scenario departments to the film bookers in the exchanges, has made splendid individual showings in piling up subscriptions. The amounts contributed by the personnel of various studios are as follows: Lasky, $200,000; Ince, $75,000; Arbuckle, $60,000; Sennett, $41,000; Morosco, $12,000. Adolph Zukor Motion Picture Day of the Stage Women's War Relief in New York City added $300,000 to the loan, of which $125,000 was taken by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and persons in the New York offices.

The individual tours of the four stars terminated with $15,000,000 credited to Marguerite Clark, $14,000,000 to Mary Pickford, $8,100,000 to Douglas Fairbanks and $2,108,000 to William S. Hart. In addition to the amounts mentioned above many of the Famous Players-Lasky stars and branch offices have taken large subscriptions which have not been recorded and which it is estimated would easily bring the grand total well over the $40,000,000 mark.

Newark Theaters Scene of Loan Rivalry.

The moving picture theaters of Newark, N. J., were used by members of the police and fire departments of that city in the competition to secure the most subscriptions to the Third Liberty Loan. On different nights of the week of April 29 the members of the two municipal departments visited the various theaters of the city and solicited subscriptions. Reports were that the theatergoers were most liberal in their support. The police band played Monday evening at the Goodwin theater, 863 Broad street, where Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" was on exhibition. Manager Kridel used the entire receipts of the week's showing for the purpose of buying Liberty Bonds. His subscription was handled through the police committee. Friendly rivalry exists between the two departments to see which will secure the larger number of subscriptions.

At Westfield $70,800 worth of bonds were sold at the Playhouse by Manager Flagg and the local Four Minute Men. This result came from one week's drive. The picture for this week was "My Four Years in Germany."

Good Work Done in Maryland.

The motion picture theaters of Baltimore and Maryland and towns across the border in West Virginia are doing all that is in their power to aid the campaign to sell Liberty Loan Bonds and War Savings Stamps.

On Sunday night, April 28, a program was arranged by Charles S. Anderson at the Grand theater in Highlandtown, near Baltimore, resulting in subscriptions of $30,000. Other theaters at which Four Minute Men spoke were the Goodtime theater, W. E. Stumpf, manager; the Waverly, H. Cluster, manager; the Red Wing, George Geartner, manager; the Bunny, G. H. Rothrock, manager; the Flaming Arrow, E. Rossiter, manager, and at the Teddy Bear, W. Leight, manager.

A W. S. S. show was put on by Manager L. A. DeHoff at the Garden Theater—$5,000 worth of stamps were sold.

On Wednesday, April 24, the final big rally of the Liberty Loan drivers in Salisbury, Md., was held at the Arcade theater, W. G. Pond, manager.

Manager Brown, of the Grand Opera House, in Cambridge, Md., on Wednesday, April 24, held a big Liberty Loan meeting and $49,250 is understood to have been subscribed.

Rita Jolivet Sells Many Bonds at Philadelphia.

Rita Jolivet appeared at the Stanley theater Monday, April 29, at the first presentation of her "Lest We Forget," and told the story of the sinking of the Lusitania in such a graphic manner that she obtained $33,000 worth of subscriptions for Liberty Bonds. Jules E. Mastbaum subscribed $5,000, while Messrs. Sablosky and McGuirk took $1,000 each and Judge Davis $2,000. The next day Miss Jolivet got $40,000 in sales at the Stanley.

Buyers of Bonds Were Admitted to Theater.

An extraordinary measure adopted by Frank W. Buhler to boost the Liberty Loan met with wonderful success at the Victoria theater. From 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 11 o'clock at night, with the aid of the Woman's Liberty Loan Motion Picture committee, subscriptions to the amount of $18,000 were secured. There was no regular admission charged, but any one who bought a Bond for $50 or more secured admission for two at the theater.

Buffalo Theatrical Men Over the Top.

Buffalo theatrical men have "gone over the top" in the Third Liberty Loan campaign. Their quota was first set at $100,000, but later was increased to $500,000. This expansion is an indication of the high-powered plans which the film men and others in the local amusement field stood behind the Government in the drive. John R. Oishei was chairman of the theatrical section of the campaign. Daniel J. Savage, manager of the First National Film, Buffalo, had charge of the publicity and the collection of all money from the moving picture houses. Other members of Mr. Oishei's committee were Harold B. Franklin, Earl Crabb, Ira B. Mosher, Henry Carr, George Hall and Joseph Schuchert. They were "day and night" workers for the loan. They plunged into the campaign with patriotic vim and had the hearty co-operation of everybody, big and little, in the business.

Mr. Oishei and his committee met daily at Liberty Loan headquarters, where they reported their subscriptions and listened to eloquent addresses by speakers of national fame. "'Gerard's Four Years in Germany,' shown at the Majestic theater, was a big boost in the campaign," said Mr. Savage.

Mollie King Sells $25,000 Worth in Cleveland.

Mollie King, popular star, came to Cleveland Sunday, April 28, to help a Liberty Loan campaign. She appeared at the Hippodrome and sold about $25,000 worth of bonds. Mollie also toured the city making sales and had considerable success.

Chaplin Nets $375,000 in Nashville.

When Charlie Chaplin came to Nashville in the interest of Liberty Bonds he made good. He was treated royally from the time he stepped from the train until he made his speech at the spacious Ryman Auditorium, which was packed to its 5,000 capacity, and hundreds turned away.

The total amount of bonds sold by Charlie was $375,000—quite a neat sum for an hour's work. Charlie made a rousing talk, concise and to the point. He pulled his famous walk and hat tipping stunts, much to the delight of the crowds. In opening his address Charlie said, "Come on, boys, get busy. Let's take the roof off. We don't own it!" And they almost did.

Buy Bonds with Charity's Mites.

In addition to helping in every possible way toward the promotion of the Third Liberty Loan the theaters of Nashville have even taken the initiative. The latest along this line is a move instituted by Manager Harry Sudekum, of the Princess theater. A large basket or contribution box is in the lobby of the house, into which are placed small sums for the purchase of bonds. Everybody who is not able to purchase a full bond may in this way contribute small bits to charity, as each time as much as $50 is collected the funds are turned over to the Mayor for distribution to local charitable institutions.

Powers Addresses Directors' Association.

The Motion Picture Directors' Association held a special meeting Tuesday evening, April 30, to further the Liberty Loan. The meeting was addressed by P. A. Powers, who stated that 13,000,000 people witness motion pictures daily; that the directors are doing a most patriotic work by instilling into their productions elements to strengthen the morale of the people. He vigorously urged the members present to continue the work, citing many helpful ways this would be of benefit to the country during the war. The subscriptions for the Liberty Loan among the thirty-odd directors present amounted to $161,150. This did not include the directors of the New York studio who were out of town nor those of the Los Angeles Lodge, M. P. D. A., which report has not as yet been received. A conservative estimate of the subscription of the directors of moving pictures to the Third Liberty Loan was set at half a million dollars. Previous to the meeting Directors James Kirkwood, George Archambauld, John A. Robinson, George H. Seitz and Oscar Lund were initiated.

F. I. L. M. Club Holds Monthly Meeting

Large Attendance of Diners Listen to Four-Minute Man and Enjoy Good Entertainment.

THE F. I. L. M. Club held its monthly beefsteak dinner at Healy's, New York, on Wednesday, May 1. The food was excellent and the entertainment, furnished by the Healy management, would have been fine if it had not been for many interruptions which brought this part of the program to an abrupt ending. All speeches were eliminated, several were anxious to talk about "waste of film," but it was thought that it would be a waste of time to attempt it. During the evening a four-minute man made an appeal for the purchase of Liberty Bonds, and the subscriptions totaled quite a large sum. Charles Streimer personally collected $1,100.

Those present were: John H. Kennedy, Symphony theatre, 95th street and Broadway; S. P. Reiben, Reiben Film Corp.; H. Y. Cainsboro, Four Square Film; Sam Sonin Lincoln, Bedford Rest theatre; L. P. AMERICAN GIVES ANOTHER MAN TO UNCLE SAM.

Robert Klein, a valued character actor of the American Film Company studios at Santa Barbara, has volunteered once more and has been assigned to the Hospital Corps of Camp Kearney. Mr. Klein has seen service at the front, having been invalided home a year and a half ago. He was wounded fighting for France and has been recuperating ever since. Once more fit, he is going back for another wallop at the Huns.

JUSTIN FAIR WITH PATHE.

Announcement is made that Justin Fair, recently dramatic and photoplay editor of the Newark Star-Eagle, has become a member of the publicity department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the New York headquarters. Several years ago Mr. Fair was editor of the famous "Photoplay Pink" edition of the Los Angeles Record.

Universal Coaching Army Photographers

JACK COHN, manager of the Universal Animated Weekly department, and his entire force of motion picture photographers have practically been commandeered by the United States Government for the purpose of teaching men registered in the Government cinema department the method by which motion pictures should be taken to obtain the best results.

The first squad of Government photographic recruits reported to Mr. Cohn on April 29, and they were assigned to accompany the regular staff photographers of the Animated weekly department in covering the events that later are scheduled to appear on the screen.

The assignment of the Government men followed a conversation between Mr. Cohn and Captain J. D. Sears of the Signal Corps. Captain Sears called the attention of Mr. Cohn to the fact that it was the duty of the company to do everything possible for the education of the men. Incidentally the company already had placed its entire activities at the command of the Government.

The reporting hour was at nine o'clock in the morning and the soldiers were given orders that their assignment was to remain with the Universal photographers just as long as those photographers were working. They were placed under the direction of the photographers, who will be the final judges as to their ability to handle a motion picture camera without assistance.

Just as soon as this squad has completed its education other men will be assigned.

Norma Talmadge to Remain With Select

Schenck Says Rumors That Player Is to Change Releasing Arrangements Have Caused Embarrassment.

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK, who presents Norma Talmadge in all of her screen productions, has issued the following statement denying rumors which have gained currency affecting the distribution of pictures presenting Norma Talmadge as their star.

"I wish to deny emphatically rumors to the effect that Norma Talmadge's pictures are to be released by the First National or any other distributing organization other than Select Pictures Corporation, which is, has been, and will be sole distributor of Norma Talmadge's productions.

"Some of the rumors to which I refer have crept into print, and publications of this nature are not only embarrassing to the distributors of Select Pictures, but are also calculated to mislead exhibitors whose booking arrangements may be affected by the false information thus disseminated.

"The most cordial relationship exists between the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, which produces pictures in which Norma Talmadge is starred, and the Select Pictures Corporation, which markets these productions. Also, a cordial friendship is entertained for the Select officials by both Miss Talmadge and myself. Therefore, in the interest of truth and in justice to both parties concerned, I wish both the motion picture industry and Miss Talmadge's numberless friends among the picture fans to know that Norma Talmadge's pictures will be issued by Select, and only by that company. JOSEPH M. SCHENCK."

Triangle Exchange Managers Meet

In New York Is Held the First of a Series of Sessions—There Will Be Four Others.

THE Triangle Distributing Corporation has planned a series of conventions of its exchange managers. The first of these, a convention of the Eastern exchange managers, was held at the home office of the corporation, 1457 Broadway, New York, on Monday and Tuesday, April 22 and 23.

The convention was under the direction of R. W. Lynch, vice-president of the corporation, and was attended by J. W. Heisman, sales manager, and by Exchange Managers W. J. Pratt of Boston, B. E. Wilkes of New Haven, C. B. Price of New York, T. C. Montgomery of Buffalo, J. R. Levy of Pittsburgh, W. J. Hagerty of Philadelphia and S. E. Kent of Washington, D. C. R. E. Bradford, exchange manager from Chicago, who happened to be in New York, also attended. Addresses were made by several of the officials of the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

Mr. Heisman will leave New York for the West, where he will hold similar conventions in Chicago, St. Louis, Denver and San Francisco.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Ochs Issues Call for National Convention

National League's President Lays Emphasis on Necessity of Closing Breach in Exhibitor Ranks.

AN official call by Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, issued May 3, formally set the time and place of the annual convention of that body and the coincidental exposition of the motion picture industry on July 13-20 at the Mechanics Building, Boston. The President of the United States has been asked to open the exposition, which will be held jointly by the Exhibitors' League and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Invitations were extended to all organizations connected with and affiliated with the industry to hold their annual meetings and conventions simultaneously with the exposition. Already the conventions of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers have been scheduled for that time.

President Ochs' call put great emphasis on the importance of the work to be accomplished by the exhibitors during the coming year, and because of this urged all state and local organizations to pay their per capita tax in order that a full quota of delegates and alternates might be sent to the convention. He was particularly anxious that the split that occurred in the ranks of the exhibitors at the last convention and which was only partially healed at the convention in Washington last winter should be entirely closed so that the exhibitors might move as one in furthering any plans made by the League to render aid and support to the Government in response to the appeal made by President Wilson a year ago.

That the aid already given has been great the President has admitted in publicly commending the industry for services it has rendered, but Mr. Ochs points out that the opportunity for still greater service to come renders it imperative that the exhibitors tender their unanimous whole-hearted support to the program adopted, and that it is therefore of the utmost importance that the coming convention and exposition be made the biggest and largest in the history of the business.

Woman's Auxiliary to Boost Exposition

Mrs. F. J. Howard Elected Chairman of Committee to Aid Samuel Grant in Exploiting Big Show.

A MEETING of the wives and relatives of the exhibitors and exchangemen in Greater Boston was held at the Famous Players-Lasky run-off room Friday afternoon, April 26. The meeting was arranged by Samuel Grant, in order to appoint a committee to help boost the coming exposition that is to be held in Mechanic's Hall July 13-20.

Mr. Grant proposed that the women elect a permanent chairman, one who could give a great deal of her time to boosting the exposition and one who was well known in theatrical circles. "I have requested the ladies to gather here so that they might organize and pledge their cooperation in entertaining the wives, sweethearts and relatives of the exhibitors from all over the country that are sure to visit Boston this year," said Mr. Grant. "I must have the support of every branch of the industry, and the ladies in making this exposition a success."

Michigan Exhibitors Join Affiliated

Meeting Held in Detroit April 25 Approves Co-operative Booking Plan and Forms Unit.

MICHIGAN has finally started off on a plan for co-operative booking. It all happened quickly Thursday afternoon, April 25, at a meeting held at the Hotel Tuller, Detroit. Among the prominent out-of-town people present were C. C. Pettijohn, of the A. E. A.; Louis Frank and Joe Hopp, Chicago exhibitors; Sam Bullock, of Cleveland; Harry Rapf, the producer; J. H. Simpson, of Cleveland; J. Cooper, Chicago, and O. L. Winslow, of Indianapolis.

M. W. McGee, president of the Michigan association, acted as chairman of the meeting and upon motion the regular routine of things was eliminated in order to discuss the co-operative booking plan. Mr. Pettijohn was called upon to thoroughly outline his proposition, known as the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, which he did very comprehensively. After he had explained the plan in detail he called upon Harry Rapf, the producer, who spoke in favor of the Affiliated plan and made a plea for a co-operative booking syndicate as a protection to the independent producer. "Unless some co-operative plan along this line is adopted, you are going to put the independent producer out of business."

Joe Hopp, of Chicago, who said that his city was ready to organize a Unit, spoke heartily in favor of the Affiliated plan, "because it is by far the best of the co-operative plans yet offered and I have gone into all of them."

Applications were then taken for stock in the Michigan Unit, which will capitalize at eight or ten thousand dollars, $1,000 of which will be working capital and the balance to be kept for the maintainance of credit standing. Among those who were the first to subscribe stock were Charles Seaman, of the Gilligham & Smith Enterprises, Grand Rapids; John Brenan, Cozy theatre, Detroit; John F. Niebes, Dawn theatre, Detroit; King Perry and Peter Jeup, Luna theatre, Detroit; M. W. McGee, Majestic theatre, Detroit; Mr. Halsted, Savoy theatre; Detroit; George Wilbur, Wyandotte; W. F. Phillips, Majestic-Colonial theatre, Jackson; J. F. Waerth, Orpheum theatre, Ann Arbor; S. A. Moran, Arcade theatre, Ann Arbor; Mr. Dudley, Dudley theatre, Detroit; The Mazwell, Woodward Theatre Company, Detroit; C. F. Edwards, Iris theatre, Detroit; Fred R. Rumler, Warren theatre, Detroit; Stratford and DeLuxe theatres, Detroit; H. R. Lapham, Detroit; J. E. Stocker, Myrtle theatre, Detroit; Arthur D. Baehr, Crystal theatre, Detroit; Mrs. Florence Signor, Martha Washington, Ypsilanti; John Cutler, Lakewood theatre, Detroit; R. P. Leahy, Wenonah theatre, Bay City; Leo Kane, Sturgis, and P. A. Bush, Detroit.

A committee of seven was appointed, as follows, which will act as the board of directors of the Michigan Unit, and in December it will elect officers: M. W. McGee, Detroit; Charles Seaman, Grand Rapids; George Wilbur, Wyandotte; King Perry, Detroit; J. C. Ritter, Detroit; Paul J. Schlossman, Muskegon, and W. F. Phillips, of Jackson. This committee met again on April 30 to further push matters.

Thursday evening a stag smoker was held under the auspices of Detroit Exhibitors, headed by King Perry. About 250 exhibitors, exchange managers and friends were on hand. The function started at midnight and lasted almost until the breakfast hour. Refreshments, beverages and vaudeville comprised the evening's program.

EMMY WEHLEN RESUMES WORK.

Emmy Wehlen, who has returned from her tour in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan with a sales total of $5,000,000 in bonds to her credit, has begun the first scenes of a Metro All-Star Series picture, as yet unnamed, which was written by Katharine Kavanaugh of the Metro scenario staff. June Mathis prepared the continuity and the direction is in charge of Edwin Carewe. Carewe directed Miss Wehlen in "The Trail of the Shadow." He recently came from California, where he guided Bert Lytell in his initial Metro picture, "The Trail to Yesterday." In her new vehicle, Miss Wehlen will play the role of a society girl, and during the course of the action the star will wear many elaborate gowns, which are said to surpass anything she has ever worn before the camera.

TWO METRO MEN ENLIST WITH COLORS.

Two more stars have been added to Metro's service flag, both the result of voluntary enlistments. They represent Hazen Ross and "Benny" Alexander. "Benny," an employe of the shipping department, has enlisted in the Engineer Corps, and young Ross, an employe in the executive offices, has enlisted in the Field Artillery. Ross enlisted on his eighteenth birthday. He was eleven pounds underweight, but in view of his excellent physical condition this objection was waived. Metro now has men in every branch of the service both at home and abroad.

Elder, one of General's veteran employes, who is to be transferred to another important point, announcement of which is expected in a few days.

Funkhouser Cuts Gerard Film

Former Ambassador Takes Up with Federal Authorities Whole Question of Chicago Censor's Activities.

THE action of Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, police censor of Chicago, in cutting scenes and sub-titles from Ambassador James W. Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" before he would sanction its opening at the Colonial theater April 29, has brought this czar of the shears into the limelight again.

Ambassador Gerard will take up the case personally with federal authorities in Washington to see if means cannot be taken to curb Funkhouser's evident determination to prevent films showing German acts of brutality from being shown in Chicago. It is believed that through his former official relationships and his acquaintance with Attorney General Gregory and George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, Mr. Gerard will be able to bring about an investigation of the Major's activities.

The following are the cuts which Jones, Linick & Schaefer, the First National franchise holders for Illinois were ordered to make before he would issue a license for its presentation at the Colonial:

Subtitle, "Where are they quartered tonight?" (Inquiry with reference to women.)

Two scenes of German soldiers breaking in girl's bedroom.

Scene of girl, killed by Germans, lying dead upon bed.

Scene of old lady lying dead—killed by Germans.

Subtitle, "They quartered us in with the soldiers for the night."

Scene showing drawing forth of sword from body of German, killed by an American soldier, because of insults to women.

As soon as Funkhouser's decision regarding the censorship of "My Four Years in Germany" became known, Clyde A. Mann, publicity representative for the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission of Chicago, announced that the mission would file formal protest with the Government and the municipal and state executives against the "Major's" action.

Coupled with the protests that have already been made from First National headquarters to Attorney General Gregory and George Creel, the following telegram has been sent Frank O. Lowden, Governor of Illinois, by J. D. Williams, manager of First National:

"Ambassador James W. Gerard's motion picture version, 'My Four Years in Germany,' which thousands of the men of your state now enlisted in the National Army witnessed during its presentation at the Liberty theater, Camp Grant, Rockford, and commended in the highest terms for its power in stimulating patriotism and crystallizing opposition to Germany's war aims, has been put under ban by Major Funkhouser, official censor for Chicago. Several scenes, picturing brutality of German soldiers, have been cut for evident purpose of sparing feelings of pro-Germans. Gerard picture, made under his personal supervision and distributed by this organization largely to help arouse America to German menace, has been shown army cantonments on official request, and also used by Treasury Department to instruct Liberty Loan campaign speakers. If you or any of your officials have witnessed this production and you deem it advisable, we would greatly appreciate any assistance you could render in reversing this anti-American prejudice in the second largest city of our country."

On May 3 the following wire was received by Mr. Williams from Washington in reply to his of the day previous:

"Have taken matter up with Attorney General and Federal Government is without power. Suggest an instant appeal to Governor Lowden demanding investigation and removal.

"GEORGE CREEL, Chairman."

Manager J. D. Williams has telegraphed to Aaron Jones to the effect that the Warners demanded the picture be run in its entirety, with all the eliminations put back or that it be not run at all. He added that H. W. Warner or former Ambassador Gerard would make a special trip to Chicago to fight the case to a finish if necessary and forwarded to him two telegrams, one from Mayor Charles W. Jewett, of Indianapolis, and one from Governor Frederick D. Gardner, of Missouri, indorsing the picture.

Governor Gardner said: "I have not seen the picture. If Mr. Gerard says it correctly portrays conditions it should be shown. We do not spare Pro-Germans in this state."

Mayor Jewett said: "Ambassador James W. Gerard's picture, 'My Four Years in Germany,' was displayed in this city. I consider this production one of the most stimulating presentations of Germany's war aims yet displayed here. It vividly visualizes the heartless enemy that opposes our soldiers today. There is no reason why this picture should be cut to spare the feelings of persons who enjoy the blessings of America and who are at heart opposed to this country in this war. American people need to be awakened to the crisis confronting us. Mr. Gerard should know what we as Americans should know about Germany's avowed war policy. I think the more people who see this picture the more awake Americans will be to the obligations they owe the Government at this time.

Chaplin Finishes Liberty Bond Tour

Addresses Meetings in New York—British Officer Makes Plea for Comedian's Retention on the Screen.

RETURNING to New York from his tour of the South on behalf of the Third Liberty Loan, Charlie Chaplin completed his speaking engagement under the auspices of the Treasury Department by appearing at several big rallies in the city during the week of April 29.

On Tuesday, April 30, as the chief noonday speaker for the Mayor's Committee of Women on National Defense, Charlie succeeded in breaking the record as a bond salesman at the Liberty Bell platform in City Hall Park by persuading his audience to buy $138,900 worth of bonds.

Chaplin also made a speech in the men's restaurant of the Hotel Astor during the lunch hour on Wednesday. He was introduced by Captain Bealley, a British line officer now in this country recuperating from the effects of wounds received on the Flanders front.

Captain Bealley told of the many times he and his fellow-fighters had laughed away their troubles in the little temporary theaters behind the trenches watching "Charlie's" antics on the screen.

"He made us laugh when it often seemed that nothing else could," Captain Bealley declared. "And I for one hope that the authorities will realize that he is of far greater value as a gloom-chaser than as a fighter. In my opinion and the opinion of thousands of others at the front it would be little short of a calamity to cut short the output of Mr. Chaplin's inimitable comedies."

Louis A. Cella Dies in St. Louis

Owner of Many Theatrical Houses Succumbs to Typhoid Fever—Reputed to Be Worth $10,000,000.

MONDAY, April 29, Louis A. Cella, one of the heaviest taxpayers of St. Louis and its largest theatrical owner, died at St. Luke's Hospital in that city. Mr. Cella was reputed to be worth well over $10,000,000. He was half owner in the Orpheum, St. Louis' big vaudeville house, valued at $800,000. In addition to this he owned the American, Grand Opera House, Columbia, Park, Strand, Kings, Shenandoah and several other smaller theaters. The houses named are all either moving picture or combination houses.

Mr. Cella started his remarkable career by the purchase of a small saloon at sixth and Franklin streets, downtown. He was of a reticent, retiring disposition, so much so that even his business associates were often kept in the dark as to his business moves until the eve of their accomplishment. There are no direct heirs to his vast estate, which will be divided between four brothers, one of whom, Angelo Cella, lives in New York City. The cause of death was typhoid fever.

SIMPLEX MANAGER ON WESTERN TRIP.

E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, Inc., 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York City, left New York the latter part of last week on a ten-day trip, to visit a few of the distributors handling the simplex projector. His first stop was at Chicago.

Mr. Porter will consult with the various companies acting as exclusive distributors for the projectors made by the Precision Machine Company, with a view of taking up details in connection with the company's new sales promotion plans. Mr. Porter expects to obtain important data, indicating the prospects of the accessory business in the fall.

MARIE DRESSLER TO BEGIN WORK ON MAY 10.

Marie Dressler is not permitting her Liberty Loan itinerary to interfere with her work of making comedies for release by World Pictures. Miss Dressler, who has been meeting with really phenomenal success in the sale of the Third Liberty Loan, will return to New York City on May 10 to begin the making of the comedies which World Pictures will release. After the conclusion of her long trip—which Miss Dressler volunteered to make and on which she paid all her own expenses—she will enjoy a short vacation, then start work before the camera.

Richardson Rambles Around Lake States

Visits Electric Concerns in Ohio and Runs Across Bad Projection and Lighting Effects in Michigan

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, the sixth city in the United States, is a manufacturing center of no mean pretension. As concerns appliances having to do with the moving picture industry there are several important institutions, among them the National Carbon Company, the National Lamp Works, the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, the Hertner Electric Company and the Cleveland Electric Products Company, all of which I visited while in Cleveland, with the exception of the last named, which is so filled up with orders for war material that it is not doing much in the way of putting out its current rectifying device, known as the "Rexolux."

The National Lamp Works and the writer have for some time past had more or less correspondence with regard to tungsten filament lamps versus the carbon arc. I arrived at Nela Park intent upon plucking several dark colored crows with my friends R. P. Burrows and J. I. Caldwell, and no time was lost in getting at it. The plucking began at once. It is, however, hard to quarrel with good fellows. So the crows were very soon turned out to grass, while the three of us, accompanied by S. E. Doane, chief engineer of the National Lamp Works, repaired to a restaurant to feed the inner man and discuss our points of difference.

In the first place, before I forget it, let me say that the National Lamp Works has perfected a new "tub" transformer for controlling the voltage, hence the amperage of current delivered to the Mazda lamp. It is of the floating coil type, is absolutely automatic in its action and gives a very close regulation indeed. Also, before I forget, let me remark that Mr. Burrows has offered a theory in explanation of that very puzzling proposition. Why does screen illumination increase with increasing amperage up to a certain point, beyond which there is but little gain. Friend Burrows' theory looks good to me. He has suggested a series of experiments, which are to be conducted under the direction of the Projection Department, and which will, I believe, determine exactly what takes place in the crater of the electric arc. Mr. Burrows suggested that he supply me with the proposed plan for the experiments, and that to divide them up among two or three companies. I will, however, invite the following companies to make the entire experiment, which will give us five separate and complete sets of data to check against each other, viz.: the National Lamp Works, the National Carbon Company, the Edison Lamp Works, the Speer Carbon Company and the Westinghouse Lamp Works.

Before leaving Nela Park I want to pay a deserved compliment to S. E. Doane, who bears the reputation of and impresses one as being a capable engineer. He is a thoroughly likeable man and a genuine good fellow. For a number of years past he has done some wonderful research work, and has, through his own effort and the effort of his corps of able assistants, produced some remarkable results.

There was no immediate results of my visit to Nela Park, but I nevertheless feel that the time was well spent. We are gradually coming to a better and more comprehensive understanding of many things connected with the illumination of the screen, as applies to both the Mazda lamp and the carbon arc, and this is only made possible by and through, just such conferences as this.

Sunday afternoon I was given the treat of an automobile trip around the city in company with Mr. Burrows, his wife and their daughter. Monday morning the National Carbon Company sent W. C. Kuntzman down to our hotel with a gasoline destroyer in which we were conveyed to that corporation's plant, stopping on the way at the factory of the Hertner Electric Company, our visit to which will be described in due time in the Projection Department, it having to do with matters relating to the Transverter made by that company. At the plant of the National Carbon Company I met J. F. Kerlin, who is general sales manager; R. A. Crider, of the Sales Department; E. H. King, in charge of eastern division sales, who is also in charge of the distribution of the White A. C. Special Carbons, and A. G. Summerville in charge of the western division sales, with all of whom we had pleasant and enlightening chats. We took luncheon in the National Carbon Company's restaurant with Messrs. Kuntzman and Crider, to the accompaniment of discussion covering many points, particularly with relation to the carbon arc and the tungsten filament lamp.

The National Carbon Company is leaving no stone unturned in trying to produce the best possible projection carbon, and, as I have remarked before, success is crowning its efforts. The company is at the present time marketing the following: For direct current, the regular National cored projection carbon for positive and the metallic coated silver tip for negative, for which combination it claims the following advantages, viz.: Ease of arc control, uniform screen illumination and maximum c. p. per watt of energy consumed. For A. C., it is putting out the new White A. C. special, reports upon which have been made in the Projection Department recently.

While at the plant it was my privilege to meet J. T. Ward, chemical engineer in charge of the laboratory and factory development of improvement in its projection carbon, with whom we held an interesting conversation. Mr. Ward showed us some highly interesting photographs, which will be reproduced in the Projection Department in the near future, and will, I think, prove intensely interesting to our readers. E. H. King, of the arc sales department, who is in charge of the White A. C. special carbon sales, and the writer, were introduced, and almost immediately engaged in wordy combat. Very soon, however, we decided to call it a draw, honors even. Friend King is all right. I now have a better understanding of his views and he has better understanding of what I am "driving at." It was also a pleasure as well as a privilege to meet W. R. Mott, chemical engineer, who has in the past developed the white flame studio arc carbon.

In conversation with Messrs. Ward and Mott I was able to verify a statement I have long been making to operators, namely: that the reason the core in the carbon steadies the arc is that it gives off a heavier volume of gas than does the surrounding wall of carbon, thus holding the arc to the center of the crater. I learned that this was only a part of the story, because, these men tell me (due to the fact that the core of the carbon contains mineral salts), the gas emanating therefrom is a better conductor of electricity than the gas from the surrounding wall of carbon, which does not contain these mineral salts. In fact, it is many times a better conductor.

While at the plant I witnessed a demonstration of the comparative brilliancy of the Mazda lamp and the crater produced by A. C. when the white A. C. special carbon is used. I don't want to say too much about this, just at this time, but viewed with the eye, the light from the crater is far, far more brilliant than that which is produced by the Mazda. The reason I don't want to make any final comment on this item, however, lies in the fact that the tone of light is largely affected by the character of the screen; also I have made no actual c. p. tests, and the Mazda people make the claim that while the light looks less brilliant there is actually but little difference when a candle power reading is taken, all of which may be true.

On the way back downtown, we stopped at the office of the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, but my visit to that institution properly belongs in, and will therefore appear in the Projection Department, since it has to do with the apparatus put out by the company, viz.: the Sheck universal adapter.

In the evening Messrs. Crider, Kuntzman and King, acting for the National Carbon Company, entertained the writer at dinner, afterward steering him into a Class A burlesque show.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

ARRIVING in Toledo under sodden skies, with a drizzle of extremely damp rain, I struggled manfully to make things cheerful. At the office of the Breco Electric Company I found Brothers J. H. Fooley and Joe Seligman, of Local Union 228, waiting, all ready to do the honors. I also found M. G. Delaney, president of the Breco Electric Company, who had arranged with the exhibitors and operators for a meeting that evening. Mr. Delaney is, by the way, a live wire and a hustler, who stands high with the theatre men of Toledo. His company is preparing to market a new current rectifying device, the invention of T. J. Murphy, of Rochester, N. Y., to be known as the Breco converter. During my stay in Toledo I examined into the merits of this machine as far as it was at this time possible. My findings will be set forth in the Projection Department soon.

During the day Brothers Fooley and Seligman escorted me around to several of the Toledo theatres. My impression is that conditions in Toledo are by no means the worst, nor are they such that they cannot well be improved. At the Adams theatre I found Tom McCormick, who some time ago was connected with the Toledo rewind. A letter from Brother McCormick's wife, who is ill, was handed to me. Mrs. McCormick is an operator of nine years' experience. She is an honorary member of Local Union 228. Mrs. McCormick bears the reputation of being a good operator. She holds down a job at the Pricilla theatre, and felt very badly because she would be unable to hear our address. Her regrets were set forth in a letter, which will be published in the Projection Department, as tending to show that a woman operator may be more progressive than some of her brothers. Learning the circumstances I called a halt of proceedings and had the boys bubble me out to St. Vincent's Hospital to call on Sister McCormick.

Loew's Valentine theatre E. H. Grestle manager, seats 1,500. It runs feature pictures at 15 and 25 cents admission, has an eighteen-piece orchestra and a beautiful lobby, foyer and auditorium. The orchestra lights were unprotected. I showed Manager Grestle how to protect the lights and he agreed that it should be done. The large operating room is flooded with light and has light walls. When I entered the theatre the bottom of the picture was discolored almost half way up its surface. No wonder. How in heaven's name can a man properly see a picture located more than one hundred feet away, while looking through a hole in the wall which is literally plastered with bright daylight. It simply can't be done. Two Power 6-B machines are used. The observation ports were about 18 by 24 inches. The rewinder was not properly geared down. The five shutters are so hooked up that the melting of a single fuse will not drop all the shutters, which is something more than very bad.

At the Temple theatre I met E. A. Zorn, manager, with whom I enjoyed a very pleasant chat. The Temple seats 1,200, charging 15 and 25 cents, with higher admission on special occasions. There is a fourteen-piece orchestra. Projection is in charge of P. F. Coburn and Roscoe Ream. The operating room is of goodly size, located very high and flooded with daylight. It also has light colored walls. There are two Simplex machines. The rewind is not geared down. During the eight or ten minutes I was in the operating room the operator did not, I think, look at the picture more than three or four times. Most of the time he stood talking with me, with his back to the screen. The same was true with the man a Loew's.

Now, gentlemen, I think it may be accepted as a fact that we cannot expect high-class results on the screen if the projection is to be left to the mercies of an inanimate motor. It just simply can't be done. The man at Loew's, and if I remember correctly, the man at the Temple, run to a fixed inelastic schedule, which absolutely precludes any possibility of high-class work. It is not pleasant to speak of these matters in criticissm, but if they are the facts, and they certainly are, that is not my fault. I can only say what I found, and at least in one instant I saw something very much worse than I have mentioned.

During the afternoon I called at the office of the Features Development Company, which is perfecting what is to be known as the Alladin picture machine. My visit was at the invitation of F. J. Bulask, who showed me the machine and explained its intricacies. It would be useless to go into details at this time, but I may say I saw a picture projection which was, considering the fact that the projector was but a crude, hand-made model, very good indeed. The Pictures Development Company expects to have the invention perfected and a marketable machine ready in the near future. It uses a film the shape of a phonograph record, though considerably larger in diameter. Each film carries the equivalent of 500 feet of standard film, from which its pictures may be reproduced. The projector is in a cabinet similar to a Victrola cabinet and it is proposed that the screen will be set in a frame with a bellows arrangement, so that it may be pulled out just as you would pull out the lens of a camera. This makes an entirely self-contained parlor moving picture projector. I won't say more about this machine now, but later it will be described in detail.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

THE heavens were still staging a weep act when we arrived in the city the breakfast foods made famous. The stop there was made primarily because we have a number of relatives in that town. Arrangements had been practically completed for an address to the Battle Creek men, but apparently because a couple of the operators got into a squabble, the plan came to naught. However, I toddled downtown and gumshoed around among a few of the theatres. At the Garden theatre, Ray McAllister operator, I found a pretty auditorium, in which the lighting scheme was not at all bad, with the exception of the exit signs, which have white letters with red background, instead of red letters with black background. G. E. Cross, of the firm of Lipp & Cross, owners of the Strand, Garden and Rex theatres, was undergoing a slight operation at the hospital, hence could not be seen. Mr. Lipp was, at the time, visiting Mr. Cross so that I missed them both.

I trust that by the time this is in type Neighbor Cross will have fully recovered and will be back on the job. The firm is erecting a theatre, which will be opened in the near future. The spread of projection in the Garden was O. K. and the screen illumination excellent. Two Power's machines are used. At the Majestic, E. M. Browne manager, I again found the objectionable white-letter red-background exit signs, both at the right and left of the screen and close to it. Also to the right of the screen was a clock, with considerable more light than any self-respecting clock requires in order to inform the audience of the time of day. R. J. Greenwood, operator, is giving a fairly good picture with A. C. through a Compensarc. The operating room is just fair. Power's machines are used. At the Rex, E. J. Wheelock manager, I don't seem to have interviewed friend notebook, except to set down the name of the manager and of Harry Denton, the operator.

The Strand is a good-sized house, having excellent auditorium lighting, with the exception of the exit signs, which are bad. The piano light is well confined. My compliments to the piano player at the Strand. B. A. Jorgenson, operator, is producing an excellent screen result. He has a very good operating room.

I did not enter the Dreamland. Just shook hands with the manager at the door and let it go at that. The loud-mouthed ballyhoo and front literally snowed under with gaudy posters did not look promising. Friend Manager said when I handed him my card, "I take a lot of papers, but I guess I don't get this one." No, from the looks of the front of his theatre, I think he doesn't. Several of the Battle Creek men expressed regret that the arrangements for an address had fallen through. Well, I was sorry myself, but with a string tied to it, because a night of undisturbed rest looked exceedingly good to yours truly.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

WE feel now that we are a duly initiated, fully qualified traveler. We have been in Kalamazoo. At Cleveland we received telegraphic demand from the managers and operators of Kalamazoo that their city be included in our itinerary. I was able to comply with their request because Chicago was the next stop and beyond that point the itinerary was not made up. Kalamazoo is a comparatively small city, having only seven theaters. There is plenty of room for improvement, but on the other hand, everything considered, conditions in the city are not at all bad, except that some of the operating rooms are entirely too small; also they are unnecessarily so because in almost every case it would be easy to rebuild them to at least reasonable size.

The Elite, S. Posthumer, operator, has two Motiograph machines located in a very small operating room. The auditorium is artistic and its lighting good, except the guard behind the orchestra pit might well be raised twelve inches higher. This would not interfere in the least with the view of the screen from the front row of seats, and would hide the objectionable glare of light reflected back from the sheet music.

The Fuller Theatre is a large house. The auditorium lighting is excellent, except for the orchestra lights, which could easily be hidden from the audience by means of properly constructed screens around the top of the music rack. The operating room is small, but is on the ground floor opposite the screen.

The Lyric is a store-room theatre. J. W. Ball is operator. The operating room is of goodly size, except that it is not deep enough, front to back. The Orpheum, P. C. Schram manager, has two Motiograph machines and a good operating room. The auditorium lighting is all right, but the picture is, I think, a little too large for the size of the house. E. F. Hess is operator. Brother Hess is secretary of the City Board of Operators Examiners.

The operating rooms I saw were well ventilated, and all of them had the machine lamp houses piped, either to the vent flue or the exhaust pipe of the ventilating system of the theatre, which is excellent indeed. The walls of most if not all the operating rooms I visited were either black or of a very dark color, and the ports were mostly of good size and covered with glass, though the glass was not set at an angle, as it should be in order to kill the reflection.

At 11 o'clock all the exhibitors and operators of the city of Kalamazoo foregathered around a table in a room over the Lyric theatre. On this table were edibles in abundance. After the feast the assemblage listened interestedly to what we had to say until long after the "ghostly hour." The general expression from both managers and operators was, after it was all over, that while we may have jolted them pretty hard, still the effect would be good—that our visit to the city would have distinct value to all concerned.

Managing Editor Takes Up Gage

In Discussion of Availability of Publicity Matter He Declares "Press Agent" Proves Contention of Newark Editor

The writer of the following comments is managing editor of a large Middle West daily. "I have been deeply interested in your discussion of press agents and press agent matter," he says in an explanatory note. "What the Newark editor said in your columns is all quite true. What 'Press Agent' says in your columns of the May 4 issue shows, in my humble judgment, WHY it is true. I don't believe press agentry, on the whole, ever had, at the hands of its friends and practitioners, a harder jolt than this man gives it in his futile effort to defend it. This paper treats the motion picture field with dignity. We have placed it in all respects on a par with our treatment of the legitimate amusements. We employ a critic, not a 'columnist.' We find that our treatment of the pictures is the treatment that meets with the approval of our readers. Our film editor tells me daily that film press agents send in nothing that is available. Repeated efforts to get what we want have failed. I find that a dozen papers—all in big cities of the Central West, and all leading newspapers—report the same experience. There is something wrong with film press agentry and with film press agents. Possibly the general indictment inclosed may help."

IT is to be expected, of course, that the press agent, when attacked, will respond in his own defense. And at nothing is he more proficient. Experience has taught him the strategy, and need has made him expert in its use. But his defense, like his work, abounds with excuse and subterfuge. He is no more inclined to face facts than he is to bestir himself to adapt his labor to his market.

A "Press Agent" in the Moving Picture World speaks contemptuously of "film columnists." In his sight, they are cheap workers, ignorant of the business, not interested in their jobs, demanding the impossible of the able, patient, worn, tired, harassed, hundred-dollar-a-week press agent and calmly expecting him to do their work for them. I have no idea who "Press Agent" is. But I do have the idea that he is fairly typical of his tribe. And his attitude is typical of the attitude of most film press agents. Naturally, holding this view of the editor whom he is paid his hundred dollars a week to serve, he will do work of a character, and only of a character, in keeping with his ideas.

In any event, he turns out cheap work. Nine-tenths of it belongs to the prehistoric days of press agentry. The other tenth is unavailable. He has, it is true, some four or five hundred papers to serve. He knows, it is also true, nothing at all about any of them. Nor does he take the slightest trouble to find out anything about them. He is costing his employer time and money. Both are wasted. Further, he is converting himself into actual liability. He has ceased to be an asset.

Most of the matter he sends out is piffle. He exercises—if he has any to exercise—no ingenuity. He works, not for actual results, but to accumulate, evidently, a heap of "copy" for the inspection of his boss who, seeing the quantity of the output, evidently considers that quantity is synonymous with quality and forthwith raises the industrious press agent from his hundred a week to a hundred and quarter.

But the time has come when employers are not so easily fooled. And the time long ago was at hand when editors ceased completely to be fooled. The sooner the press agents realize this, the better it will be for themselves, for their employers and for the editors, to say nothing of the product which they are hired to exploit. In the realm of the film there is a vast opportunity for a really conscientious, energetic publicity man to make a name and reputation for himself. Strange, is it not, that none, thus far, has happened to accomplish this apparently simple feat?

To confine my indictment of the press agent to a few generalities—if he wants specific counts, heaven knows, I can supply them!—I charge him:

1—With being wholly ignorant or, if not, of failing to use any knowledge he may possess, of the requirements and needs and demands of newspapers outside of New York City.

2—With devoting his energies toward securing a showing in the newspapers and trade magazines that fall directly under the eye of his employer and with neglecting the others.

3—With being a prolific author of piffle regardless of the fact that the newspapers—and the public—no longer want the piffle that he writes.

4—With being satisfied with having written something regardless of whether it ever sees its way into print.

5—With being careless, slipshod, indifferent and negligent to the extent of not making the slightest effort to keep himself in touch with the "contemptible little army" of "film columnists" who are striving to do their level best to make their column interesting to their readers.

6—With doing the product which they are employed to exploit as much harm, if not, indeed, more harm than good. I know of editors—and many of them—who have been prejudiced against the product of more than one film-producing concern through the character of press matter sent out by the firm's press agent.

7—With a lack of discrimination regarding the different styles of newspapers, which results in a prodigious waste of money. Why send, week after week, photographs to newspapers that do not print photographs in their daily or tri-weekly or semi-weekly cinema columns? Why send to papers possessed of dignity and of a dignified style stories that are manifestly intended for papers of the sensational type?

8—With being wholly ignorant of the great change that has come lately over the newspaper attitude toward the motion picture industry. With complete failure to realize that the newspaper regard of the motion picture is in a formulative stage and that good press agentry will help things along while nothing will so retard them as poor press agentry.

9—With failure to realize that the public is demanding more dignified, sensible, honest reading matter concerning the motion pictures, that it is not interested in whether the president of the producing company has gone to Palm Beach for a winter's sojourn, whether he believes the war will end in July or next December, whether he drives a Packarrow or Penguin Twelve, but that it is interested in the pictures regardless of who makes them. Personality twaddle may please the president, who likes to bask in the limelight, but it is worthless so far as the product is concerned and worthless, too, in the eyes of the editors and of the public.

10—With writing futilely, through either downright ignorance or criminal negligence, with nothing in mind except a quantity output and a wild hope that some editor somewhere may find something in the quantity that may be printable.

I am not a film editor—not a "columnist." But I have supervision over a film "columnist" and over a film column. I have also been a press agent—I may again be a press agent. But if I am, I'll have no excuses to offer if the disgusted editor finds my copy unavailable. If he does, the fault will be mine, not his, and it will be my business—as it ought to be the business of "Press Agent"—to correct the fault, not to defend it.

EMPLOYMENT BUREAU FOR FILM MEN.

Secretary A. H. Beaulne, of the Montreal Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association, has opened an employment bureau in connection with the organization. No fees are charged those who seek positions or who secure help through the bureau.

BROOKLYN'S LARGEST PICTURE THEATER OPENS.

The Brevoort theater of Brooklyn, N. Y., opened May 1. It seats 2,500 and every seat has an uninterrupted view of the proscenium, built on the amphitheater plan. It was erected by the Brevoort Holding Company of which A. H. Schwartz is president. It is located on the corner of Brevoort place and Bedford avenue, in the most densely populated residential section of Brooklyn. The resident manager is W. L. Price.

The "Invitation Premier," held on Tuesday evening, April 30, was attended by a representative audience and every seat was filled. As the rich velvet curtains drew aside a large American flag was disclosed, covering the whole screen space. Thirteen marines in full equipment stood in front at attention. The color bearer unfurled his silk flag as the large symphony orchestra played the national anthem. Magistrate Alexander Geisner made the welcoming address and Commissioner of Public Works, John P. Fennelly, representing Borough President Riegelmann, delivered a congratulatory message. "My Own United States" was the opening feature.

HARRY MURRAY IS WOUNDED.

HARRY MURRAY, a former employe of the Fox Film Corporation, has met the boche and has given a good account of himself. Harry writes that he is now in a base hospital in France, having been gassed and hit in the leg by shrapnel in one of the battles in which the old Sixty-ninth, New York, introduced themselves to the Huns.

Harry Murray.

The former Fox lad, after reciting his wounds, writes:

"Not bad for a beginner. But don't worry; I'll be back there in the line again soon for another whack at Heinie. Believe me, we're going to knock those Germans over. The French says: 'They shall not pass,' and, take it from me, they won't. They may think they are winning now, but wait. You know what we used to say at the ball game: 'It only takes one to hit it.' Well, our one hit will win the game. The Germans are fighting like hell. They know it's their last drive."

Harry is twenty-one years old and had been in the contract department of the Fox Film Corporation for two years. He heard the call of the old Sixty-ninth last July and left for France in October. Harry is only one of the many boys who have left the Fox corporation for the trenches.

SHEEHAN HEARS GOOD REPORTS FROM ENGLAND.

Fox Manager Receives Report from London That Picture Theaters Are Prospering.

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has just received an especially encouraging report from Ernest Reed, managing director of the Fox exchanges in England, indicating that in spite of the stress and excitement of the great Flanders drive the picture theaters are prospering wonderfully. This is not merely due to careful selection of suitable subjects, since the British public and especially the soldiers home on furlough go to the cinema to forget the war, but also to prompt distribution and attractive advertising. The whole scheme of marketing Fox films in Great Britain was devised by Mr. Sheehan personally during the course of several sojourns in the old country, and that it is withstanding both the test of time and the strain of extraordinary conditions in the trade is sufficient indorsement of the Fox system.

Mr. Reed emphasizes the fact that, while the boys back in "Blighty" are eager for excitement and even "counter-irritants' for the military nightmare they have temporarily escaped, they do not want war pictures. This may be not merely because they have had enough of the real thing, or because the "reel" thing is usually so far from reality that it revolts them more than realism. At any rate English cinemas demand domestic dramas, Westerns, society, comedies and plenty of laugh-provokers. For that reason the Fox Sunshine Comedies are always listed among the "best sellers" in Great Britain. Fox stars are just as popular abroad as at home.

Washington Motion Picture Plant Opens May 11

New Production at Spokane to Begin on Picture With Tyrone Power in Lead.

WORK is progressing rapidly on the plant of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation in Spokane. It is to be completed in a few days and plans have been under way for an elaborate opening program for the general public on Saturday, May 11. This plant is located at Minnehaha Park, near the Spokane river, on the northeast side of the city, while the Titan plant is on the rimrock overlooking the city on the south side. Both are well situated for scenic effects, which are practically at the doors of their studios.

The scenario for the first production of the Washington Motion Picture corporation has been approved by Larry Trimble, according to C. J. Ward, general manager, and Tyrone Power will play the lead. Mr. Trimble has gone to New York to assemble other members of the company and some of the parts will be taken by Spokane talent.

HODKINSON VISITS PARALTA STUDIO.

W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which is releasing Paralta Plays, spent several days recently at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles and met the stars who are making the product that is being placed on the market through his organization. Mr. Hodkinson reached Los Angeles in the course of a tour throughout the country which he is making to develop his "co-operative exhibitor" plan.

General Manager Nat. I. Brown took Mr. Hodkinson through the plant and explained to him the details of production as well as pointed out the plans for expansion and construction which are now being carried out. Louise Glaum, Henry B. Walthall, Bessie Barriscale and J. Warren Kerrigan all met Mr. Hodkinson.

UNIVERSAL EMPLOYES PAY INCOME TAX.

John P. Carter, Collector of Internal Revenue at Los Angeles, has an answer to the statement sometimes made that the motion picture industry is non-essential. Four hundred and forty-three employes of the west coast studios of the Universal Film Company paid income tax on salaries amounting to $996,311.51. There were no delinquents. The tax reports was filed on schedule.

According to the government agents there is no California industry which has contributed so substantially to the income tax budget.

LORD READING REVIEWS "MASKS AND FACES."

Lord Reading, British Ambassador to the United States, former Chief Justice of England, together with his staff and their families, were present at a private showing of "Masks and Faces" given for them by World Pictures at the British Embassy, Monday evening.

Good Stories Make Monopoly Impossible

These and Comparatively Small Capital Constitute Force to Be Reckoned With, Says Brunet.

BASING his statement upon his knowledge of the policies that have made Charles Pathe an international film figure, Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in an interview last week, revealed the ideas of Mr. Pathe as reflected in the plans of the American Company.

"The remarkable business system of the French Pathe Company is evidence that it is an opportunity and a privilege for us to follow the policies outlined by Mr. Pathe and properly adjusted to American conditions," said Mr. Brunet.

"His experience in the motion picture business cannot be doubted, and contrary to what is true in most industries, that of the motion picture, according to him, does not lend itself to a combination of the elements that compose it. Manufacturing and distribution are industries and commercial propositions more or less to be compared to some existing organizations, but the production end is entirely different. By 'production,' I mean the scenario writer and the director, who at least must keep their own individuality.

"Only with difficulty is art commercialized, as well as fancy and originality, which are the bases of the motion picture industry, and those who would believe the contrary are wrong, especially if they also believe that it will suffice for them simply to obtain contracts with celebrated artists in order to result in the ultimate success of their company and prosperity in their business.

"Whatever his or her fame, there is no star capable of being worth the amounts required in producing the negative, if the scenario is only mediocre.

"Therefore, the scenario, which is the main point, is the brain-substance of individuals, who only with difficulty can be secured and associated and whose output cannot be forced and increased at will, even with much money.

"A half-dozen scenario writers, with a capital of only $20,000 or $40,000, will always represent a force which will be able to fight advantageously against any organization, no matter how powerful, which would be pretentious enough to attempt to absorb by itself the motion picture business.

"Each scenario writer, associated with his producer and perhaps with the star, will always find a distributing concern to release interesting productions which will consent to give him the support of its exchanges and will rent the picture under conditions which will suit him best, the result being in accordance with the quality of the film.

"Charles Pathe goes further, and holds that this is the future method of exploiting motion pictures. It is only when the majority of our big men of the motion picture industry will have admitted this theory, that we will see the cessation of a chaotic situation in our industry, the crisis of which is in large part due to the exaggeration of capital, which is called upon inconsiderately with the view of combining elements of the business which should remain divided.

"It is the above 'formula' which is to dominate the future of our operations.

"We will if necessary be the financiers of interesting productions of which we will only seek the modest share for ourselves, presenting to the producers a world-wide sales organization now recognized as very strong and which we are unceasingly improving."

AT LEADING PICTURE THEATERS.

The new exchanges are located as follows: Buffalo, 106 Pearl street; Chicago, 207 South Wabash avenue; Washington, Sixth and F streets, N. W.

The Washington move marks this branch's third location in six months, the tremendous demand by the government for office space being in the main responsible.

BRIGGS DRAWS CARTOONS FOR WORLD PICTURES.

Briggs, the cartoonist who first sprang to prominence with the Chicago Tribune and who is now with the New York Tribune, is drawing exclusive cartoons for World Pictures for use in World Pictures advertising and house organ. The first of these advertising cartoons will appear in this week's advertisements and will carry a message of exceptional interest to all exhibitors.

Block Visits Goldwyn Studios

President of Indianapolis' Circle Theater Looks Behind the Screen for the First Time.

ALTHOUGH A. L. Block, the big Indianapolis merchant, is president of the popular and nationally known Circle theater in that city, he had never until last week set foot inside a motion picture studio. He signalized this step of "seeing the movies from the inside" by selecting the star who ranks as one of his great personal favorites—Mae Marsh of Goldwyn.

Accompanied by Mrs. Block the Indianapolis visitor put in an entire afternoon at the Goldwyn plant in Fort Lee, saw Mae Marsh at work under the direction of Hobart Henley, met his favorite star and was just as delighted with her in the flesh as he has been by her on the screen

Mr. Block found Samuel Goldfish waiting for him at the studio and was then shown through the entire plant by A. Lehr, the general manager of the company's Fort Lee activities, and showed instant interest in the various details of picture manufacture.

Left to Right—Director Hobart Henley, Mae Marsh, Mrs. Block, A. L. Block.

During the visit Mr. Block took occasion to praise his powerful and popular business associate, Robert Lieber, of the Circle, who has just been made president of the First National, and to pay tribute to the skill and fine showmanship of S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Circle.

Funkhouser Cuts "Hearts of the World"

The Major Gives Out That the Cutouts Were Made by a Big Majority of His Censor Board.

MAJOR FUNKHOUSER has raised another storm by reason of certain cut-outs made in "Hearts of the World," now showing at the Olympic, this city. Morris Gest, of Elliott, Comstock & Gest, who have secured the rights for the national showing of the Griffith masterpiece, sent a telegram to President Wilson regarding these cut-outs, with the view of having the U. S. Department of Justice take up the matter.

At the time of writing nothing has been given out concerning the action taken by the President, if any has been taken.

In the meantime United States District Attorney Clyne's attention has been drawn to the Major's action by Clyde A. Mann, publicity representative of the British-Canadian recruiting commission in Chicago, who complained of the cut-outs more particularly because the picture had been seen by the State Council of Defense and no dissenting voice had been raised. If the District Attorney takes any action in the case he will base it on the recent decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, in the matter of "The Spy."

Major Funkhouser in reply to the charges made against him states that in all he ordered only 30 feet cut from "Hearts of the World"; that he did not cut out the whole of the bayoneting scene, where a German is shown stabbing a wounded French soldier, but only the part showing the blood gushing from the wound; also that in the dugout scene, where French girls have been trapped by the Germans, he only eliminated the part showing a girl writhing on the ground after receiving brutal treatment from a German officer.

At any rate the Major feels confident of his stand, because a majority of his censor board voted for the cut-outs, which were not arbitrarily made by him, as many suppose.

Major Funkhouser vehemently states that he has no German sympathies, that his forbears were not Germans, and that as far back as 1700 they had contracted no intermarriage with Germans. He traces his lineage back to Christopher Funkhouser, who went from Berne, Switzerland, to Holland in 1692, thence to England and thence to New Amsterdam, arriving at the latter in 1700. The Major declares that all his ancestors were Americans and that 90 per cent. of them are of British extraction.

D. W. Chamberlain Visits Chicago.

D. W. Chamberlain, general manager of the American Amusement Company, Minneapolis, made a brief stop-over in the city Monday, April 29, on his way home from New York, where he spent several days calling on the trade in connection with bookings for his circuit of five houses in the northwest. Mr. Chamberlain stated that business has been quite good with him throughout the winter months and that the spring shows no diminution. He books his programs from the open market.

In point of attendance and business interest Mr. Chamberlain believes the coming convention of the exhibitors of the northwest at Minneapolis, May 7-9, will be the most important yet held in that section. There will be no exposition and devotion to business will strictly rule the proceedings.

R. O. Proctor, Pathe District Manager.

Ralph O. Proctor, recently district manager of middle western territory for Pathe Exchange, Inc., was born in Cedar Rapids, Ia., and received his education in the public schools of Chicago, being graduated from high school at the age of sixteen in 1905.

He has been engaged continuously in the film industry for the last nine years, his first venture being made in the exhibiting end. He owned and managed the Burton and Webster theaters in Chicago from 1910-11, selling out in the latter year and joining the forces of the branch office of the General Film Company, 435 North Clark street, where he had charge of the film inspection department. He remained there for a short time, when he joined the office force of Ike Van Ronkel, manager of the G. F.'s branch at 17-19 South Wabash avenue. Under Mr. Van Ronkel he held successfully the positions of head of the poster department and of the shipping, special feature, booking and sales departments. He next became assistant manager of the branch and finally manager, retaining the latter position until 1915, when he was appointed special representative of the G. F. throughout the Middle West. He opened the Des Moines branch office of that company and was afterward sent to the Kansas City office, where he later became branch manger with supervision of Oklahoma City business.

Ralph O. Proctor.

In June, 1916, Mr. Proctor was appointed branch manager in Chicago for Metro, which he held until November, the same year. At this time he formed the Vandyke Amusement Company, and opened his own office in the Business College building, Wabash avenue and Adams street. Here he handled Art Dramas until the fall of 1917, when he sold his interests to the Standard Film Company. He then became manager of Pathe's Chicago office, which he held until the company promoted him to his present position.

With the experience that is his, Mr. Proctor is bound to rise higher. He is now in his twenty-ninth year, of stalwart frame, and a born hustler. It need only be mentioned, to accentuate these statements, that Mr. Proctor, around his majority, served two years on the Northwest Mounted Police, with headquarters at Swift Current, Saskatchewan.

Of pleasing manner and fine address Mr. Proctor has a large following throughout the Middle West in the film trade. He has met nearly every exhibitor in that territory and is known as being strictly straightforward in his representations and in their fulfillment. Mr. Proctor is very optimistic on the outlook for Pathe business, under the new plan introduced by President Brunet.

Gerard Picture on Colonial Screen.

A most enthusiastic gathering greeted the Gerard story in films at the Colonial Monday evening, April 29, when the picture was given its initial presentation in Chicago.

Advantage was taken of the occasion to press the Third Liberty Loan still further toward Chicago's quota, able speeches being made by Judge Hugo Pam and Commander Schofield of the Great Lakes training quarters, before the presentation of the picture was begun. The Jackies' band played several selections, while several of its members passed through the auditorium and were rewarded with numerous subscriptions.

Ambassador Gerard's story has been closely following in the production and I was impressed by the intense interest taken in the pictured version by all present. This interest was accentuated very frequently by bursts of applause which, at intervals, was varied by hisses for the Kaiser and cheers for the manly attitude of the Ambassador at critical junctures. Feeling also ran high at the scenes showing the fearful hellish treatment of Belgian girls and women, and at the sight of the barbarous cruelty shown English prisoners in German keeping.

Aaron J. Jones is to be congratulated on the fine opening of the picture, which is certain to prove a winning attraction for the First National wherever shown. The Colonial orchestra of twenty pieces played the accompanying music very skillfully. A review of "My Four Years in Germany" is given in the issue of March 30, of this paper.

Peace Between Association and Local 110.

A meeting was held in the Hotel Morrison, Tuesday, April 30, by the arbitration committee of twenty members of the Allied Amusement Association and Joseph P. Armstrong, president of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., and Peter Kuniff, organizer for the Federation of Labor. After some discussion a motion carried that the following resolution be adopted by the arbitration committee of the association:

Whereas, Joseph P. Armstrong, as president of Local 110, and Peter Kuniff, as organizer for the American Federation of Labor, have attended a meeting of the arbitration committee on behalf of Local 110 and other organizations interested, on the one hand, and a committee consisting of twenty representatives of the Allied Amusement Association on the other hand; and

Whereas, the gentlemen representing Local 110 and the other organizations interested have stated that none of the acts of interference, misconduct, or other unlawful acts, attempts or threats, described in the Bill for Injunction filed on behalf of the members of the Allied Amusement Association are now in effect against any member of the Allied Amusement Association, and have further assured the committee representing the Allied Amusement Association that no such unlawful or improper acts, attempts, threats or interferences would be repeated in the future, and that none of the matters or things charged in the bill for injunction filed on behalf of the Allied Amusement Association would be done or attempted in the future, and because of such agreement on the part of said gentlemen representing the Union and other organizations and the assurance that such promise would be lived up to by the members of Local 110 and the other organizations interested, they having requested that the injunction order be dissolved,

Now, therefore, it is the sense of this meeting that in view of these promises and stipulations of the gentlemen on behalf of Local 110 and other organizations, that the representatives of the Allied Amusement Association at the arbitration committee meeting report the proceedings of the meeting of the arbitration committee to the general meeting of the Allied Amusement Association, to be called immediately, and recommend that upon such stipulations being entered in a proper and binding form, the injunction be dissolved.

The resolution was signed "By a committee of twenty exhibitors."

In response to this action by the Allied Amusement Association, President Armstrong called a meeting of Local 110 in the organization's headquarters Thursday morning, May 2, at which 368 members were present, urging co-operation with the Allied Amusement Association. After some preliminaries the following resolution was adopted:

That we establish absolute friendly relations and work in harmony with the Allied Amusement Association.

The motion was carried unanimously.

New Woodlawn Theater Bombed.

On Monday night, April 29, a bomb was exploded in the new Woodlawn theater, 853 East Sixty-third street, tearing away a part of the front and wrecking the lobby and the ticket cage. The explosion was so violent that many windows in the vicinity were shattered. This fine, new theater, which has cost $300,000, with a seating capacity of 2,000, was opened Friday, April 26, after a series of difficulties which lasted for several months with the various building trades unions. Andrew Kargas, the owner, informed the police that a demand had been made on him by a man for $1,000 before a union operator would be permitted to work in the house. He refused, and opened the house with a non-union operator who ran the projection machine Friday and Saturday. The officials of the building trades unions then withdrew their demand, it is said, and a union operator was employed.

The bomb was exploded about half an hour after the large crowd in the theater had left for home.

Mr. Kargas estimates the damage at about $1,000, which is trivial compared with what it might have been.

The police, it is said, have a clue to the man who demanded the bribe from Mr. Kargas, but up to the time of writing he has not been traced.

Some people in the vicinity state that the bomb was thrown from an automobile that passed the theater about the time of the explosion, while others testify that the bomb was hurled by some men from the platform of a passing elevated train at the time.

President Joseph P. Armstrong, of local 110, I. A. T. S. E., states positively that neither he nor any member of his organization has any knowledge of the bombing.

Managerial Changes in Chicago Exchanges.

H. J. Bailey, manager of Vitagraph's Chicago office for the past eight months, resigned that position Monday, April 29, to take the management of Goldwyn's Chicago office. Previous to his management of the Vitagraph office here Mr. Bailey was manager of Vitagraph's Minneapolis and Omaha offices in succession. W. E. Banford, who filled the position of assistant manager under Mr. Bailey with Vitagraph, has taken the same position in the Goldwyn office. Tom Delaney and J. E. Salter, city salesmen for Vitagraph, have also followed Mr. Bailey to the Goldwyn office.

S. J. Goldman, for the last six months manager of Goldwyn's office in Chicago, has been appointed manager of the Chicago office of Jewel Productions. Previous to his connection with Goldwyn Mr. Goldman was manager for the Central Film Company, this city, for two years. Mr. Goldman has taken the following salesmen from the Goldwyn office to assist him in his new position: C. Miller, T. Dunas, I. Nankin and C. Smith. Harry Berman, general manager for Jewel Pictures, Inc., came on from New York to install Mr. Goldman as Chicago manager of that company. I. L Lesserman, now Chicago manager of Universal, informs me that his company will continue to attend to the shipment of Jewel pictures, but that they will be handled entirely separate by Mr. Goldman, for Jewel Productions, Inc.

T. W. Chatburn, formerly manager of Vitagraph's Pittsburgh office, has been appointed manager of the Chicago office to succeed Mr. Bailey.

C. E. Plough, formerly Universal manager in Chicago, resigned that position April 27, to devote his entire time to his growing outside interests. He has a circuit of six theaters in the city and near-by districts. Mr. Plough has been connected with Universal ever since that company was formed. He left Mr. Laemmle about ten years ago to establish an exchange at 167 North Clark street, now included in the site of the City Hall Square Building. Thence he moved to 128 West Lake street, where he ran the Anti-Trust Exchange until about two years ago, when he sold it to Universal.

Chicago Premiere of "Hearts of the World."

Had the Olympic theater four or five times its capacity, every seat would have been occupied Wednesday evening, April 23, when the opening presentation of Griffith's "Hearts of the World" was given under the management of Elliott, Comstock & Gest. The interior was decorated with the allied colors and the flags waved repeatedly to billows of applause that swelled from many throats, in recognition of the genius of the wizard of moving picture production.

The production closed its first week's remarkable run at the Olympic Tuesday, April 30. Nothing that Griffith has hitherto done in moving pictures creates the intense interest stirred by this simple story of the great war. The war scenes, by their exceeding realism, bring the conflict home to our very doors. We see our own boys of the Rainbow Division arrive on the battle scarred zone and we rise and greet them with a perfect hurricane of applause, while eyes flash and then grow dim. The pity is that the Olympic is such a poor theater in which to house so great a picture.

A long line of patient ticket buyers can be seen every day on Randolph street, stretching from Clark to Dearborn. Not even the strenuous Liberty Loan sellers can surpass the determination which grips everyone in these lines to see the Griffith masterpiece. It is like going over the top by our boys at the front.

Minneapolis Pioneer Exhibitor on Tour.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Van Duzee spent Monday and Tuesday in the city last week on a tour of the country, from their home in Oakland, Cal., by way of Seattle and Minneapolis. They left for Kansas City, Mo., Tuesday night, April 30, and will return home through Denver and Los Angeles. Mr. Van Duzee is well known in trade circles throughout the east, having resided in Minneapolis for many years and being one of the earliest exhibitors in that city. He was manager in Minneapolis for the General Film Company for a number of years, in the old days, and at the same time retained his interests in picture theaters. Mr. Van Duzee still owns picture theater interests in St. Paul and also in Oakland. He is at present engaged in important sanitation projects in the latter city.

Chicago Local in New Headquarters.

The headquarters of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., were moved Monday, April 29, from the Masonic Temple to the Century Building, southwest corner of State and Adams streets. The new quarters occupy a fine suite on the 12th floor of the building. Being centrally located in the Loop, the location is much easier of access for members.

"Revelation" (Metro) Given White Permit.

Metro Pictures Service, this city, has secured the Playhouse, 410 South Michigan avenue, for the summer months for the exclusive showing of Metro releases. It was planned to present "Revelation" on Sunday, May 5, opening night, but owing to trouble in having it passed by the censor board, hurried arrangements were made to show "My Own

United States" instead. As a result of about four weeks' compromising with the censor board, "Revelation" was finally given a white permit Thursday, May 2. Only four subtitles were eliminated. This film will be presented at the Playhouse the second week of its management under Metro. Jesse Goldberg, special representative for the Frohman Amusement Corporation, has come on from New York tc be present at the initial showing of "My Own United States."

"Blue Bird" Opens at Orchestra Hall.

Some time ago Max Goldstine, district manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, secured a lease on Orchestra Hall for the summer months, which is attended throughout the year by the finest people in the city. The hall will be opened for the season with the presentation of Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," an Artcraft feature.

Arthur Dunham, the well-known and popular orchestra leader, will direct the thirty symphony players who will give musical interpretations of the pictures shown on the screen. Mrs. Mildred Fitzpatrick, an accomplished organist, has also been engaged.

It will be the object of the Famous-Lasky management to present carefully selected programs.

Quota Nearly Reached by Chicago Theaters.

The strenuous efforts put forth by Peter J. Schaefer as chairman of the Liberty Loan committee on theaters and amusements, this city, necessitated his going to French Lick Springs, Wednesday, April 24, to recuperate. Adolph Linick, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has taken Mr. Schaefer's place, and he informed me that the subscriptions had reached $467,000 for theaters of all kinds, Thursday, April 25. Mr. Linick believes that the quota of $500,000 will be considerably exceeded before the drive is closed. The total number of subscribers from theaters in the city was 2,333.

Gerard Picture at All Training Camps.

It has been announced by Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, that the Government has requested the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to show "My Four Years in Germany" at all the soldiers' training camps in the country. "This is being done," Mr. Jones says, "and it has already been shown at Camp Grant, Rockford, for three days, beginning Thursday, April 25."

"The Unbeliever" Strong at Auditorium.

"The Unbeliever" has been going strong at the Auditorium up to the time of writing, when it has still one week more to prove its fine drawing powers. It has been an able aid in the Third Liberty Loan Drive, in addition to assisting the marine recruiting drive in the city.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sears Leaves for Front.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, who has filled the position of publicity representative with the American Film Company, Inc., for some time past, is making a trip to the front in France in order to secure local color for a mazagine series she is at present engaged in writing. This series gives the letters of a mother to her son in the trenches. Mrs. Sears has a son at the front whom she fondly hopes to be able to see while "over there." Mrs. Sears left Chicago May 3.

Two Kleine Clerks to Great Lakes.

Paul Lyman, a bookkeeper, and Joe Rudolph, a shipping clerk, in the George Kleine executive offices, this city, have enlisted in the navy. A party was given in their honor Wednesday evening, May 1, at the home of Miss Kelsko, Mr. Kleine's secretary, about fifty of their fellow employes and friends being present. The occasion was marked by the happy speech made by Mr. Kleine when he presented wrist watches, which had been purchased by members of the office force, to each of the selected men. They left for Great Lakes last week, where they will receive their training.

The Automaticket Machine.

Automaticket machines have recently been installed in three large, new theaters in Chicago and vicinity by A. N. Braun, middle western manager of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company. The theaters are the Woodlawn and Kenwood, Chicago, and the Midway, Rockford. The Kenwood and Midway theaters are the latest additions to Ascher Brothers' fine circuit.

FLOYD SEARS ENLISTS IN MARINES.

Floyd Sears, who for the past year has been private secretary to the vice president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, has enlisted in the marines. Mr. Sears' associates in World Pictures and his wide circle of friends and acquaintances in the industry wish him the best of luck in fighting for Uncle Sam.

Boom O'Donnell at Testimonial Luncheon

Philadelphia's Choice for Next President of League Acclaimed—Honor Unexpected by New Candidate.

ON May 2 the film men of Philadelphia gathered at luncheon to honor Judge John H. O'Donnell, president of the Pennsylvania League, and also president of the Philadelphia local league. It was ostensibly to be a testimonial to his past services on behalf of his brother film men and the secret was kept from him that plans were on foot to confer still greater honors upon him.

Representatives of all branches of the film business gathered on the occasion. A slip with a patriotic border, a picture of the man whom Philadelphia wants as the next League president, Judge John H. O'Donnell, and a song were distributed by Sam Blatt, chairman of the gathering. The chairman introduced Charles H. Goodwin, secretary of the Pennsylvania League, who gave Judge O'Donnell high praise as the man who for two years had helped exhibitors to the utmost and who had succeeded in uniting 115 theaters in Philadelphia County under one head. He referred to him as the squarest of the square, a man who could never be bought, a man who would always do justice to all. He announced that a Boosters' Committee of twenty exchangemen and twenty-three exhibitors had been formed to go to Boston and promised that if all worked they would bring back John H. O'Donnell as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Judge O'Donnell said had he known what the boys were up to, he would have prevented it. But while he thought he always knew everything, they had "put something over" on him. He thought it strange that he had not been asked to all the meetings, but now he knew why. He approved of testimonials to the other fellows, but did not want any for himself. He thought it strange that they wanted so many on the Boosters' Committee, but now he saw the light.

The Judge felt the National Presidency was a serious matter. Any man taking it must give all his time so he could look at every angle of view from forty-eight States' standpoints. He felt the president should have no other interest, should belong to only one organization. All organizations spring from the ground up—first the local, then the State, through an ascending scale to the national. The president must have in mind one thing, and only one, the interests of all exhibitors.

Judge O'Donnell continuing, said he did not approve of present co-operative plans, as he felt they might shake the organization. He thought organizations of exhibitors and producers all right for social feeling and mutual help and as a promoter of good-fellowship, but not as organizations.

He thought both sides would have more respect for each other, and conditions would be better eventually if there is no amalgamation, but the exhibitors should stick to their own organization and thus remain strong. He repeated his oft expressed sentiments that any co-operative plan to be right must look out for the small 300-seat house as well as the largest, and on these lines alone must the subject be fought out to a happy and successful conclusion.

Mr. O'Donnell spoke of the United Exhibitors' Association, and said how disappointed he had been at first that they found it necessary to have any other organization, but now they have joined the League, and there is a ray of hope that some day only one organization will be necessary.

He had no desire to be National President, but was willing to do anything to help "the boys" along, and if they said they wanted him to run for president, and felt it would help them in any way, he was willing to do their bidding. In closing, he gave a tribute to L. D. Beggs and Frank W. Buhler, who at their country's call had taken the picture chairmanship of the Liberty Loan drive.

In the absence of President Robert Kincade, of the United Exhibitors' Association, Vice-president Ed. O'Keefe was called on and responded. Among the other speakers were Fred G. Nixon Nirdlinger, Leslie Mason and Joseph McCready.

This change marks an important acquisition by General, Mr. Dennison being one of the best-known exchange men in the Pittsburgh territory. He was for the past two years personal representative of James Steele of the Paramount interests, his attention being devoted to Cleveland, Indianapolis, Detroit and Pittsburgh, with headquarters at the latter point. Formerly he was exchange manager for George Kleine in Pittsburgh.

Screen Players in Loan Drive

Stars Address Crowds From An Exhibition Tank—Competition Between Studios to Win Prize.

IN Central Park there is a mudstained British war "tank" with wicked looking guns and armor plate of paper composition, so well made that only the closest inspection can tell it from the real thing. This mighty engine of war has been the center of perhaps the most intensive Liberty Loan drive in Los Angeles, in charge of the screen stars of Southern California.

Teams of film favorites representing the most important motion picture studios here competed in the drive. They were assisted by four-minute speakers from Liberty Loan headquarters.

There was competition between the representative stars of the different studios to win the prize for selling the most bonds. Each studio was represented each night.

Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, was the first screen player to appear at the tank, and in less than an hour disposed of bonds valued at $6,500.

On one night Bert Lytell was in charge of the tank for the Metro studios. He was assisted by Viola Dana and Edith Storey.

On a Tuesday evening the Triangle players conducted a big bond sale, with Bill Desmond, Roy Stewart and Olive Thomas on the tank.

On Wednesday night the Vitagraph players had charge of the tank, including Earle Williams, William Duncan, Carol Hayakawa Addressing Throngs in Central Park.

Holloway, Larry Seaman, Grace Darmond and Nell Shipman. They sold $16,500 worth of bonds.

Thursday night was Paramount night, with Wallace Reid, Vivian Martin, Dorothy Dalton, Theodore Roberts and other Paramount players. Seventeen thousand dollars worth of bonds were sold.

On Liberty Day Theda Bara was master of ceremonies at the tank. She sold $38,250 worth of bonds.

Miss Bara faced what was probably the largest audience that ever saw her in real life on the Pacific Coast. She appeared at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Starting the drive by announcing that she would give $5,000 if one hundred men in the audience would each take a $50 Liberty Bond, Miss Bara came dangerously near causing a riot. There were at least 15,000 people in the park and in the streets, and when they began crowding toward the bond booths it was almost impossible to handle the crowd.

In fifteen minutes Miss Bara's personal subscription of $5,000 had been covered and she was announcing the doubling of her original subscription, $1,000 at a time. The crowd responded with great enthusiasm, and from that time till 5.30 in the afternoon the bond-selling proceeded without a pause.

It has been estimated that between 35,000 and 40,000 people visited Central Park some time during the afternoon, to see Miss Bara and participate in the celebration. The negro jazz band furnished music for the big drive. Before Miss Bara arrived Mary Miles Minter, who is to participate in the drive Monday night, mounted the tank and made a brief speech.

At 7 o'clock in the evening Universal players took charge of the drive and among those present were Rupert Julian, Mae Murray, Ella Hall, Dorothy Phillips, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Priscilla Dean, Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard.

Exhibitors Object to Idle Film Deposits

Theatre Owners' Association Passes Resolution Requesting Exchanges to Buy Liberty Bonds.

FILM deposits, a taxation levied by many producing organizations through their film exchanges on the exhibitors, has long been a cause of more or less irritation between the theater managers and the exchange men. The exhibitors have always objected to this taxation, and at a meeting on April 17 a resolution was passed by the Theatre Owners' Association, an organization representing the exhibitors of Los Angeles, asking that these deposits be exchanged for Liberty Bonds, the bonds to be accepted by every member in payment of their deposit at the termination of their contracts.

The meeting was preceded by a luncheon at Hamburger's banquet hall in honor of the Third Liberty Loan. A number of exhibitors spoke, offering various suggestions for the successful launching of a Liberty Loan campaign. At the meeting later in the afternoon several important questions were discussed, including threatened Sunday closing ordinance and the new theatre license. The proposed license is on a sliding scale, being three cents a seat for houses charging twenty cents admission and more, and two cents a seat for those whose admission fee is less than that. In most cases this works out to the advantage of the picture houses. A few large theaters in the downtown district who now are paying a straight license fee of $35 a month will be hit pretty hard, but in the main the fees will be lower.

There was some protest from the five and ten-cent houses on the ground that if they were required to pay as much as a twenty-cent house, their burden would be inequitable, and the members of the committee decided to make a special provision for this class of theaters. The matter was taken up by a delegation of exhibitors with the City Council as a number of the low admission houses objected to the increase in the license rate.

We interviewed F. A. McDonald, the president of the Association, the other night, and he stated that he expected the matter to be arranged in a most satisfactory manner. Mr. McDonald also stated that he did not believe that there would be any danger of Sunday closing.

Hayakawa Goes to San Francisco.

Sessue Hayakawa and the members of his company left by train Thursday evening, April 25, for San Francisco, where many of the important scenes of the initial Hayakawa production are to be made. After a week spent in the northern city the company will proceed to the picturesque town of Monterey, and there a number of fishing scenes will be filmed.

Marion Sais, formerly with Kalem and Lasky, has been engaged as Mr. Hayakawa's leading woman. The ingenue role will be handled by Mary Anderson. Howard Davies has also been engaged for the heavy lead.

The direction of all the future Hayakawa productions is to be in the hands of William Worthington. Worthington for many years was an actor in the spoken drama and often served also as a stage director. He made his entry into photoplay some six years ago, and after a short period before the camera as an actor with the Universal Company became a director. Mr. Worthington has also directed for the Pathe and Goldwyn Companies, and has directed Herbert Rawlinson, Leah Baird, Franklyn Farnum, Bryant Washburn and Mae Marsh.

Mr. Worthington plans upon having the picture ready for release sometime in the latter part of June.

Mr. Worthington's assistant will be Jack Wells, who has been his right hand man for several years. Robert Newhardt is to be in charge of the photographic department.

Carl Laemmle Arrives at the Coast.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, arrived in Los Angeles on April 25. The chief executive of the "Big U" organization will stay here for some time. While in the West, Mr. Laemmle will confer with his aids on the production of several new features. Mr. Laemmle's visit here was in October. It's a foregone conclusion that his arrival will mean considerable activity at the big film plant and the taking on of many new companies.

G. M. Anderson Starts Production on the Coast.

G. M. Anderson, popularly known as "Broncho Billy," has started production on the coast and leased the old Selig studios in Glendale, Cal. Mr. Anderson will produce western features for the state right market. The company has not as yet been cast, but we are informed that one of the players will be Fred Church, well known in Universal and Balboa companies. Jesse Robbins has been appointed studio manager.

Motion Picture Film as Testimony in Court.

A motion picture was used this week by the Los Angeles Railway Company as first aid in defending a suit for $50,000 damages brought against it by Amos Baird. The motion picture, which was exhibited before Judge Louis W. Myers and the jury, showed Baird climbing a ladder and laying roofing paper on a house, althought when Baird entered court for the trial he was using crutches.

The railway company introduced testimony to the effect that the picture of Baird working on the roof and carrying rolls of paper up the ladder was made subsequent to the time he alleges he suffered an injury by being knocked off a car in an argument with a conductor. Baird had previously testified that he had been unable to be about without crutches since the time of the accident.

Attorney Griffith Jones, who represents the plaintiff in the case, declared he would prove in court that Baird would now be able to go without crutches had not the corporation's agents tricked him into doing this heavy work.

Cowboys to Break Bronchos for Uncle Sam.

The call of the range and the bucking broncho has been felt by six cowboys of the Triangle studio and they are planning to desert the films to seek new thrills and at the same time do their bit for Uncle Sam. The punchers, Pete Morrison, Curley Baldwin, Abe Farra, Buff Jones, Bee Reynolds and Eddie Bowman, famed in the motion picture world for their daring feats of horsemanship, are planning to enlist in the army and will serve as broncho busters for Uncle Sam at the remount station at Camp Fremont. A more capable bunch of men would be hard to find, as all are daring horsemen, "A-1" cowhands and experts with the rope.

"Hearts of the World" Not for Philadelphia

Management Cancels the Engagement After Censor Board Eliminates Scenes Depicting German Brutalities.

Hisses and outcries that "the censors are pro-German" followed the announcement made Tuesday night, April 30, during the opening presentation of D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," at the Garrick theater, Philadelphia, that seven scenes had been ordered excised from the new production. The order for the eliminations, all of them depicting the characteristic brutalities toward the French and Belgian women, had been received from the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, a few hours prior to the opening of the theater. This board is composed of Frank L. Shattuck, Dr. Ellis Paxon Oberholzer and Mrs. E. Niven.

Tuesday noon the censors had passed upon the film and made the eliminations to which Elliott, Comstock & Gest, distributors of the famous feature, so seriously objected. The Tuesday evening audience was made up of guests of the management, money for tickets having been refunded to purchasers before the doors opened.

Ballots were distributed and a vote was taken as an expression of opinion. "Hearts of the World" was shown in exactly the form it carried before the Pennsylvania autocrats started cutting. The vote was overwhelmingly in favor of the unexpurgated production.

Determined that the Griffith film should be presented in complete form or not at all, Elliott, Comstock & Gest announced that the engagement in Philadelphia had been cancelled. The distributors will begin legal proceedings, determined to carry the case to the court of last resort in their purpose to exhibit the film despite the decision of the censors.

MARY MAURICE, SCREEN MOTHER, DIES.

Mary Birch Maurice, who had the title of "mother of the films" bestowed upon her by "fans," died at the home of relatives in Port Carbon, Pa., April 31 in her seventy-fourth year. She was last employed by Vitagraph in filming Arthur Guy Empy's "Over the Top." She has been continuously employed by Vitagraph since her debut in pictures eight years ago. Previous to becoming a "screen mother," Mrs. Maurice had enjoyed popularity on the legitimate stage, having made her debut in a Pittsburgh stock company in the early sixties. In her day upon the stage she had supported scores of prominent stars, among them being Frank Chanfrau, John T. Raymond, Booth, Barrett and McCullough, Joseph Jefferson and Robert Mantell.

Pictures and Text-Books

Experiment Proves That History, Geography and Natural History as Well as Industrial Processes Are Well Supplemented by the Films.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

SOME time ago several interested parties desirous of proving if there were any number of pictures then in use, which could be exhibited profitably in connection with the text books as used in the schools, made a test. For this purpose distinct books and subjects were chosen, and the then catalogued list of pictures—now largely increased—were brought side by side and classifications made. In the History of the United States it was found that there were over twenty good and large pictures fully illustrative of some of the most important national events. Each one of these pictures filled most happily and worthily a two-fold purpose, they were a splendid commentary on the subjects taught in the history, giving realism and life, with a newer and larger meaning to the studied portion, while also giving a fine entertainment, making the study more pleasant, and firmly impressing the memory of those events; those privileged to see and use these pictures, certainly had a great advantage over those denied the opportunity.

Natural History text-books held the greatest advantage, it was found that there were not a few, but a very large number (going into the hundreds) of pictures every one of which was a revelation to the scholars of the wide world nature of their studies; all conceded that with the use of these pictures the pupils could learn as much in one month, as could only be possible in one year without them; the learning was at once easier and non-forgetable, besides the fact that the range of thought was far wider than that which was found within the limits of the text books.

In the study of Geography it was found that including Scenics and Travel pictures, not only were the text books illustrated, but that they were amplified to an astonishing degree. This is a realm in which the producer of the picture has not to draw either upon his imagination or given descriptions; as with natural history, nature and truth were, and are, alone portrayed; the whole world is brought to the school and the scholar; poor indeed is the school and scholars deprived of these pictures, there are enough of them to show two a week for two years. Following these, manners and customs of peoples form a series, the like of which the text-books failed entirely to cover; this series made the text-books poor indeed; it is safe to say that the school book does not, and cannot describe the lives and customs of peoples as do these living portrayals of the activities of all the world's inhabitants. Without going into further detail, it is safe to say that in the examination made, it was found that there are more pictures ready to augment the text books than could be used by any school in two years.

The Wider Range of Subjects.

Probably the best use of the moving pictures for several years to come, or until they possess "pedagogical principles," will be in the larger field for which the school auditorium is so well fitted. It ought to be within the power of every school possessing a large room and electric power to have at least one good picture exhibition a week, and better still several during the week of simple one-reel subjects bearing upon the subjects taught in the text books of which we have given proof that the supply is so great.

Industrial subjects afford a great variety of pictures which should be made a most valuable aid and addition to the class room. A film, "The Making of a Book," which takes but twenty minutes to show, is a revelation. In this there is seen the complete process of making a book from the raw material to the finished article; what quicker and more profitable theme could be presented to the whole school than this. How seeds germinate, how plants grow, how fruits are gathered and preserved are abundantly profitable now. For country districts there is not a portion of farm life that is not pictured for educational guidance and profit.

There are also the works and ways of the great cities depicted with some profitable object in view. There are few subjects that allow more interest than the Industries of the United States, and these are great aids to school work. Sociological subjects are full of things for scholars. "Making Schools Safe," "Helping the Deaf to Hear," "Children's Work in War Time" are all samples of films selected at random out of scores, all of which, while not according to pedagogical principles, are of perhaps greater value than if they were strained to the text book style. Then again there is the large field of entertainment pictures, many of which are taken from standard works and form such an auxiliary to the whole school idea, that they lift the school to a higher level and carry the whole community with it. It is not too much to say that there are hundreds of communities where the school should take the lead in moving picture work. This generation is blessed in living in this stage of moving picture endeavor, and no reason can possibly be found to excuse the schools from taking a lead which naturally belongs to them and they are derelict in their duty if they do not; any idea of waiting for text book classification, synchronizing talking machines are offences against their own reputation, and the justice they owe to the scholars under their care and also the duty they owe to the community upon whose taxes they live; taxes which are paid for the purpose of securing just such benefits that the educational moving picture brings.

Garden of American Pictures

National Committee for Better Films Offers Catalogues of Pictures for Family Group.

A LIST of moving pictures for the use of Committees and Exhibitors choosing pictures for the family group has been selected by the National Committee for Better Films, which is a committee of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, and is being offered to the public at 10 cents per copy. This list of pictures covers the period between October 1, 1917, and April 1, 1918, and is made up almost entirely of comedies and dramas of a class supposed not to offend either public morals or good taste. The purpose for which the list was compiled as stated on the third page of the catalogue is as follows:

"The pictures in this list have been chosen because they are interesting or amusing or exciting to fathers, mothers and children of all ages. In other words, they are pictures that the parents can watch with their children, laugh at with their children, get excited about with their children. They are family pictures, full of the elements of life and chosen only to give pleasure and enjoyment in real human form."

"The Garden of American Motion Pictures," which is published at regular intervals, can be had from the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, 70 Fifth avenue, New York City, upon application accompanied by the necessary remittance.

Interesting Educationals

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Britain's Bulwarks" (Pathe).

A HALF reel, picturing something of the immense work of supplying munitions for the army and navy of Britain and her allies. The women of Britain are shown at work in factories, doing much of the labor that was formerly done by men. Health inspection of employes is a feature. With this is run a half reel showing the British cavalry on the Western front. The mounted men are seen patrolling villages and seeking to get in touch with the enemy. An interesting glimpse of the famous Indian lancers is shown.

"Our Fighting Ally—The Tank" (Pathe).

Here is a novelty that is full of interest to anyone who has studied the tank in warfare. The exhibition here given of the tank in action, crossing uneven fields, ploughing through a dense forest and even passing through a frame building, surpasses one's expectations. The scenes were taken at Camp Dix, N. J., and hundreds of enlisted men are seen watching the maneuvers of the tank.

"Logging in Italy" (Educational).

The scenes of this picture, which was exhibited at the Rialto theater, New York, during the week of April 21, were photographed in the Swiss Alps and illustrate the difficulties encountered by the lumberjacks in guiding their rafts of logs down stream. The cameraman takes us to the jam of logs which must frequently be dislodged by explosives, and then we follow one of the rafts on its way under bridges, over rapids and through the narrows speeding at the rate of 15 miles an hour. The picture provides some real thrills when we fear that even the remarkable skill of the pilot crew cannot save the raft from being dashed to pieces.

America's Sleeping Giants (Paramount-Bray).

A recent report from the Government Conservation Commission shows that only eight per cent. of this country's water-power is being utilized. This means that coal and other fuels are being consumed to operate manufactories which could be conducted with infinitely greater economy by America's natural waterfalls, rapids and rushing streams. The 118th release pictograph shows thrillingly beautiful pictures of many of these "sleeping giants" of industry taken in all their undisturbed beauty.

Mountain streams tumbling over 500-foot cliffs; rapids that defy the most daring of navigators; purling little brooklets teeming with speckled trout and roaring cataracts that rival the grandeur of the great Yosemite, all hiding away among the mountains and hills of Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia and W. Virginia. As photographed for the Bray Pictograph, these superb sources of water-power offer timely suggestions for those who are howling for conservation of our coal supply—and at the same time, a real treat for those lovers of nature who would leave the virgin beauty of their country intact for the generations to come.

"May Irwin's Conservation Loaf" (Universal).

In the 69th issue of the Screen Magazine will be found an interesting lesson in bread baking using corn meal, boiled rice, honey, hot water, yeast cake and shortening. Wheat flour does not appear in this recipe. The illustration of how to prepare the loaves for the oven without kneading, slapping on the bake board instead, is quite instructive and shows each stage in the making of a loaf of bread.

Final Installment of Italian Pictures

The Battle from the Plava River to the Sea Finishes Series of Official Italian War Pictures at Rivoli.

THE last of the Official Italian War Pictures were exhibited at the Rivoli during the week of April 21. This installment covers scenes photographed during the battle from the Plava River to the sea, and includes thrilling incidents of actual warfare. Again, as in previous installments, we witness proof of the Italian's remarkable energy and bravery, and are brought by the cameraman so close to the lines of soldiers going over the top that we see one of the soldiers felled by an enemy bullet and being borne away by stretcher bearers who appear on the scene a moment afterward.

This series of Italian War pictures can be recommended to our readers as being authentic and of unusual interest.

Items of Interest.

The Rivoli Theatre, New York City, presented in its program for the week of April 21 a Pathe educational entitled "Bursting Buds," which is a beautiful subject in colors, including Cyclamen and Hepatica, and a series of splendid views of the cathedral of Milan from the Educational Films Corporation of America.

* * *

The Gaumont Company made the film announcement of the second birthday of the Rialto theatre which presented a birthday cake with two candles on it as the first scene, and a little two-year-old child feeding a cat as the second scene. The program which opened with selections from "Aida" by the Rialto chorus and orchestra, augmented by an appropriate and exceptionally beautiful setting, included among the educational offerings views of Venice, her Grand Canal and some of the 177 smaller canals which intersect the city of the Adriatic. The latter was supplied by the Educational Films Corporation of America, and is a beautifully toned bit of film. One of the most interesting features of the Rialto Magazine introduced an Italian hydroplane skimming over the water.

DR. ETTINGER FOR NEW YORK CITY SCHOOLS.

The long drawn-out contest for this high office has ended in what is considered a most satisfactory appointment in the person of Dr. Ettinger.

Educators in all parts of the country have been watching with great interest the outcome of this dilemma in which the New York Board of Education found themselves, when presented with such an array of capable men whose differences lay in the question of certain principles of applied education.

At the recent convention in Atlantic City there was no more absorbing topic than the nature of this appointment and the principle involved, therefore more than passive interest was displayed in the matter, as the selection not only decided the man, but the many-sided principles agitating the educational minds.

At this critical time England and other countries, together with the United States, are developing legislation for education which aims to avoid the reactionary method of child-training. It is a matter of vital importance to those of us who are interested in the educational powers of moving pictures that progressive men shall be in educational authority, and we believe in, and look for, the upholding of many of these ideas by Dr. Ettinger. The city of New York at present has no properly appointed Chief of Visual Education. Progress demands that such an office be created and a well fitted person appointed thereto—one at once practical and not theoretical—and one who sees in all forms of visual education an aid to present plans; we hope Dr. Ettinger will create such an office and suitably fill it.

We believe the majority of interested persons will be—as we ourselves are—satisfied with New York's selection, and, when we consider that the new superintendent has under his care the educational training of the next generation we will give him our undivided support, congratulating him on his appointment and wishing him every success in his high office.

MR. HIPPLE MAKES A SUGGESTION.

Editor Moving Picture World:

The moving picture houses have been plentifully supplied with free slides to run for Government purposes. We have no kick on doing this and, in fact, it has occurred to the writer from observation as connected with newspaper work that the public is woefully ignorant of the words of "America" and "The Star Spangled Banner." Wouldn't it be a good scheme to have sets of slides containing the words of these two songs prepared by slide houses or through Mr. Brady's publicity department and have them run each night in every theater with request that the audience join in singing them. We know that the average person only knows about the first verse of "America" and the first two lines of "The Star Spangled Banner."

This plan might help in boosting American spirit, as everybody admits that community singing always has an effect under any circumstances. If "America" was sung every night in every moving picture house a whole lot of fellows would learn the words by heart and be able to sing them when the song was to be sung in the town hall or at any public gathering. It might not help win the war, but it might and at least with several million people singing the song every day it could do no harm and really might do a whole lot of good.

Proprietor Bijou Theater, Pierre, S. D.

ROTHACKER ORGANIZATION PERSONALS.

E. F. Lessner, of the advertising department of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has resigned to report at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill.

John Hahn, assistant secretary of the company, is making an extended trip through the West in the interest of the Rothacker organization. Mr. Hahn will spend several days in Denver at the studios of the National Film Corporation, a day or so at Salt Lake City visiting the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit there, and then will go direct to Los Angeles, where he will devote two or three weeks to personal calls on the Rothacker customers and friends in that territory. Mr. Hahn expects to return to Chicago about May 28.

Watterson R. Rothacker has returned from New York after having attended a convention of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

E. O. Blackburn, of the sales department, has returned from his eastern trip, where he was personally directing the production of a number of multiple reel industrial pictures.

Jack Byrne, of the studio department, is in Minneapolis co-operating with Major Schmidt in the production of a picture to be presented by the United States Fuel Administration.

G. S. Anderson, of the sales department, has just returned from an extensive trip through Southern Illinois, where he was supervising a number of industrial productions.

J. H. GERHARDT JOINS GENERAL.

A recent appointee at the headquarters office of the General Film Company in New York City is J. H. Gerhardt, long known to the theatrical and motion picture field as advertising manager of the New York Dramatic Mirror. Mr. Gerhardt's duties will be in the general sales department and he will be associated with Sales Manager W. F. Rodgers in certain specialized work.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

THE Sidney Drews have made a big hit here, not only in their play "Keep Her Smiling," which all New York will see ere long, but in their patriotic work, gathering in thousands of dollars for Liberty Bonds. The reception given them by The Film Club was a success in all ways, and there was much applause when Mr. Drew announced that they were to return to the screen as soon as the present season ended for their speaking play, which is certainly a fine vehicle for their joint efforts. Mrs. Drew has made a personal success most noteworthy and deserved. They have joined the Film Club and will attend its next meeting. Among the guests at the reception were Mrs. Marcellus Ayer, who runs the exclusive Exeter theater; Mrs. Thomas D. Soriero, wife of the "live wire" manager of the Park, and others well known in social and professional circles.

James W. Gerard's book, so admirably adapted for the screen, is attracting widespread attention as well as doing a splendid piece of educational and patriotic work, enjoyed by thousands daily, in Tremont Temple. The very title gives it authenticity, to say nothing of the presence in every reel of the true-to-life representation of the former Ambassador himself. What a revelation of the dastardly things on foot long before the war broke. So much has been said of this picture that further words seem superfluous and after all those who see it go forth as walking advertisements.

"Hearts of the World," which I have not yet seen, is the talk of the town everywhere, and lines up with "My Four Years in Germany" as great propaganda and an incentive to further endeavor to get after the Beast of Berlin and his gang.

"The Trap" and "Treasure of the Sea" went strong here at the Park, and the latter gave a surprise in that Edith Storey was the only woman in the cast. Here she again showed her personal magnetism. A man asked me if she was not related to Raymond Hatton, so marked is the resemblance. Why such pictures as "The Mystery of the Flying Fish"? "Doug" tried so hard to be funny, but it did not go over a little bit. Too much slapstick.

Madge Kennedy is certainly worth seeing because her work is natural—no striving for effect and not a trace of coarseness. While "The Danger Game" is not a pretentious picture, it has new ideas worked out well, aided and abetted as she is by Tom Moore, who certainly fooled the house, few of us realizing that in reality he was the despised critic of her first and only book, and masquerading as a crook. Not in years have I seen Kate Blancke on the stage, and it was good to note how well she holds her own and before the pitiless camera. Goldwyn has another winner here sure.

"The Tiger Man," a typical Hart play, dealing with western life, Indians, the desert and all that sort of familiar stuff, seemed to please the men, at least, in the audience at the Exeter. Whether or no I am getting a bit satiated, I am at least tired of so much sameness, and I look for some really novel big thing for this capable actor. Supervisor Ince has given atmosphere here "to burn." Jane Novak is excellent, but what we all liked was the horsemanship of the Federal cavalry troopers, shown to advantage here.

Screen players have played an important part here in the Liberty Bond propaganda, the Sidney Drews going to many places with a willingness so characteristic of them. Emmy Wehlen made a hit especially at the Exeter theatre one night, when she spoke and sang Georgie Cohan's "Over the Top." She was a peach, too, in a stunning party gown of flesh color. Alice Brady was here, and members of the various companies playing in town gave their services, to say nothing of Farrar on Saturday, the 27th, when she sang our national anthem on the steps of the Public Library in exclusive Copley Square, where traffic was stopped. She did a big business and was wildly applauded.

Dear directors, please be careful how you use the flag, because at this time when so much is centred on our emblem all eyes are critical. On one of the weeklies we had a scene in Venice, Cal., picturing sundry girls in bathing costumes, doing some patriotic stunt or other, and at a table was a flag covering something entirely out of order, "agin" regulations, good taste, and savored of disrespect. The flag should never be used that way, except in draping the casket of a soldier or sailor, and certainly nothing should be placed upon our flag except the bible. It was a blot on the picture, and all about me were verbal protests over this disregard of the sanctity of "Old Glory." Frequently we see torn and tattered flags on poles in outdoor scenes and an inartistic array indoors. This is a fault easily remedied. If in doubt on the right way to hang it, call in some G. A. R. man or a D. A. R. woman.

Well, well, the only Francis X doing comedy bits was some sight, also a welcome relief from the drawing room and heroic lover roles. "With Neatness and Dispatch" was genuinely funny, a sane story admirably directed and well played, by Bushman and Bayne, and a capable company, including Ricca Allen, who was some man-hater. We anticipate a coming picture with more of this new work for Bushman, thus showing hitherto unsuspected versatility.

* * *

Well I had my first look at Mary Garden on the screen in "The Splendid Sinner," and liked her, though my neighbors did not. What got me strong were the outdoor scenes and the window business between Mary and Hamilton Revelle—great directing here! What a beast the German was all through and so characteristic of his kind. Anders Randolf played the part to the limit. Of course the ending, with a reproduction of the Edith Cavell murder, was gruesome, but gave an excuse for the title, for she was a splendid sinner and atoned to the full.

"By Right of Purchase" is a good Select picture for Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien, Ida Darling and the lamented William Courtleigh, Jr., in, if I mistake not, his last picture. Here we again have Charles Wellesley in a sort of go-between character of much charm, causing a good twist to the finale. We had good reproductions of Hero Land, the patriotic bazaar held in New York, and some military touches worth while, men now in France participating. Charles Miller, formerly of the Hub, shows his accustomed skill as director.

Sunday night recently Mrs. Ayer put on "A Little Patriot," featuring Baby Marie Osborne, who clutches us strong in any picture. This was seen everywhere last fall, but always good for repeats. Once again we see the wonderful colored kid playing opposite. This is an intensely human picture, timely with its patriotism triumphant. Herbert Standing and Marion Warner outdid themselves in this Pathe gem.

We are indebted to the Park for giving us "The Woman and the Law," a splendid offering featuring Miriam Cooper, whom we recall in the "Birth of a Nation," and how she has improved. All in front who are discerning will wonder why they did not cast her for the young girl and not Winifred Allen, as not enough years elapsed for her to become so changed. There is no resemblance whatever between these players and it was ridiculous to palm her off as the girl we saw in first reel. Having seen Mrs. De Saulles I must say that nowhere could the Fox people have found a player who so greatly resembles the unfortunate Chilean beauty. Then, too, the character of La Salle was not one whit overdrawn as some critics aver. This play is compelling and carries a lesson along.

* * *

"One More American" and "The Whispering Chorus" were put on by Mrs. Ayer, and strange to say several Paramount players appeared in both, the most noteworthy one being Raymond Hatton, to my mind one of the best character actors on the screen, always dependable. Guy Oliver is another, also Ernest Joy and James Neill, and wasn't H. B. Carpenter a corking boss of the crook type! In the first named George Beban has a sympathetic part, very human. The Ellis Island scenes were great and disclosed dirty politics too often prevailing (it is said). How we did laugh over the Marionette theatre stunts. Good human picture, sure fire box office success. "The Whispering Chorus," an Artcraft offering well worth while, splendidly cast with Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter, Edythe Chapman, Tully Marshall, Guy Oliver, Ernest Joy, James Neill and others, all good.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Good Advertising.

REALLY good advertising is not always the most expensive, and some fairly expensive advertising is really detrimental. We have in mind some blotters that are being distributed from New York. These are printed up with the weekly program of the house making the distribution, the titles being surcharged with a red ink date for the week. This in itself would be all right, but below is a card reading, "For the return of 24 of these assorted calendar programs from this theater, we will mail you free of charge a beautiful photograph of any star you may select." The address of the New York printer follows. Now no one is under the least obligation to save up these blotters for nearly six months in order to get a photograph. Probably very few will, but most persons who read this offer will be more or less unfavorably impressed by the smallness of the reward as compared with the length of service required. It is a niggardly sort of offer—as bad as the old Sunday School stunt of saving ten white cards to get one blue card, ten blue cards to be exchangeable for one pink one, and five pinks to be good for a ten-cent testament. With Paramount offering to send sets of its stars for ten cents, and with postcards all over the place, the offer of a photograph of unspecified size sounds stingy in the extreme and reacts against the house rather than against the publishers who started this scheme. The blotter program idea is all well and good, and if the price is right it would pay to get these and cut off the offer. Precisely the same idea holds good in other matters. Consider your advertising; and particularly your prize and bonus offers, from all angles. Don't merely argue that because blotter advertising is a good thing, the addition of a photograph prize will make it better. Try and figure how your patron will take the idea of that prize. Only the children, we think, will hold the programs for a half year; and the blotters are not primarily intended for the children these days. This is another point to be remembered. Your advertising that carries a bonus offer is apt to be snapped up by the children and never find its way to the adults. In this particular scheme, moreover, it requires that the house at least make a six-months' contract for the service, and this means a staleness in advertising that will be the reverse of remunerative. Novelty advertising should be varied. A novelty is such no longer at the end of six months, yet, if the novelty is withdrawn, even those who are not saving up will feel that the withdrawal is made to avoid the awards. When you make a bonus offer, make one that is generous, make one that will terminate before the interest does, and plan so that the gift or concession will apply to those who seek to reach and not be gathered in by the children and undesirables.

Well, Here's Mr. Wall!

S. E. Wall has written in at last, and he's a reg'lar city feller now, being located in Columbus, Ohio, instead of Plain City. He writes:

> After a protracted silence, please allow me to stand up and remark that since you last heard from me I have sold Wall's theater in Plain City, Ohio, and I have come down to Columbus and am learning to be a regular city feller, and at the same time directing the destinies of the "West Broad Street theater," a very prosperous, and one of the oldest houses in the city.
> I am enclosing herewith a few of our vest pocket programs; while they contain nothing new in composition or makeup, I am making every effort to put out a snappy, readable card, and I will appreciate any suggestions that you may make that will improve them.
> As stated above, this theater is an old-timer, and while it was built for a theater, it was before the day of the spacious lobby, and one of my big problems is to properly dress the front without overdoing it. One of the first things I did was to discontinue the use of all six-sheets, and we only use an occasional three-sheet, depending almost entirely on one-sheets and photos and banners.
> I am glad to say that Wall's theater in Plain City is prospering under the new management, and I still have the more or less honor of having it known as Wall's, even though I have severed my connection therefrom.

We knew that Mr. Wall would hit the big places sooner or later, for he was built that way, but it is good to hear of an old friend's success, and we wish Mr. Wall all good luck. We can offer no suggestions on the program. It seems to be good as it stands. It is 2½ by 4, with a most attractively set front page. It is not ornate or elaborate, but it is neat and workmanlike and you realize that it is good without being able to realize that it is because of the avoidance of fancy typefaces and ornamentation. There is a smart paragraph at the bottom of the tiny page, with the inside pages given to brief, but bright, bits about the current bill, and the back page for foreign advertising, to cover the cost.

Matinee Work.

Rothapfel suggests that a good scheme to build matinee business is to give the tickets to charitable organizations free and let them take the money they get. It's a good idea, but it is a better one to split fifty-fifty and let them believe that the tickets have some real value. And a better scheme than that is to sell, or even give, the tickets to a big dry goods store—to be given to the store's patrons—and make the store advertise the matinees heavily. There are many more schemes in Picture Theater Advertising, but these are two of the best, only never let the charity workers get free tickets.

Even Up to Three Inches.

Clifford A. Clifford, who evidently does not read this department as closely as he says he does, sends in some advertisements from the Utica (N. Y.) papers with the remark that he believes that this is the first time anything from his home town has been sent this department. He is mistaken. We have several times reproduced things from the Avon program, and have had stuff from some of the other houses. From what Mr. Carroll says, Utica must be as dead as it was fifteen years ago, when we were there last to look over Wilmer and Vincent's Orpheum. He writes that there was a time when the houses used some display, but that now they are content to take the "inch amusement ads," a local term for inch spaces which sell for $1.50 and carry a two and a half-inch reading notice. But he adds that the De Luxe and Alhambra, operated by the same management, take "as much as three inches for each house" on occasion. There are eight of these houses, including the two vaudeville houses and the burlesque house. They run down a column, but to give a better formed cut we have placed them in pairs. There is no proper space for display and presumably the reader is looked to to make plain the jumble of the advertisement. The readers are written by the staff men and are usually intelligently done, but they are written to length, as determined by the size of the advertisement, and this cramps the writers a little. Utica seems to be in a pretty bad way. If you like pictures you can find out what there is to be seen, but there is no special urge to go and get the picture habit, and this should be the greater work done by advertising.

"Getting Folksey."

Lately we expressed the belief that the advertising of the Olympia theater, New Bedford, Mass., was a bit too stiff. They announced, but they did not interest. It was the work of F. H. Purrington, an agency man, who regarded the work more or less as an "account" than a labor of love. He felt that if he turned out a showy, brilliant advertisement he was doing his best, but we pointed out that there was more than this needed. Being an advertising man he got the point, and in sending in some new samples he writes:

> You stepped on my foot at a time when I believe in doing so you gave valuable service to the Olympia, for since then I have striven to get "folksey with the fans."

We like that phrase immenesly. It means a lot. It means just what advertising should be—particularly in the small towns. He no longer remarks that he has "Saved by Her Sufferings" for Monday and Tuesday, leaving it up to you to come or not, as you darned well please. He tells his stories in a chatty mood; friendly, but not familiar. He neither takes it for granted that the reader is a complete ass, nor read up all the current productions.

Was Not Discourteous.

Telling of how he advertised Fatty Arbuckle at the Liberty, Long Beach, Cal., Verne Wickham recently wrote that he had some thousands of persons standing in the rain, and we suggested that it would have been better to have opened the doors to let them in ahead of time. Mr. Wickham rises to explain that the reason he could not do that was because the house was already filled by the early birds, which is an ample and reasonable explanation. Mr. Wickham sends in a copy of a weekly program they get out. They get the first three pages, and the advertisement on the back page pays all of the cost. Think that over some of you who send in a program more than half advertising, and who write that the ads partly defray the cost. Mr. Wickham wants to know why it is if they are so good that Ruff and Hundred Per cent. Fullerton are always "at Liberty." To get all of this joke you must remember that they both work for a Liberty theater. Tee-hee!

Picking for the Patron.

The Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, La., has a new wrinkle. On its first page Mr. Coe prints "We especially recommend to you this week," and follows with what he considers the one or two best bets of the week. At first glance this might seem to be a bad idea, in that it will make big business for those days at the expense of the rest of the week, but this is not the case. We think that it will bring in many who might hesitate about going, through lack of familiarity with stars and plays, but who will go if asured a better-than-usual play, and, of course, Mr. Coe picks the best plays to recommend and not those that show on the dull nights. Mr. Coe knows that the confidence of his public is worth more than the sale of a few extra seats one week, and his patrons know that what he says he means.

Not Shellman's.

J. M. Shellman writes that the small cards of the Parkway, Baltimore, Md., which we have spoken of several times lately, are not his own, but are the work of Mr. Depkin. We are glad to be able to give credit where due, for the Parkway cards are unusually good.

Mr. Shellman is now giving attention to the New theater and uses white cards 4¼ by 6¼ printed on one side with the program, and on the other with some house talk. The house slogan is "two minutes from every department store," which speaks more for the location of the house than for the extensiveness of Baltimore's shopping district. We think that Mr. Shellman makes a mistake in trying to load down his program spaces with too much argument. The cut shows the general arrangement of the program. Another sample carries a line cut that does not help the argument any, since it means nothing, and does sadly cramp the already limited space. In all the samples sent there is entirely too much talk for the space. It would be better to say less and mean more and to avoid such grandiloquent phrases as "By special arrangement with the Frohman Amusement Corporation," which does not impress and does take up two lines of space.

Got Out Its Own.

Disregarding the ready-mades supplied by Paramount, the Empress, Fremont, Neb., got out its own announcement for Chapin in his Lincoln cycle. This was a note size sheet, sent out in a square envelope. It was printed on the first and third pages only, with blue ink and a red border, to let in the American flag in place of the wording. There is no greeting, but the text starts off with:

YOUR FRIEND
"ABE" LINCOLN

"Abe" Lincoln would have been your friend, mighty glad to come to your house for Sunday dinner, and all afternoon he would have entertained the folks—had them laughing and crying in turns—with stories of his dramatic life.

You can't invite Lincoln to dinner now. But you can do better. You can see enacted on the screen in "The Son of Democracy" these stories that he told. You can see the boy Abe in his log home, his strange, sometimes humorous, often pathetic adventures. You can see him as president, interpreted by the living image of Abraham Lincoln, Benjamin Chapin.

We like the tone of the announcement, which is in keeping with the simplicity of the greeting. There are no meaningless superlatives, but merely the honest, straightforward announcement of a series which it is evident that the management believes to be out of the ordinary. This carries far more conviction than would adjective piled upon adjective. One thousand were sent to a selected mailing list and assuredly must have brought returns.

Another House of Mercy.

Frederick Mercy, of Yakima, Washington, has opened his third house—the Liberty—and H. A. Gillespie, his publicity man, sends in a page advertisement in which the three houses are announced. He also sends a house program, an eight-pager, the outside four being a colored stock cover with a patriotic design that lends itself well to the house name. The program serves for a month, the middle page carrying the two changes to the week in four columns, two to the page. The advertisement carries the three Yakima houses of Mr. Mercy. It will be noticed that each house has a distinctive lettering for the name. That of the Liberty is a sort of basket-work and the Empire is a crime, while the usual shaded letter does very well for the Majestic. We cannot understand this apparently growing craze for the style of lettering shown in the Empire. Whether it is black or white or two or three colors it is plain bad. The house name should, above all other things, stand out from all advertising, and we are surprised to see Mr. Gillespie offending with a style of lettering that would disgrace a drunken sign painter. This is the third or fourth instance of similar lettering to come to our attention within the week, and it is something that cannot well be laid to German propagandists, though it seems to have spread all over the country with alarming suddenness.

Ambiguous.

The Regent, Bay City, Mich., is a new house with a seating capacity of 1,400, under the management of Fred B. Williams. To announce the opening a heavy "hand-made" card was used printed up with a cordial invitation to be present at the opening, but there is nothing to show whether the invitation is to come as a guest or a paying patron, and that cuts the value of the card down very considerably. Those who come expecting to be guests of the house will be disappointed, and therefore offended, if they are not, and some who might have gone will regret it if they find that the card was an invitation and not an advertisement. Too much care cannot be given this point. Invitations should carry the line, "this card will admit one", or more, as the case may be, while a simple advertisement should announce the opening of the house, but not "invite" the recipient to come down and step up to the box office. The house is designed to handle combinations as well as pictures.

Don't Race.

We notice that S. L. Rothapfel frequently advises his inquirers to race their show a little to get into a time limit. This is the most vicious advice it is possible to give. Mr. Rothapfel would not advise anyone to sandbag the passer-by and take fifteen cents out of his pocket, yet when you sell a man entertainment and race the reels you are robbing him just as surely as though you used a piece of lead pipe. Don't race. Deliver the goods and make business out of satisfied patrons.

Gone Bad.

Sydney S. Pollock, the boy press of the Strand, Tarrytown, is off out good books. He wants us to tell him how to make the public understand what a bargain they are getting when they are offered ten or twelve reels and four or five vaudeville acts for ten and fifteen cents. It just plain can't be done, Sydney. Four or five acts of rotten vaudeville would be bad enough by itself, but pile on a three days' supply of pictures for the same admission and the public is not getting entertainment, it is getting mental indigestion, and we refuse to aid and abet any scheme to rope the unsuspecting public in on any such torture. Give them a good five-reeler, a scenic, a news reel, and a comedy, play them well with three or more musicians, and you'll please, but cheap and nasty vaudeville, the sort that has to work for the salary a picture house can afford to pay, has no place alongside a first class feature.

Ruff, Please Note.

Ralph Ruffner's "Now, right NOW" turns up in a trade advertisement in the Film Forecast, the Rowland and Clark house organ in Pittsburgh. We presume that the advertising agent helped the advertiser to the line as a help in getting the advertisement, but Ruff surely is traveling some.

Logic.

If you can't sell five reels of film why get the idea you can sell ten? Don't double up the show; improve the quality, improve the music improve the house.

He Knows It Pays.

Daniel Connors, of Piper's opera house, Virginia City, Nev., writes:

> Enclosed clippings seem to be effective. Business is improving every week. Continual hammering—two days' showing in the evening papers. Now I know it pays to advertise. I can lay out an ad., but the trouble is to get the proper type. This work is done in the old Daily Enterprise office, which was founded and edited by Mark Twain, and half the type in the office seems to be the same metal he used, but worn through constant usage.

Piper's opera house is as historic as the Enterprise, for both are relics of the time when Virginia City was one of the queens of the West. The town is a shadow of its former self, but here is a hustler who goes out and advertises intelligently, and persistently, and he finds it pays. And he sends this message to others: "Some of you down and outs get out and advertise. It pays." Surely it does. It always has and it always will. Most advertisers are handicapped by having to get along with type only ten or fifteen years old. Mr. Connors has to get the best he can out of type that was new when Mark Twain was young, but he gets the best he can, and these advertisements stand up well on the page; generally the front page. By way of a reading notice for Hell's Hinges, Mr. Connors got this up:

HELL'S HINGES TOO HOT FOR THE MISSIONARY.

Minister (At R. R. Depot): "How can I get to Hell's Hinges?"

Alkali Bill: "Why, take the Devil's Fork stage to Steamboat Springs, then go up Hell-pit creek to Fire Hill; on the Geiger Griddle y' get the Past Redemption stage to Sulphur Divide; the Dead Man's Point outfit will put you across Purgatory Flats and through the Satan Tunnel; then by way of Devil's Gate and Belch——

Minister (To Depot Agent): "Wh-when is the next train East?"

Alkali Bill: "Big Bill Hart's up there at Peppers Opera House this week 'n I hear'n he's goin' to burn the place to th' ground."

With the exception of Hell's Hinges, all of the places named are near Virginia City and are actual places and not merely fanciful names. If you play the Hart picture on a return engagement this clip might be useful for press work. Don't kick about bad business. Go advertise and make it better. If you can't advertise, get a copy of Picture Theater Advertising and learn how.

Follows the Fashions.

The Dixwell theater, New Haven, Conn., follows the fashions. The advertising agent (who forgets to sign his letters) gets all the new wrinkles from the department and puts them to work. He has Jay Emanuel's advertising envelopes beaten, because he does his own press work and can print in smaller quantities, so the envelope cards apply to the week and keep right down to date. Some of the samples are excellent. One is a blotter with a calendar and a logotype dropped out for the name of the feature the blotter is to advertise, but in one envelope card an effort to advertise two films brings disaster. Across the top is the house name. Running down either side is "Tuesday," and across the bottom "Passion Play" with "Shown here Friday" in a very small type. The Tuesday and Passion Play are in a distinctive type, and one naturally reads it as a whole, being at a loss to understand why Tuesday's Passion Play is to be shown Friday. But within the square formed by the types is a stock cut for The Bull's Eye, and, in time, one arrives at the fact that The Bull's Eye will be shown on Tuesday and the Passion Play on Good Friday. It is a mistake to use a highly distinctive letter for parts of two titles. From their very distinction they will be read together. The weekly program is a card 3 by 5½ inches. If the days were dated and were pulled into the margin to make some break between the various days, the effect would be better, but the card is of a convenient size and not too full of type. On the whole the set of stuff is creditable to the house, and the printer does his share well. Even a small press is a handy thing to have around the house. It will work and work hard.

Both Bad.

Here are two advertisements from Waterville, Maine, that go to the opposite extremes of badness. That for the Haines theater is loaded down with a mass of junk and as though they did not have enough to do to carry three acts of so-called vaudeville along with a good feature and a good comedy, they spoil the whole business by actually featuring the coming attraction over the showing one; a display of advertising intelligence that is amazing It would have been better to have ignored the current attraction entirely and to have devoted the entire space to Miss Pickford, if they wanted to get all the business for her, but to give her the cut over the current attraction is amateurish. The City opera house is just as bad the other way. With all the advantage of open space and concentrated effort, we get such convincing lines as "News picture, the best ever," and "wonderful serial," and we'll bet that Kelliher is talking about the business going to the dogs instead of realizing that it is his own laziness that makes business poor. Very few persons will be attracted to the house by any such apathetic advertising as this.

Something Wrong.

The Parkway, Baltimore, gets out a galley sheet headed "What a great dramatic says about The Blue Bird." Then it reproduces an article by Zit. We are afraid that the Parkway is trying to kid someone, but we can't tell whether it is Zit or the rest of us.

Put Glue on the Seat.

The Liberty, Long Beach, Cal., seems to be a slippery place for press agents. Ray Bagley slipped into Keystone publicity, and now Verne Wickham writes that he is going to slip into khaki. Meantime he sends in His Son of Democracy advertising. At the Liberty they made this the feature, with a rebooked Triangle Fairbanks for the second attraction. The idea is not at all a bad one if it is made clear that the Lincoln Cycle is not a five-part film. The Liberty is running a kiddie show Saturday mornings at which the admission is six cents for children and parents free save for the war tax. This is something new.

Clear Synopses.

NOBODY cares how good a plot may seem to you. You must make someone else appreciate its value before you can hope to make a sale. Very few of the synopses offered for sale convey to the reader even a hint of what the real story may be. The author has an idea. He becomes filled with it. He lives it and sleeps with it for a few days, and then he dashes it off on the machine and hustles it out to some producing company. He does not realize that often he does not even give the skeleton of the idea. He cannot understand why the synopsis should read flat and uninteresting to the editor. He knows the idea to be good. He complains because others cannot share his appreciation of its merits. He does not realize that the greater part of his story still remains in his own mind, and in his own mind alone. He reads the gem over. It sounds all right. There is all the fire and action in the story as he planned it, and he does not realize that each time he reads his own mind supplies the deficiencies in the script; that from his own knowledge of the facts he reconstructs the poorly written sentences into a glowing plot. He thinks that the editors must see the story as he does; never realizing that they cannot supply the touches that really make the story good—if it is good.

Some writers cannot get their ideas down on paper. They have vivid imaginations, but they lack the education, the practice or the knack of putting their ideas into words competent to convey full meaning. In a word, they cannot write, and they do not realize their deficiency. They laboriously grind out involved, but meaningless, sentences, supposing that they are giving the fullest expression to the plot. They read over these phrases and they sound all right because the mind supplies what the script lacks, and they send out a dead, meaningless script that stands absolutely no chance of a sale to anyone. They know what they are trying to get on the paper and to them the sentence "Jack and Tom have a terrific fight" suggests a struggle that might sell the picture if properly put into words, but they fail to tell the editor what there is to this fight that makes it stand out above the thousand and one other fights. One smashing situation may sell a story, but the situation must be told so clearly that the editor can get the author's idea and share his enthusiasm. It is not necessary to tell every minor detail of the fight, but it is necessary to explain the situation or the action which serves to make the fight notable.

In other words, most synopsis writers lack the faculty of intelligent expression and fail to cultivate it because they fail to realize the lack of this ability. To them their work seems good. They cannot realize that to others it may appear amateurish and incompetent in the extreme.

Some writers could only go around and describe their ideas verbally they might make sales where now they find only failure, but since it is not possible to gain access to widely separated editorial offices, the only thing to do is either to cultivate clearness of expression or to join forces with someone who can intelligently express ideas.

There is no particular reason why a person with a good education and average common sense should not, in time, acquire this facility of expression, and yet so few synopses offer well-told stories. They do not, as a rule, follow even the simplest rules of construction. They ramble all over the narrative, but they make no orderly presentation of facts and give no real aid to any person who might be so foolish as to attempt to make a continuity from the jumble of facts.

The proper synopsis should be laid out in an orderly manner. It should commence with the punch paragraph, in which there should be a hint of the merits of the story. This punch paragraph is an essential. The editor cannot be asked to wade through from three to five thousand words on the off chance that the story may be good. He must be given a hint as to the nature of the story from the opening paragraph, since the straight synopsis must present the facts in more or less orderly fashion without too much elaboration of literary ornamentation. A good model for the punch would be an adaptation of the introduction to the stories; notably the opening full-length story, used by the Popular Magazine.

Following the punch, the story should be told clearly and intelligibly, not as a fiction story, but as an assemblage of facts upon which the film story is based. It must move from the primary cause, or beginning, through the middle action, to the ending. If, as sometimes happens, the real beginning of the story is visioned in on the third or fourth reel, the facts of the beginning should first be noted, and then, at the proper time a note should be made that "Franklin tells Nell the story of her origin, as noted in the beginning of the story." It may be all right to keep the audience in the dark for so long, but it is fatal to try and abuse an editor's curiosity in a half-told tale.

But while full detail is required, an excess of detail is apt to be as bad as a lack of material. The synopsis that is padded with a lot of useless suggestions to the reconstructor and the director is even more of an offense than the incomplete story. The latter is merely the result of ignorance where the suggestions indicate an excessive lack of modesty. Some writers are prone to make suggestions that are utterly without value and which serve merely to indicate the writer's lack of knowledge. It does not, for example, help any to say that Nell should be about five feet four inches tall, have red hair and a pug nose. Let the studio staff fit the story to their own players. Nor does it help any to tell the director that it would make a pretty light effect to throw a spot on the picture of Jack's mother just as he is about to rob the safe. The director knows, or thinks he knows, more about light effects than any author, and he will not welcome these suggestions should they get that far. Tell your story. Go into the broad details of the big situations, make every factor clear, but be careful neither to under nor to overwrite. Synopsis writing is as much a special art as continuity writing, and from some angles it is more difficult in that the author has a more limited medium at his command. Study synopsis writing before you undertake to write them and you can buy War Savings Stamps with the postage you would otherwise waste on your stuff.

Get Vision.

Learn to see things differently. Look at things from a viewpoint out of the common. Hosts of writers would have seen in Rostand's Cyrano only a modern punch. Rostand looked deeper and sought the mighty soul of the man beneath the grotesque exterior. The successful writer is merely he who looks at things as other men do not. It is this faculty which makes his point of view of greater interest than ours, and, therefore makes us listen with interest to his views.

Cut Out the Knocks.

Many writers have wasted three perfectly good pennies, not to mention some time and a sheet of letter paper, to tell how poor some of the current war productions are. We fail to see wherein they should derive either pleasure or profit from such criticisms. We know that some of the studio-made scripts, thrown together, have been pretty poor, but that has no bearing upon the general topic of synopsis writing. It is a poor story, but it's too late to correct the trouble, and if the complainants were engaged to write a similar story to order they probably would do very much worse. Don't concern yourself with how poor the stories of other authors are. If you give enough time to trying to make your own stories good, you have about all you can look after. Mind your own business. That's a day's job.

Work a String.

Once more the old inquiry comes in as to whether it is better to work a single story to its completion or to have two or more in hand at one time. Methods of work differ so that it is not always possible to indicate the best line of action, but there is more to be said in favor of the string than for the single-story-to-a-finish idea. With a dozen stories in various stages of completion, it is possible to work on one when another does not interest, and with a choice of subjects it is more likely that one will be found to suit the current mood. More than this, there is less danger of going stale on the single idea. It often happens that a really good idea in the original is refined and polished until it loses all its spontaneity and freshness, merely because the tired brain works mechanically and without interest. The same amount of labor, multiplied by twelve, and applied to twelve stories, would give better stories with more life and ginger to them.

It is an excellent plan to have stories in all stages of growth constantly on hand. Work them up to the point of a full synopsis, then hold them for a few weeks and look them over again. Write a second full synopsis, and a third and a fourth, if you have perseverance, retaining all copies, and then, from the combined scripts, make your final draft that shall include the best points of all the developments. Meantime work on the others and get the first idea out of your head so that each time you approach it it may seem fresh, if not new, to you.

But if you find that you are so constituted mentally that you must complete one story before you go on to the next—if you have a single-track mind, then, by all means, run your trains over that single track.

Post Office Envelopes.

About every so often some young author discovers that the Post Office Department sells envelopes cheaper than does the stationer, and he rushes into print, if he can, to spread the glad tidings. The post office authorities assuredly do sell envelopes at attractively low prices and they are good stock for those prices; better than could be obtained from the local stationer for perhaps double the sum, but it is no great profit to save half or three-quarters of a cent on an envelope and lose the script; yet these white envelopes are unfit to carry large scripts and break open in the mails with frequency. It is better to pay a dollar or so for some real kraft envelopes than to lose a script or two in the mails. Such things are false economy. Stick to kraft or manila. It is cheaper in the end.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Progressive Man.

A Massachusetts operator writes as follows:

Am unable to make chart March 17 issue or table, page 141 of handbook, agree with practice because of inability to get condenser back 22 inches from film. However, I get a well-lighted picture. Would appreciate any suggestions you may offer for improvement. I believe it is one of the duties of the projectionist to adopt any improvement designed to minimize light waste or improve screen results. Have worked in many operating rooms, hence am acquainted with the laxity of a large percentage of operators. Assure you I have tried to embody into my outfit as many as possible of those little things which go for the improvement of the screen result. Wish to thank you for your efforts in our behalf and for the benefit I have derived therefrom. Like many another who thinks that even a fool is accounted wise if he holds his peace (But on that basis the world would not advance in knowledge very fast.—Ed.) I will ask that you do not give my name or address. Some time ago there appeared an article describing an intermittent movement. I enjoyed the study of it and was pleased to see at its end the word "Continued." But alas, it never was. I assume some strong and strange influence prevented its completion. In this I am reminded of the International Sunday School Committee, whose duty it is to select texts for discussion AND whose duty it is to select only those of admonition and temperance; doctrine and principles must NOT be touched upon for fear of the cobwebs. (You hit pretty close to the mark, but not quite. The subject was not continued because the next installment was never prepared and I was willing to let it drop by reason of the fact that acrimonious discussion loomed large, which would not, it seemed to me, accomplish any good and might do considerable harm. But you are wrong in supposing this department or its editor wears a muzzle of any sort. It is because we don't that we have gone through some red-hot fights during the past nine years.—Ed).

Have changed shutters many times. My latest is in proportion to that last mentioned in the department, and it is a marvel. Pattern enclosed. (Cannot see how you get by without travel ghost with a 56° main blade. You have a total of 56 plus 37.5 plus 37.5 equals 131° of total blade width [3 winger] and 88 5/6 plus 88 5/6 plus 51⅓ equals 229° of opening. for heaven's sake what kind of intermittent are you using?—Ed.) Cannot understand why you do not enthuse over double shutters. Am using them on both machines. (Oh! Maybe the pattern is one blade of a double, huh?—Ed.) The double shutter shows a gain of 21 per cent. of light on two-blade and 33 per cent. on three-blade. In my experiments I have noticed that flicker is partly controlled by film density, about 15 to 20 per cent. of light necessary to penetrate the average film. My thought is that it is the light used above this amount which need balancing with light and dark periods, and it is evident the latest pattern shown in the department is better balanced than any other shown to date. (Either you have a queer idea or I do not understand you. Better explain. Maybe what you really have in mind has value.—Ed.) It is only with attached shutter pattern that I have been able to secure what might be called flickerless pictures at 60 feet per minute, though we have long since dropped that speed. We now run 70 and over. Have seen no comment on speed as per your request some time ago. Sixty is too slow nowadays. In fact 65 to 70 is nearer the mark for modern features. I do not see why you disapprove of speed indicators. The good chauffeur may make a good guess at his speed, but the speedometer will confirm his guess. (No similarity. The projectionist has the best speedometer possible in the action of the actors. If he watches a speedometer he wont watch the screen, and the fact that one scene appears at its best at, say, 70 is no proof that the one preceding or following will do so. When we have absolutely uniform, standardized camera speed we can then depend upon speedometers for perfect projection speed, and not before.—Ed.) All producers now have a definite rate of taking (They have NOT.—Ed.), and if the actors are acting the scene at its best and the projectionist transfers that same speed to the screen nothing better can be done. (Absolutely right, and that is precisely why I object to the speedometer. Taking speed varies all the way from as low as 55 to as high as 75, though both these are extreme, and a variation of as much as five is found in different scenes of even high-class features.—Ed.) If we all try to work out the individual conception of how fast a given scene should be interpreted there will be as many different speeds of projection of a given scene as there are operators. (I think not. The projectionist is presumed to, and must study action, and I do not believe the average man will make any very great error in judging the correct speed for proper interpretation once it has been made clear to him that he must produce naturalness of action or lose his job.—Ed.) The best results are usually obtained by those who take interest in their work and study it. I use prevention and precaution in liberal amount, and am able to command 37.5 per cent. more salary than my predecessor, with the manager better satisfied too. And now a bit of "shop notes" for Hooverizing: Old lamp lugs (may mean either terminal lugs or carbon jaws.—Ed.) may be made as good as new by heating to cherry red and dropping in cold water. Then polish them. Old brass gas tips make excellent holders for Silver Tip carbons. Insert them in carbon jaws and just set the carbon stub into them. The stubs may be burned down to ½ inch length. (Does not sound very good to me, but maybe. Try it anyhow.—Ed.) On the wooden hub of a double reel, fasten a 6 or 7-inch film can. This will save a good many turns of the rewinder when film is being taken off the small reel to be rewound on double reels. (Suppose he means remove one side of reel, attach the film can so as to let its round side form a new, enlarged reel hub, and then replace the reel side, thus making a small hub reel into a large hub one.—Ed.)

The brother sends pattern of an upper carbon jaw shield which he says is a "wonder." It is a round piece of sheet metal, about 2 inches in diameter, with an extension for attaching and a hole for the carbon. Evidently it is held against or just below the under side of the carbon jaw, and protects it from the heat. He also advocates the lapping of the film upon itself in rewinding instead of placing its end under the reel spring. In fact he advocates the doing away with all reel springs except one for the lower magazine. He sends in measurements of his optical system, which indicate as very good condition, except that condenser is too close to film.

From South Dakota.

Frank M. Olson, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., who is a progressive, wide-awake operator, has the following to say:

Must thank Mr. Bates for good word he gave me Jan. 9 issue. It came as a surprise; also wish to extend thanks to you, Mr. Richardson, for your kindly comment. I think, however, Mr. Bates should have mentioned the rest of our theaters while he was at it. The reader who did not know would suppose we had but two. With your permission I will name the rest of them. We have six, viz.: The Orpheum (vaudeville), The Colonial, pictures only, of which Ray Touney is chief projectionist. Touney is a very practical man who is delivering excellent results with two Powers 6-As and a Fort Wayne motor generator set. The Colonial is the largest picture house in the city. Its seating capacity is, I understand, more than 800. The Strand comes next, in point of size, seating 700. I am in charge of projection, as set forth in former article by Mr. Bates. Have two Simplex, which are running just grand. Have a Fort Wayne motor generator set and a Gold King screen. Next comes the Princess, which has a good equipment—Two Powers 6Bs, Fort Wayne M-G set and Minusa screen. Mr. Van is chief projectionist. He is a professional, and has forgotten more than I will ever know. His screen results are all that Mr. Bates said, and more, too. Next comes the Jewell, with Hal Reany chief projectionist. Reany is a very clever man. He has two Motiographs a Fort Wayne M-G set and a Minusa screen. The Olympia is next, Harry Vogt chief projectionist. Vogt is getting good screen results with a. c.

He has two Powers 6As, and delivers the real goods on a Minusa screen.

Personally it has always been my aim to do my work well. Have been in the profession a number of years, but still consider myself in the light of an amateur. Have studied deeply, and find that the more one studies the more one must study. I have been a regular and appreciative reader of the department for a long time, also have the handbook, Hallberg's Motion Picture Electricity, Hawkens, and other books, bearing on projection. Would not part with a single volume at any price if it could not be replaced. I have gained very much through our department. Always am waiting for the next, and if it is late you may take it from me there is one good big squawk from yours truly.

At present I am working in one of the best houses in the state, and for one of the best managers I have ever been with. Not once has he asked me to "speed 'em up" because he was holding them out (Evidence that he is a manager.—Ed.). He is no speed maniac. Leaves the item of projection speed to me, and I use my best endeavors to secure naturalness of action on the screen. Am sending a few photos. If you want more dope on motor drive will send it.

Sure I want the motor drive dope. Why not? What advantage do you claim for the change you have made in it? I compliment you, neighbor Olson. Two things are evident, viz.: You either never owned a hammer, or have thrown it away; also you are a progressive man, and one whose head is not swelled. My compliments to you and to the other Sioux City projectionists. You will note that I have changed the word 'operator" to projectionist whenever it occurred in your letter. The term "operator" is confusing. We have telegraph operators, sewing machine operators, several brands of "operators" in clothing factories and shoe factories, telephone operators, etc., through a long line. It seems to me the title "projectionist" is more dignified, more descriptive, and in every way better. This department therefore has adopted it, and will continue its use unless some one can suggest a better one. And now I return evil words for good. Sorry, but it is necessary.

That bright clock face is b-a-d. Cut a round disc of black paper the size of the clock face. Make a hole in its center for the hand post and a straight cut from hole to edge. Now have a sign painter paint numerals, in proper position, in WHITE on the black, slip it under the hands and attach to clock face with liquid glue. Next cut out of white oilcloth clock hands one-half inch wide and attach them to the metal clock hands in any convenient way—glue, for instance. The audience will then only see the numerals and hands, but will see much more plainly than they now can, since white on black shows better than black on white. There is not as much black border as there should be around your screen. A 2-foot border would give much better contrast. There is a great deal of orchestra light, which is very bad for the eyes of the audience, and for the picture as well. No ray of white light should be allowed to meet the eyes of the audience except the light from the screen itself. That is a fundamental requirement of the motion picture theater. Now don't feel hurt. These comments are made wholly in the best interest of your manager. From what you tell me he is a real manager and will appreciate the importance of them and will, I believe, accept them in the spirit of kindly helpfulness in which they are intended.

From Australia.

Australia sails the following message to our shores:

Hope you won't mind my butting in from the other side of the world. Have been a subscriber to the World for some time now, but they don't come as regularly as I would wish. (The German and his little submacoward. Ed.) Have been running two Pathe Exhibition Model projectors, which same have given good service for two years past. Am now having them overhauled, as they began to show wear in the bearings. Have just installed a Power's 6-B, which gives us a three-machine installation, leaving one for emergency. (Very wise move. Ed.) Thus far the Power's (No. 25,504) has proven very satisfactory. Had some trouble in fitting our two-inch-outside-diameter lens on account of spindle just below lens opening in front plate. This seems an error in construction. Surely they are not confining their machine to the use of a single diameter projection lens! Am showing what we conceive to be a fairly good picture. After supplying you with data as to local condition would be thankful if you can offer suggestion for improvement. Have two Pheonix motor-generator sets, direct coupled. The generator are 70 volt, 80 ampere. Use each set on alternate shifts. They are connected through a D. P. change-over switch (presume you mean D. P. D. T. switch. Ed.). Use 60 amperes with a 65 volt arc. Projection distance 110 feet. White calcimine screen. Use a 4.5 focus (E. F., presumably. Ed.), objective of 1 11/16 inch opening; a Dallmyer. From aperture to lens is 2 11/16 inches. From aperture to center of condenser, 15 inches. From crater to condenser, 3⅞ inches. Coudenser meniscus bi-convex. Carbons, 22 mm upper and 16 mm lower. Doubtless you will say our picture is far too large (You haven't given its width, but it figures out just a fraction under 23 feet, assuming your aperture to be 15/16 inch, which it most likely is not. However, the picture certainly is well above 20 feet. Ed.), but the public demands the large picture. One would go broke trying to convince them that the smaller picture is better, so that settles that. Please just credit this to "Australia," this for private reasons.

No, the fact that friend public "demand" an unreasonable size in pictures does not necessarily "settle it" at all. If a child demands unlimited candy, knowing it will be injurious, we deny it him or her regardless of the squawk. Such huge pictures are BAD for the public. They place an unnecessary and heavy strain on the eyesight, and sooner or later it will tell in a gradual weakening of the eyesight of the people of your country. This being true the size of pictures should be limited by law. Under any ordinary conditions there is no excuse for anything larger than an eighteen-foot picture, though a twenty-footer might be permitted under certain conditions, one of which is that no seat be placed a less distance from the screen than 25 feet. Given a properly projected picture of proper size, with all seats a proper minimum and maximum distance from the screen, according to picture size, there is no more eyestrain in a motion picture than there is in reading a newspaper. Of course, if you establish a suitable minimum distance for seats from the screen, one of the main objections to over-size disappears. As to your conditions, why, with 60 amperes d. c. and a meniscus bi-convex, condenser lenses close together, I would recommend the following: One 7½ meniscus and one 7½ bi-convex, with about 17½ inches from center of condenser to aperture. I say "about" because the condition falls half way between the above combination and one 7½ and one 8½. I have chosen the lesser combination as locating the crater a trifle closer to the lens, but it will alter the condenser distance somewhat—further away, if I rightly remember. You can tell by your spot, which should be round and well defined. If it is in tolerably sharp focus at the cooling plate it will be about right at the film. A spot in sharp focus at the film shows white ghost at screen, due to crater being in focus at the screen. I think you will find this line-up will produce somewhat better results, though your condition is pretty good as it is.

Glad to hear from you at any time. This department is for the use of its readers all over the world. Oh, yes, I nearly forgot. As to the Power projector not accommodating a two-inch-outside-diameter projection lens without filing a flat spot for the spindle below the lens opening you are using a lens of unusual diameter for its focal length, but even so I would have thought the clearance sufficient. I have referred the matter to the Power's Company for attention.

It Is to Laugh.

In a certain western citylette a sewing machine salesman purchased and reopened a closed picture theater, thus at one fell swoop blossoming forth as an exhibitor and paving the way to easy wealth. His first act was to contract for some cheap service; the kind which has lived its useful life, outlived it and merely continues to exist as a horrible example. The kind in which the hero enters at one side sedately, and bing! just like that, he is a hundred feet away, or he starts up stairs and just simply vanishes at about the third step. The kind that is so bad that the inspectors slice out whole sections. You know the kind, I guess. Well, the sewing machine artist, who was his own cashier, gazed pop-eyed at the screen between nickle harvesting stunts for a time. Finally the sudden materializations and disappearances of actors became too numerous for even him. He jammed the ticket selling window shut, rushed up to the operating room and bawled out to his minion: "Say, who in hell told you you were an operator! Get busy and keep them actors from jumping on and off the screen or I'll get an operator that will!"

James C. Quin, of the El Paso, Texas, film exchange is authority for the above, and Quin bears a reputation, as do all film men, of sticking closely to the truth on all occasions and—there you are.

Willful Waste in Picture Theaters.

I have repeatedly pointed out some of the sources of waste in picture theaters and indicated the means for their eradication. And these means are almost childishly simple. Some day the industry will wake up and such stupid methods will be discarded. The sooner this happens the better for every one concerned.

The operating room alone is responsible for a tremendous amount of waste. Recently the general manager of one of our largest producers wrote me complaining that the film waste due to carelessness in handling is something terrific, and constitutes a very heavy burden on his company. Operators abused the films, he said. Nothing uncommon to have a new reel of film worth $125 entirely ruined by the very first theater it went to, said he. "Films scratched, sprocket holes ripped, and tremendous damage compelling the replacement of prints after comparatively short life were the rule." And he is quite right. But the loss of $100,000 a day by reason of crass stupidity in the manhandling of film excites hardly a criticism from the exhibitor. And the sum named is conservative. Yet that sum represents pretty close to six dollars a day per theater. In my opinion, however, the actual waste through mistreatment of film alone will run much higher than this, as high as ten dollars a day per theater. I am very certain that the entirely preventable waste in film and the loss of electric energy and through unnecessary deterioration in machinery due to inefficiency in the operating room will average fully ten dollars a day per theater. And mind you I speak only of waste which is preventable. In other words, I made the point blank statement that box offices bear a burden of ten dollars per day each, every cent of which could be saved by the application of just a little care and ordinary intelligence.

I do not say that every operating room is equally guilty, but taking one theater with another that will be the average.

And so you go on paying the bills, throwing dollars right and left, complaining of high operating expenses, paring down a few cents here and there, resisting every legitimate increase in operating room expense to the last ditch, but treating film worth $125 per reel, for which you must pay, since there is no one else to pay but you and your fellow exhibitors, as though it were made of cast iron. If a reel of film worth $125 is manhandled by a theater in Kansas City, Missouri, do you, Mr. Newark, New Jersey, Exhibitor imagine for one holy minute you wont have to help pay for that loss? And if you, Mr. Memphis, Tennessee, Exhibitor do three dollars worth of damage to a reel by reason of excessive machine tension, worn sprockets, too tight takeup tension or other faults, do you think that every other exhibitor in the country wont have to help pay that three dollars? Well if you can't see as plain a proposition as that you ought to use sapolio on your think works and then limber up its rusty joints with some good oil.

Some day it may be the moving picture industry will learn to reason from cause to effect—will learn that simple, fundamental lesson that the man who makes a thousand dollars a week is not getting rich very fast if he wastes nine hundred and fifty of it.

Question of Voltage and Engine Power.

From a small town in California comes a letter which I quote in part:

> * * * I do not wish to expose my ignorance by having my name and address published, hence wont you please withhold them? Or I will gladly pay any bill you may present for private answer by mail. (No need for that. The thing will fit into the department very well indeed.—Ed.) We have a 10 h.p. oil engine (Kerosene or gasoline I suppose.—Ed.), said to develop 15 h.p. (overload capacity.—Ed.). This engine operates a 7½ K. W., 60 ampere d.c. generator; also a heating fan and water pump. There are two lines from the switchboard, one for the house lights and one (a No. 5, I think) for the operating room. This latter is about 200 feet long. By means of the field rheostat switchboard adjustment voltage may be regulated from 0 to 125 volts. We have never used more than five 25 watt incandescents while using the projection arc, nor have we been able to run the heating fan or the pump while using the arc, though there is no need for using the latter at that time. If we try to pull these pieces of apparatus the engine labors and pounds. Have been using 40 amperes at the arc at 110 volts, or at least that is what the switchboard instrument reads. Rheostat is one made by Precision Machine Company, 25 to 50 ampere, set at middle notch. Get a splendid, clear screen, no flicker, and perfectly steady light. Have been using National cored, 7/8 above and 5/16 Silver Tip below, set as they recommend, i. e., lower carbon verticle, with upper angled out to meet it. What I want to know is am I using the best possible combination of voltage and amperage under the conditions? Or could I lower my voltage and increase amperage, with view to get as good or better light, and at the same time take some of the load off the engine? As it is we find it necessary to heat up our auditorium abnormally, and then cut off the heating fan when the picture starts. Auditorium is 45x75. Throw about 70 feet.

Evidently you have a 60 ampere 125 volt generator, since 60x125 equal 7,500 watts, or 7.5 K. W. When using 40 amperes at 110 volts at the arc and five 25 watt lamps you are only using 4,400 plus 125 equals 4,525 watts, or just about 4.5 K. W., hence your generator is not working nearly to capacity. There are 746 watts in one horse power, hence you are using 4,525 divided by 746 equals just a trifle over 6 h.p. It therefore follows that your fault lies in the engine, which ought, I should think, to pull your entire load without a bit of trouble; anyhow it certainly should pull a 40 ampere, 110 volt arc and the heating fan, unless the fan motor is of greater size than 6 h.p. A forty ampere arc (110 volt) and a 6 h.p. fan motor would make a total of only 10.5 h.p. I am inclined to think your engine must be carbonized—that is to say, has deposit of carbon in its combustion chambers and cylinders. This causes pre-ignition and makes an engine labor and knock. Poor fuel oil, poor lubricating oil or too much of it causes rapid carbonization. I would suggest you take the matter up with the manufacturers of your engine at once, describing the symptoms very carefully and in detail. Were you to lower the voltage you would be able to get the same amperage at the arc with less expenditure of engine power, provided there was not a corresponding lessening of generator efficiency, but you would not get normal power from your fan and water pump motors; also your 110 volt incandescents would not burn to candle power. The trouble lies in your engine, if your statement of amperage and voltage is correct. Write the engine manufacturer at once.

Book Wanted.

Harry T. Branson, Lima, Ohio, wants a good book on theater lighting. Also wants to know whether or not the new Mazda lamp for projection is or is not something he can recommend to theater managers of his territory. He says: "But I do not like to try to shove something off on them of which I know nothing except what I have read in their own advertisements."

I wish we had more dealers of that brand. Friend Branson evidently desires to give the patrons of his firm honest service, and is not satisfied merely to make money, no matter if it be by selling the customer something totally unsuited to his needs. I would refer Mr. Branson to past issues of this department and to future issues for full information concerning the Mazda and what it will and will not do. Broadly and briefly, in general the Mazda will equal in general screen results anything up to a 25 ampere d. c. or 50 ampere a. c. arc. The illumination will not be so brilliant, but will be absolutely steady and uniform. I do not, under any circumstances, advise the use of a Mazda without a thoroughly reliable and automatic voltage regulator. The real field for the Mazda at present lies most largely in the small town where a. c. only is available and competent projectionists usually cannot be had. As to a book on theater lighting, why I do not know of any devoted to that subject. Modern Theater Construction, by Kinsila, to be had from the Moving Picture World, price $3.00, has a rather brief chapter on lighting of theaters. Electrical Photometry and Illumination, by Bohle, Charles Griffin & Company, Ltd., Exter street, Strand, London, England, devotes considerable space to theater lighting. It is the best work I know, but rather too technical for the layman to use successfully. Don't know where you could get a copy in this country. Who knows of a book such as Branson wants? There is a lot of intensely practical dope on auditorium lighting in my own handbook, which may be had from the Moving Picture World, price $4.00. It will be found under "Auditorium Lighting."

Five Thousand Feet Continuous.

Department of the Interior, Bureau of Mines, Fairbanks, Alaska, by George M. Landerking, asks:

> Please advise me as to possibility of running one continuous reel of 5,000 feet of film—that is to say, five ordinary reels spliced together—in lieu of using two projection machines, as is now necessary in order to have a continuous show without breaks to change reels. Has this matter been given attention by inventors? If so, what devices are now on the market?

The thing is merely a matter of large enough reels and magazines. There is no problem involved which would call for invention. We have had three thousand reels and magazines, but they were not popular, and were discontinued. The American Standard put out such a magazine and reel at one time, and advertised it to some extent. There may be some three thousand footers in use now, though I think not. Such a reel is unwieldy, and if there is a fire the loss is very great. Two machines are necessary in every well ordered theater anyhow, because with only one a breakdown would put the show out of commission. Many large theaters use 2,000-foot reels, and most modern projector magazines will accommodate reels of sufficient size to hold that footage.

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be answered in this column $1.00.

The Proper Place to Change.

NEVER before have pictures received the careful and close analysis now given them by musical leaders before attempting to fit to music. The selection of cues upon which to change the music becomes the corner stone of the structure and it requires a keen perception of values, a fair knowledge of drama, and an unusual amount of screen sense to lay this firm foundation.

Many places to change can be seen at a glance. A subtitle sometimes indicates by its wording that the scene is to be new, or fade-outs usually mark the end of the present scene. On the other hand a fade-out may bring in a flash-back to the scene. If it be short there is no necessity for changing the color or tempo of the music but if it runs for some length it becomes a serious question to be solved.

Flash backs are not fundamentally scenes in themselves but only the recollection of scenes. If they appear in with a similar tempo and atmosphere the music being played to the existing scene can well be continued. An example of a particularly knotty problem in flash-back setting came before the writer recently.

A girl who has been dragged down into the depths by a profligate youth, tells the story of her downfall to her former lover, who finds her sick and hungry in a squalid tenement. She tells about the meeting of this bad boy at a football game (flash of football game, shouting multitudes, etc.,) then how they elope, (flash of automobile and hasty retreat.) She tells how they live together and his promise that he will marry her (flash of home life together) and continues the recital of her wrongs; each episode shown by a flashback.

The dominant emotion of the scene proper was utter grief and desolation. The flashes were varied in their emotions, and extremely short in some cases, while in others protracted. To play sad music throughout the entire scene was out of the question and would ridicule the situations shown in the flashes. To fit each flash and return to the scene proper was impossible. There was only one thing to do. Arrange a sad slow number for the strings alone and as the flashes appeared fit them by using the strings or woodwind (or both) in a number that would suit the situation and sound through the dominant theme yet not predominate. This meant special orchestration to fit the keys and harmonies. The larger picture palaces have on their staff an arranger of more than ordinary ability for just such peculiar problems, which shows the upward trend of picture music.

Another little problem that was incorrectly played by one of our best orchestras, came to surface in a patriotic picture. The mobilization of troops was screened under the subtitles England, Canada, Australia, Scotland, etc., followed by a review of the French troops, then came the marching of Zouaves, and later the Blue Devils. Upon the heels of these appeared a night scene showing marching Belgians.

Analyzing this problem we find three of the Allies represented viz., England, France and Belgium. At first glance three marches are needed, to wit., "Britons Never Will Be Slaves," "March Lorraine," and the Belgian Hymn. The orchestra in question used the "at-first-glance" method and played the suggested numbers.

A further analysis brings more light. Canada has its national song, "The Maple Leaf Forever," which works up nicely as a march. "The Campbells Are Coming" would fit the Scotch laddies, while Australia requires representation by its "Song of Australia," a patriotic air known everywhere. It would be necessary, because of the shortness of the scenes, to use a medley of eight to sixteen bars of each, but this could readily be arranged and would add a big punch to the picture.

So much for the English side. Now coming to the French soldiers, we heard March Lorraine played up to the entrance of the Belgians. It is a well known fact that March Lorraine is only played for French soldiers while on review. Never is it played for marching infantry as they leave for war. On the other hand "Le Chant du Depart" is always sung by soldiers leaving for the front. "Sombre et Meuse" is another well known march admirably suited to this very situation.

A little later in the same picture a situation arises that may confuse the average leader but which was handled accurately by the orchestra mentioned above. American soldiers are shown marching down Fifth avenue, New York, a little later after a subtitle "In London" they are shown marching in England, and again, after the subtitle "In Paris" they are marching in France. Because of the change of atmosphere one would be tempted to change the music but this would be distinctly poor policy. The soldiers are American, they are the same soldiers, and whether in England or France they still retain their nationality and characteristic fire and dash. "The Stars and Stripes Forever" by Sousa was the march used throughout and fitted the conditions perfectly.

We firmly believe that no picture can be fitted at one viewing without missing many important details or sacrificing some important changes in the music. Picture fitting is no longer a question of slapping together a lot of music but has become an exact science. The day has arrived when producers fear music because of its power to ruin their feature if not properly arranged. Music is the fulcrum from which can be raised a feature to great heights by the lever of good musical sense.

"The Lost Chord,"

First Symphony for Motion Pictures.

Announcing Arthur Sullivan's famous song, "The Lost Chord," as the subject of his first Cinema-Symphony, Hopp Hadley speaks of his work as "a new-idea-illustrated-symphony made possible by the art of the motion picture." The feature is in five reels and he claims that, even without the Symphony, it is a powerful drama with a beautiful heart interest story destined to be popular as a regulation photodrama with an ordinary "cue sheet" accompaniment.

The idea of symphonic pictures is a good one and is not only appealing in its novelty but carries with it true merit. "The Lost Chord" is especially adaptable to the idea, as symphony in its true musical sense is not exactly "corned beef and cabbage" to the tired business man, while its application in the beautiful story written around Arthur Sullivan's popular song is so simple that a child can readily grasp the idea and is affected almost as much by the music as by the story.

Simply told, Mr. Hadley has taken a song dear to the hearts of the people and written a photoplay based upon its libretto. The music of the song will provide an accompaniment and at the same time tell the story by its melody, change of rhythm and interpretation. This is another evidence that picture music is forcing itself into real recognition as a potent factor in picture selling.

Mr. Hadley says, "It is only a question of time when music will receive full recognition as the real business partner of pictures. Early in the history of the screen entertainment, music and pictures were found to be even more closely allied in the successful interpretation of the elements that play upon the emotions, than are music and the spoken drama. But the tendency is still to consider music merely the same support to the picture as to the stage play. However, the possibilities offered by the silent drama—because it is silent—for the supreme enjoyment of beautiful music are fast gaining recognition, and I believe that the time is near, if indeed it has not now arrived, when soul-inspiring music and tense heart interest drama will be so combined that music will bear its full share in the telling of the story.

We are strongly in favor of this advance in picture production and we feel sure that every exhibitor will welcome this new form of entertainment because of its educational value, its heart interest and artistic musical angle. The putting together of and arranging for a symphony based on a song is a colossal work and requires artists of big caliber if the ultimate result is to reach a standard worthy of the idea itself.

Practically speaking, this is an example of a picture run to music, and if the music be mediocre in its symphonic qualities it will perforce kill the picture. Mr. Hopp Hadley's wide experience as a musician as well as a producer is sufficient guarantee that the music will be of the highest order, and we anticipate with pleasure the advent of this new era in pictures.

Music at the Strand.

During the week, beginning April 28, the Strand devoted its entire gross receipts to the buying of Liberty Bonds and placed on its boards a thoroughly patriotic show from the overture to the closing organ solo.

The overture, "Pomp and Circumstance," conducted by Oscar Spirescu, stirred the blood of every patriotic patron and received well-merited applause. This number was written by Sir Edward Elgar as a coronation march for King Edward VII and was published in the form of a song entitled "Land of Hope and Glory." It instantly met the popular tastes of the people, and its success was phenomenal. Many musicians have criticized its light vein, claiming that it falls far below his "Dream of Gerontius" and other similar big works, but its irresistible melody has won the hearts of the people the world over.

The music selected for the animated cartoon, The Sinking of the Lusitania, showed fine judgment and careful thought, attentions which are not usually given to this class of picture. The music made the picture. A heart interest was created by the use of the hymn "Nearer, My God, to Thee" as the Lusitania sank below the waves.

Only one vocal number graced the program, owing to the extreme length of the feature which followed it. The Strand Soldiers Quartette sang a medley of patriotic airs, not expertly from the standpoint of voice technique but fervently. The lighting effects were wonderful. A back drop showed a cluster of tents with lights twinkling here and there, while on the left flowed a silver river glistening in the moonlight. The boys wore the regulation army uniforms and sat about their camp fire as they sang. As the last few bars were heard, there was flashed on the blue of the sky, the head of Washington, then Lincoln, and lastly, amid thunderous applause, President Wilson. The number was most effective as an introduction to the big feature, "My Four Years in Germany."

The musical setting given to the feature was one of the best we have heard. Its dynamic force and careful continuity showed much forethought in preparation. Mr. Edouarde can be congratulated for his excellent selection of numbers, which were most appropriate. A rather unusual feature was the sequence of keys noted in changing from one number to the other. The organ further enhanced this feature by preparing for the orchestral number to follow. Especially was it effective in the paraphrasing of the Marseillaise during the scene showing the portrait of Napoleon. The work of the Strand Symphony Orchestra grows continually better and sets a standard of musical interpretation that is hard to live up to.

French Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers.

Mr. Oscar Osso has been appointed by the French Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers as its sole agent for North and South America. The function of this organization is practically identical with that of the American Society, in that they control a large catalogue of French copyrighted music which heretofore has been played free of license fee but in the future will be taxable.

The recent legal decisions favorable to the American Society has opened the way for the French Society to lawfully collect a royalty on all music played from its catalogue.

We are not fully informed regarding the modus operandi to be followed, but the French Society can well profit by the mistakes made by the American Society. The exhibitor is a reasonable fellow and is perfectly willing to pay his share of anything that furthers his business of showing pictures, but he will fight unfair imposts or officious impostors with all the strength at his command.

In Europe it is customary to charge a license fee to the theater, and usage has created a condition acceptable to theater managers. But this is America. Our business principles are different. Our long freedom from music taxation makes it imperative that the new license be laid on the shoulders of the exhibitor with care and gentleness, not thrust upon them arbitrarily. If the French Society will tax the musician through the publisher, the exhibitor will gladly add to the salary of his orchestra, and thus indirectly pay the fee to hear music otherwise withheld from him. Let it also be understood that whatever playing royalty be charged, and in whatever manner collected, it will remain a fixed amount and not subject to change at every whim or convenience of the society.

Leaders' Bureau.

Questions Answered and Suggestions Offered.

Q. How can I manage to give a smooth and connected performance by using cue sheets? Would you suggest the pianist improvising when the key sequences permitted until the change can be blended or modulated?

A. In order to gain smoothness of sequence it is always wise to finish at the end of a strain, gradually diminuending as the cue appears. Begin the following number pp, crescendoing up to the normal volume. It is always unwise to use a piano interlude as a modulation between the numbers as it breaks the continuity of the color scheme.

Q. What is the average pay for leaders (Union) in New York picture theaters, and what do the "side pieces" get?
